> Emphatically no legislative action or restraint of combinations, whether by Congress or State legislature, is desirable. Our public men (with, I need say, some honorable exceptions) are wholly unfit to deal with any such matters. The attempt will be highly demoralizing to all concerned, the practical results (except in the levy of blackmail) altogether nugatory.

And in discussing the tendency toward combination, he said:

> Whatever we may think, we can not prevent it, except at the price of liberty and civilization.

As the Attorney-General did not favor any legislation in regulation or restraint of trusts at all, and as he considered that any such legislation would be without practical results, except in the levy of blackmail, it was no doubt his opinion that no one was competent to legislate upon the subject except those who favored the trusts; and as he believed trusts could not be prevented except at the price of liberty and civilization, of course he did not believe in trying to prevent them, and therefore could not believe in the enforcement of the antitrust law. And yet this is the man the President has put at the head of the Department of Justice, which is charged with the duty of enforcing this law. Has Mr. Bonaparte changed his views upon this question? He has never said so, and you would never suspect he had from the record he has made in the office. The statement which he has furnished to the country fully sustains his patriotic sentiments, for it shows he has done practically nothing which, according to his own peculiar notions, would have been done "at the cost of liberty and civilization."

Mr. Chairman, the history of the Republican party upon the trust question has been a most remarkable one. Until within the last few years Republican leaders have persistently denied the existence of trusts, and contended that if any did exist they were largely private affairs with which the public had nothing to do. When forced to admit that many trusts had grown up in the country they then contended that the trust was a necessary evolution of our civilization and was beneficial to the people. When further publicity disclosed some of the evils of the trusts they began to contend that while there were some bad trusts there were many good ones, and that it was better to endure the evils of the bad ones than to deprive ourselves of the blessings of the good ones. But when they can no longer deceive the people, when they can not further resist the overwhelming tide of public sentiment which comes up from an outraged people, the Republican party suddenly becomes a reform party and asks that we continue to intrust it with the duty of giving the people relief.

It pretends a warfare upon its own offspring which it has in every way nurtured and protected. But at the same time it shows its want of good faith by advocating a modification of the Sherman antitrust law in order to destroy its efficacy. The people are demanding an enforcement of the law as it is now written. You can no longer evade this demand, so you are now asking that the power to determine when a trust is good or bad be conferred upon a subordinate officer in the Department of Commerce and Labor—a power which the President himself has been freely exercising up to this time without authority of law. You are just simply trying to provide an easier way of granting immunity.

Because organized labor is now prostrate, bound hand and foot by the Sherman antitrust law, as recently construed by the Supreme Court, you no doubt think this an opportune time to enter upon a move to emasculate that law. But you are mistaken. The people very well understand your proposition, which is to exempt organized labor from the terms of that law provided organized capital is given an opening to evade it. But it appears from the press reports that for some reason you failed to drive the bargain with the leaders of organized labor. I am here to tell you that there is another class of people who will never agree to your programme, to wit, the millions in this country who do not belong either to organized capital or to organized labor, but who are the constant victims of the trust system.

I think the labor leaders are right. They ought not to consent to impair the law as it applies to combinations of capital, as a penalty for securing the rights of labor. Let the cause of labor stand for its rights upon its own merits, and let labor lock shields with those who stand for justice against special privilege, and the ultimate outcome will be a glorious victory. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. Chairman, such is the record of the Republican party upon the question of private monopoly. Why has that party stood so determinedly for organized wealth against the welfare of the people? In answering this question we come to the most disconcerting feature of the situation. The Republican party is in league with this aristocracy of wealth which infamously plunders the people. This affiliation began many years ago when the party in return for political and financial support entered upon a policy of legislation and administration favorable to the nurture and growth of private monopoly, and this affiliation has been kept up and carried out as faithfully and effectually as the usual contracts of trade and commerce. The Republican party supports the trusts and the trusts support the Republican party. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Do you deny it? I only have reference to the campaigns of 1896 and 1900, and I refer to the last campaign. Has the partnership been dissolved? If so, that fact has not been formally announced to the country, and your present conduct gives no evidence of it. But, Mr. Chairman, I do not despair. The unholy conspiracy against the people of this country has been found out, the people are awakening, and with confidence I look forward to the early coming of reform. Some of the Republican leaders have already seen the handwriting on the wall. [Renewed applause.] Mr. Roosevelt was the first to see it, and he began immediately to hunt cover. Elected as a stand-patter, he suddenly becomes an advocate of reform, although he does not always practice what he preaches. Many others have attached themselves to his coat tails, with the hope of being saved from the wrath to come.

And, Mr. Chairman, another great Republican leader has at last seen the gathering of the storm. He who presides with so much grace and dignity over this august body could no longer defy the thunderbolts hurled from the press of this country in denunciation of the iniquitous paper trust [renewed applause], so he leaves his high position and comes down upon the floor of the House to become a reformer himself. [Renewed applause.] I want to congratulate him upon his beginning, but at the same time I want to modestly suggest to him that something more is needed than to appease the wrath of the newspapers and hush their complaints. The great mass of people in this country who are constantly paying tribute to the lumber trust, to the beef trust, to the oil trust, to the steel trust, to the sugar trust, and to the hundreds of other trusts that you have encouraged and are now protecting may be unable to make themselves heard as the newspapers are, but if I mistake not, they have begun to understand the wrongs which they are compelled to suffer, and, mark my words, they will find some way to make you hear their complaints also.

They are already driving you step by step. You do not want to revise the tariff, but you are yielding, not willingly and honestly, however, but merely to meet the exigencies of the political situation. An honest revision before the election would offend the trusts and a dishonest revision would disappoint the people, so you defer action and promise to revise the tariff after the election, hoping in this way to get the support of both. If the tariff needs revision, if as charged its schedules are such as to shelter the trusts which are robbing the people of this country, it ought to be revised now. It ought to have been revised long ago, and if you are sincere about it and wanted to serve the people in good faith, you would not defer revision till after the election.

Mr. Chairman, I believe the people are tired of this game of hide and seek. There is every evidence that they have made up their minds not to be further trifled with, to no longer tolerate a corrupt alliance between their Government and the money power. And in the coming campaign, it is needless for me to say, the Democratic party will again champion their cause. It will take the position not only that the tariff should be revised, but that it should be revised by the friends of the people instead of by the friends of the trusts.

It is again going before the country with the declaration that the railroads shall be controlled and regulated and compelled to do justice to the people. It will again declare that private monopoly is intolerable and indefensible, and that those who enter into conspiracies and combinations in restraint of trade for the purpose of plundering the people shall not escape prosecution, and that they shall not only be enjoined and fined, but put in stripes and sent to the penitentiary.

Mr. Chairman, it is going to be a great moral contest, in which an appeal will be made to the hearts and consciences of the people of this great nation. Fortunately God has raised up among us a man superbly equipped and in every way worthy to lead in such a cause. And in spite of the jeers and opposition of the servient tools of predatory wealth, whether they call themselves Democrats or Republicans, we are going to nominate Mr. Bryan and elect him. In moral grandeur, in purity of character, in intellect, in profound statesmanship, in steadfast and unswerving fidelity to the cause of the common people, and in devotion to the principles of free government history does not record his equal. The shafts which are hurled against him daily from the strongholds wherein are ensconced the conspirators against the welfare of the people fall harmless at his feet. These malefactors have had their day. This plain, honest American citizen, in whose superb character is illustrated the true ideals and aspirations of the American people, has by the simple statement of truth enlightened their intellect and quickened their consciences, and they are now moving, and under the guidance and overruling providence of God they will again soon come into their own. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

APPENDIX A.

STATEMENT PREPARED BY ATTORNEY-GENERAL BONAPARTE ON DECEMBER 2, 1907, SHOWING ALL SUITS AND PROSECUTIONS INSTITUTED BY THE UNITED STATES UNDER THE SHERMAN ANTITRUST LAW OF JULY 2, 1890.

President Harrison's Administration, March 4, 1889, to March 4, 1893.

[William H. Miller, Attorney-General, March 5, 1889, to March 6, 1893.]

1. United States v. Jellico Mountain Coal Company (43 Fed. Rep., 898; 46 Fed. Rep., 432)—(Circuit court, middle district, Tennessee; decided October 13, 1890; June 4, 1891).—Bill filed September 25, 1890, against the members of the "Nashville Coal Exchange," composed of various coal mining companies operating mines in Kentucky and Tennessee, and of persons and firms dealing in coal in Nashville, formed for the purpose of fixing prices and regulating the output of coal.

A preliminary injunction was denied, but upon full hearing the court held the combination to be in violation of the antitrust law and enjoined the further carrying out of the agreement.

2. United States v. Greenhut et al. (50 Fed. Rep., 469)—(District court, Massachusetts; decided May 16, 1892).—Indictment returned about May 1, 1892, against the officers of the Distilling and Cattle Feeding Company (whisky trust), an Illinois corporation. The indictment alleged that the defendants had purchased or leased seventy-eight competing distilleries in the United States, producing 75 per cent of all the distilled spirits manufactured and sold, with the intent to monopolize the manufacture and sale of such spirits in Massachusetts and among the several States, increase the price, and prevent competition. The indictment was quashed, because it failed to allege that defendants monopolized or conspired to monopolize trade and commerce among the several States or with foreign nations, the allegations being held insufficient to constitute an offense under the statute.

3. United States v. Nelson (52 Fed. Rep., 646—(District court, Minnesota; decided October 10, 1892).—Indictment returned in 1902 against a number of lumber dealers for conspiring together to raise the price of lumber in violation of the antitrust law. Demurrer to indictment sustained, the court holding that an agreement between a number of dealers and manufacturers to raise prices, unless they practically controlled the entire commodity, could not operate as a restraint of trade within the meaning of the act.

4. United States v. Trans-Mississippi Freight Association (53 Fed. Rep., 440; 58 Fed. Rep., 58; U. S., 290)—(Circuit court, Kansas; decided November 28, 1892. Circuit court of appeals, eighth circuit; decided October 2, 1893. United States Supreme Court; argued December 8, 9, 1896, by Attorney-General Harmon; decided March 22, 1897).—Bill filed January 6, 1892, to enjoin the operations of a combination of railroads engaged in interstate commerce, alleged to have been formed for the purpose of maintaining "just and reasonable rates" and preventing unjust discriminations. The bill was dismissed by the circuit court, whose decree was affirmed by the circuit court of appeals. The Supreme Court reversed the case, holding that the antitrust act applied to railroad carriers and embraced all contracts in restraint of trade and commerce among the several States and with foreign nations, and was not confined to those in which the restraint was unreasonable.

5. United States v. Workingmen's Amalgamated Council of New Orleans et al. (54 Fed. Rep., 994; 57 Fed. Rep., 85)—(Circuit court, eastern district Louisiana; decided March 25, 1893. Circuit court of appeals, fifth circuit; decided June 13, 1893.)—Bill filed November 10, 1892, to restrain defendants, a combination of workingmen, from interfering with interstate and foreign commerce, in violation of the antitrust law. The injunction was granted, and the law held to apply to combinations of laborers as well as capitalists. The circuit court of appeals affirmed this decree.

6. United States v. Patterson et al. (55 Fed. Rep., 605; 59 Fed. Rep., 280)—(Circuit court, Massachusetts; decided February 28 and June 7, 1893).—Cash register case. Indictment returned about January, 1893, against the members of a combination formed for the purpose of controlling the price of cash registers. A demurrer was sustained as to certain counts of the indictment and overruled as to others, and leave granted to file special demurrers to the counts which were sustained. The special demurrers were overruled and leave granted the defendants to answer. Letter of Attorney-General dated October 16, 1893, shows that the case was allowed to lapse because of the consolidation of the complaining witness with defendants, said witness being in possession of the evidence relied on.

7. United States v. E. C. Knight Company (sugar trust) (60 Fed. Rep., 306; 60 Fed. Rep., 934; 156 U. S., 1)—(Circuit court, eastern district, Pennsylvania; decided January 30, 1894. Circuit court of appeals, third circuit; decided March 26, 1894. United States Supreme Court; argued by Solicitor-General Lawrence Maxwell, jr., October 24, 1894, Mr. Attorney-General Olney on brief; decided January 21, 1895).—Bill filed May 2, 1892, to enjoin the acquisition by the American Sugar Refining Company, a New Jersey corporation, of the stock of the E. C. Knight Company, the Franklin Sugar Company, the Spreckels Sugar Refining Company, and the Delaware Sugar House, Pennsylvania corporations. The circuit court dismissed the bill, and the decree of dismissal was affirmed by the circuit court of appeals and the Supreme Court, the latter court holding that the antitrust act did not apply to combinations of manufacturers.

President Cleveland's second Administration, March 4, 1893, to March 4, 1897.

[Richard Olney, Attorney-General, March 6, 1893, to June 7, 1895; Judson Harmon, Attorney-General, June 8, 1895, to March 5, 1897.]

1. United States v. Elliott (62 Fed. Rep., 801; 64 Fed. Rep., 27)—(Circuit court, eastern district, Missouri; decided July 6 and October 24, 1894).—Suit instituted about July 1, 1894, to restrain Elliott, Debs, and others, members of the American Railway Union, from carrying out their unlawful conspiracy to interfere with interstate commerce and to obstruct the carrying of the mails, in violation of the antitrust law. Preliminary injunction granted and a demurred to the bill overruled.

2. United States v. Agler (62 Fed. Rep., 824)—(Circuit court, Indiana; decided July 12, 1894).—Information filed July, 1894, charging contempt of court in disobeying an injunction restraining Agler and others from interfering with interstate commerce and obstructing the mails. This was one of the Debs cases. It was alleged that Agler was a member of the American Railway Union, the members of which were on a strike, and had been enjoined under the antitrust law from interfering with the carrying of the mails and from obstructing interstate commerce. Information quashed for lack of certainty in describing defendant and his actions.

3. United States v. Debs et al. (64 Fed. Rep., 724)—(Circuit court, northern district, Illinois; decided December 14, 1894).—Information filed July 17, 1894. Proceedings in contempt to punish Debs and others for disobeying an injunction restraining them from interfering with interstate commerce and with obstructing the mails, by means of a conspiracy, in violation of the antitrust law. Defendants found guilty and punished.

4. In re Debs, petitioner (158 U. S., 564)—(United States Supreme Court; decided May 27, 1895).—Proceedings instituted July 2, 1894. Application for a writ of habeas corpus to secure discharge from imprisonment for disobeying an injunction of the circuit court for the northern district of Illinois, restraining Debs and others from conspiring to interfere with interstate commerce, in violation of the antitrust law.

Petition for the writ denied.

5. United States v. Cassidy (67 Fed. Rep., 698)—(District court, northern district, California; charge to jury delivered April 1 and 2, 1895).—Cassidy and others were indicted under section 5440, United States Revised Statutes, for conspiring to commit offenses against the United States, which acts consisted in combining and conspiring to restrain trade and commerce between the States in violation of the antitrust law, the prosecutions growing out of the Pullman car strike, which occurred June–July, 1894. The trial lasted five months, resulting in a disagreement of the jury.

6. Moore v. United States (85 Fed. Rep., 465)—(Circuit court of appeals, eighth circuit; decided February 14, 1898).—Indictment of the members of an association of dealers in coal at Salt Lake City for entering into a conspiracy to regulate the price of coal. Indictment returned November 4, 1895. Moore was tried and convicted in the district court of Utah upon this indictment. The circuit court of appeals reversed the judgment of conviction for the reason that upon the admission of Utah as a State it was no longer a "Territory" within the meaning of the antitrust act, and the combination was not in restraint of interstate commerce.

7. United States v. Joint Traffic Association (76 Fed. Rep., 895; 89 Fed. Rep., 1020; 171 U. S., 505)—(Circuit court, southern district of New York; decided May 28, 1896. Circuit court of appeals, second circuit; decided March 19, 1897. United States Supreme Court; argued by Solicitor-General John W. Richards, February 24, 25, 1898; decided October 28, 1898).—Suit instituted January 8, 1896. Bill in equity to enjoin the alleged violation of the antitrust law by a combination of railroads. Thirty-one railroad companies engaged in transportation between Chicago and the Atlantic coast formed themselves into an association known as the Joint Traffic Association, to control competitive traffic, fix rates, etc. The circuit court dismissed the bill and the court of appeals affirmed the action of the circuit court. These judgments were reversed by the United States Supreme Court upon the authority of United States v. Trans-Missouri Freight Association (166 U. S., 290), and the case remanded for further proceedings in conformity with its opinion, by which the combination was adjudged illegal.

8. United States v. Hopkins et al. (82 Fed. Rep., 529; 88 Fed. Rep., 1018; 171 U. S., 578)—(Circuit court, Kansas; September 20, 1897. Circuit court of appeals, eighth circuit; December 27, 1897. United States Supreme Court; October 24, 1898).—Suit instituted December 31, 1896. Bill to restrain the operations of the "Kansas City Live Stock Exchange." The injunction was granted, but on appeal the Supreme Court reversed the decree of the circuit court and remanded the case, with instructions to dismiss the bill, the business of the exchange being held not to constitute interstate commerce, nor covered by the antitrust act.

9. United States v. Addyston Pipe and Steel Company (78 Fed. Rep., 712; 85 Fed. Rep., 271; 175 U. S., 211)—(Circuit court, eastern district, Tennessee; decided February 5, 1897. Circuit court of appeals, sixth circuit; decided February 8, 1898. United States Supreme Court; argued by Solicitor-General Richards, April 26, 27, 1899; decided December 4, 1899).—Suit instituted December 10, 1896. Bill in equity to enjoin the operations of the cast-iron pipe trust, which attempted to enhance the price of cast-iron pipe by controlling and parceling out the manufacture and sale thereof throughout the several States and Territories to the several corporations forming the combination. The bill was dismissed by the circuit court. The circuit court of appeals reversed the decree of the circuit court and remanded the case, with instructions to enter a decree for the Government. On appeal to the Supreme Court the action of the circuit court of appeals was affirmed, the court distinguishing the case from that of United States v. E. C. Knight Company (156 U. S., 1).

President McKinley's Administration, March 4, 1897, to September 14, 1901.

[Joseph McKenna, Attorney-General, March 5, 1897, to June 25, 1898; John W. Griggs, Attorney-General, June 25, 1898, to March 29, 1901; Philander C. Knox, Attorney-General, April 5, 1901, to June 30, 1904.]

1. Anderson v. United States (82 Fed. Rep., 998; 171 U. S., 604)—(United States Supreme Court; decided October 24, 1898).—Suit instituted June 7, 1897, in the circuit court of the United States for the western district of Missouri, to restrain the operations of The Traders' Live Stock Exchange, of Kansas City, an association formed for the purpose of buying cattle on the market. A temporary injunction was granted and the case appealed to the circuit court of appeals for the eighth circuit. From there it was certified to the Supreme Court of the United States for instructions upon certain questions. The Supreme Court reversed the decree of the circuit court and remanded the case with directions to dismiss the bill, holding that the rules of the association were not in violation of the antitrust law.

2. United States v. Coal Dealers' Association (85 Fed. Rep., 242)—(Circuit court, northern district, California; decided January 28, 1898).—Suit brought December 16, 1897. Bill for injunction to restrain the operations of a combination of coal dealers known as the "Coal Dealers' Association of California."

A temporary injunction was granted.

3. United States v. Chesapeake and Ohio Fuel Company et al. (105 Fed. Rep., 93; 115 Fed. Rep., 610)—(Circuit court, southern district, Ohio; decided August 31, 1900. Circuit court of appeals, sixth circuit; decided April 8, 1902).—Bill filed May 8, 1899, to annul a contract and dissolve a combination of producers and shippers of coal in Ohio and West Virginia, engaged in mining coal and making coke intended for "western shipment," under agreement to sell the same at not less than a memorandum price, to be fixed by an executive committee appointed by the producers. Defendants enjoined, contract declared void and illegal, and the combination dissolved.

Affirmed by circuit court of appeals. No appeal to Supreme Court taken.

President Roosevelt's Administration, September 14, 1901, to ——.

[Philander C. Knox, Attorney-General, April 5, 1901, to June 30, 1904; William H. Moody, Attorney-General, July 1, 1904, to December 16, 1906; Charles J. Bonaparte, Attorney-General, December 17, 1906.]

CIVIL CASES.

1. United States v. Northern Securities Company, Great Northern Railway Company, Northern Pacific Railway Company et al. (120 Fed. Rep., 721; 193 U. S., 197)—(Circuit court, Minnesota; decided April 9, 1903. United States Supreme Court; decided March 14, 1904).—This suit was brought on March 10, 1902, in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Minnesota, to enjoin the defendant, the Northern Securities Company, from purchasing, acquiring, receiving, holding, voting, or in any manner acting as the owner of any of the shares of the capital stock of the two defendant railway companies and to restrain the defendant railway companies from permitting the Securities Company to vote any of the stock of said railways, or from exercising any control whatsoever over the corporate acts of either of said railway companies, it being charged that the Securities Company was formed for the purpose of acquiring a majority of the capital stock of the two railway companies in order that it might in that way effect practically a consolidation of the two companies by controlling rates and restricting and destroying competition, in violation of the Sherman antitrust law.

The circuit court entered a decree in favor of the Government, as prayed in the petition, and this decree was affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States.

2. United States v. Swift & Co. et al. (122 Fed. Rep., 529; 196 U. S., 375).—Suit brought May 10, 1902, in the circuit court of the United States for the northern district of Illinois to restrain the defendants (commonly known as the "Beef Trust") from carrying out an unlawful conspiracy entered into between themselves and with various railway companies to suppress competition and to obtain a monopoly in the purchase of live stock and selling dressed meats. A preliminary restraining order was granted on May 20, 1902.

The defendants having demurred to the bill, the court, after hearing, on April 18, 1903, overruled the demurrers and granted a preliminary injunction. The defendants having failed to answer, the court, on May 26, 1903, entered an order making the decree final and perpetually enjoining the further operations of the trust.

The defendants, on August 14, 1903, appealed from the final decree of the circuit court to the Supreme Court of the United States.

Decree affirmed by the Supreme Court, January 30, 1905.

3. United States v. The Federal Salt Company et al.—Suit brought October 15, 1902, in the circuit court of the United States for the northern district of California, to restrain the defendants (known as the "Salt Trust") from unlawfully combining and conspiring to suppress competition in the manufacture and sale of salt in the States west of the Rocky Mountains, in violation of the Sherman antitrust law. A temporary restraining order was issued on that date, and, the cause coming on for hearing, the court on November 10, 1902, granted an injunction pendente lite, thus, in effect, making the restraining order perpetual.

No appeal taken.

4. United States v. Jacksonville Wholesale Grocers' Association.—A suit in equity, instituted on September 12, 1903, in the United States circuit court for the southern district of Florida, for the purpose of dissolving a combination of wholesale grocers operating in violation of the antitrust law. The members of the association have filed answers, and the cause has been continued from time to time and will be heard at the next term of court.

5. United States v. General Paper Company et al.—December 27, 1904, a bill in equity was filed in the circuit court of the United States for the district of Minnesota against the General Paper Company and twenty-three other corporations engaged in the manufacture and sale of paper, alleging that said defendants had entered into a combination and conspiracy to control, regulate, monopolize, and restrain trade and commerce in the manufacture of news print, manila, fiber, and other papers and products of paper in violation of the Sherman antitrust law, by making the General Paper Company their common sales agent.

After issue was joined, the defendants and their officers declined to obey orders of the circuit court for the district of Minnesota and the circuit court for the eastern district of Wisconsin, in which district testimony was also being taken, requiring them to answer certain questions and to produce certain books and papers, and appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States. On March 12, 1906, the court dismissed the appeals in the Wisconsin cases and affirmed the judgment in the Minnesota cases. (Nelson v. United States, 201 U. S., 92; Alexander v. United States, id., 117.)

On May 11, 1906, judgment was ordered in favor of the Government by the circuit court for the district of Minnesota, dissolving the combination and affording the Government all the relief prayed for in its bill.

6. United States v. Metropolitan Meat Company et al.—Bill in equity filed in October, 1905, in the United States circuit court for the district of Hawaii, to restrain the alleged unlawful operations of certain combinations in the matter of the restraint of trade in beef and beef products. Demurrer to bill overruled October 2, 1906. Pending.

7. United States v. Allen and Robinson et al.—Bill in equity filed in October, 1905, in the United States circuit court for the district of Hawaii, to restrain the operation of an alleged unlawful combination to control the trade in lumber in that Territory. Answers of three defendants filed January 2, 1906. March 4, 1907, cases on trial—continued, on application of defendants, until September. Pending.

8. United States v. Nome Retail Grocers' Association.—November 4, 1905, the Department directed the United States attorney for the second division of Alaska to file a bill in equity against the Nome Retail Grocers' Association, alleging a combination to fix prices and to suppress competition in violation of the Sherman antitrust law.

Suit was promptly instituted, whereupon the defendants agreed to the entry of a decree which would subserve all the interests of the Government and the general public set forth in the bill. A decree dissolving the combination was entered accordingly.

9. United States v. The Terminal Railroad Association of St. Louis et al.—Petition filed in the circuit court of the United States for the eastern district of Missouri on December 1, 1905, to enjoin the defendants (The Terminal Association, the bridge companies, and the railroad and ferries crossing the Mississippi River at St. Louis) from carrying out an unlawful combination entered into between them to operate the Eads Bridge and the Merchants' Bridge as a common agency of interstate commerce, and to suppress competition between said bridges and between the bridges and ferries, and to monopolize interstate transportation at this point. This case is pending.

10. United States v. Otis Elevator Company et al.—Bill in equity filed March 7, 1906, in the United States circuit court for the northern district of California against the Otis Elevator Company and a number of other corporations and individuals, in which it was alleged that they were maintaining a combination in restraint of trade in the matter of the manufacture and sale of elevators. June 1, 1906, a decree was entered by consent dissolving the combination and granting the relief prayed.

11. United States v. National Association of Retail Druggists et al.—Bill in equity filed May 9, 1906, in the United States circuit court for the district of Indiana against the National Association of Retail Druggists and others, alleging a combination in restraint of interstate trade and commerce in the matter of the sale of drugs and proprietary medicines to consumers through retail druggists. May 9, 1907, final decree entered by agreement giving the Government all the relief prayed for in the petition.

12. United States v. Standard Oil Company et al.—November 15, 1906, bill in equity filed in the United States circuit court for the eastern district of Missouri against the Standard Oil Company and others, in which it is alleged that they are maintaining a combination in restraint of trade in the manufacture and sale of petroleum. Motions were filed by the defendants to vacate an order of the court directing service of subpœnas upon nonresident defendants. These motions were argued on January 30, 1907, and on March 7, 1907, the court rendered an opinion in favor of the Government. Exceptions filed by defendants to Government's petition. May 24, 1907, hearing at St. Paul, Minn., on bill of exceptions, which resulted in a decision in favor of the Government. Testimony now being taken.

13. United States v. American Seating Company et al.—March 12, 1907, bill in equity filed in the United States circuit court for the northern district of Illinois against the American Seating Company and others, in which it is alleged that they are maintaining a combination in restraint of trade in the manufacture and sale of school and church furniture. August 15, 1907, decree entered granting perpetual injunction against all defendants, except E. H. Stafford Manufacturing Company, E. H. Stafford, E. M. Stafford, and E. G. Bentley.

14. United States v. The Reading Company et al.—June 12, 1907, bill in equity filed in the circuit court for the eastern district of Pennsylvania to dissolve a combination among the anthracite coal-carrying roads and others, which are operating in violation of the Sherman antitrust law. Case pending.

15. United States v. American Tobacco Company et al.—July 10, 1907, bill in equity filed in the circuit court of the United States for the southern district of New York against the American Tobacco Company and others, in which it is alleged that they are maintaining a combination in restraint of trade in the manufacture and sale of tobacco. Pending.

16. United States v. E. I. Du Pont De Nemours & Co. et al.—July 30, 1907, bill in equity filed in the circuit court for the district of Delaware against E. I. Du Pont De Nemours & Co. and others, in which it is alleged that they are maintaining a combination in restraint of trade in the manufacture and sale of gunpowder and other high explosives. Pending.

17. United States v. One Hundred and Seventy-five Cases of Cigarettes.—October 28, 1907, information filed in the district court for the eastern district of Virginia covering the seizure of 175 cases of cigarettes under section 6 of the Sherman antitrust act. Case pending.

CRIMINAL CASES.

1. United States v. The Federal Salt Company.—On February 28, 1903, the grand jury for the United States district court for the northern district of California returned an indictment against The Federal Salt Company for having violated the antitrust law.

On May 12, 1903, the company pleaded guilty and the court sentenced it to pay a fine of $1,000, which was paid.

2. United States v. Armour & Co. et al.—After the affirmance by the Supreme Court of the decree of the circuit court in United States v. Swift & Co. (above referred to) complaints from various quarters were made to the Department that the combination still continued. The Department thereupon undertook by every means at its command to investigate the truth of these complaints. Exhaustive inquiry was made before the grand jury for the northern district of Illinois, which resulted in the return of an indictment on July 1, 1905, against Armour & Co., and J. Ogden Armour, president; Patrick A. Valentine, treasurer; Arthur Neekler, general manager; Thomas J. Connors, superintendent; and Samuel A. McRoberts, assistant treasurer, of Armour & Co.; the Armour Packing Company, and Charles W. Armour, president; Swift & Co., and Louis F. Swift, president; Lawrence A. Carton, treasurer; D. Edwin Hartwell, secretary; and Albert H. Veeder and Robert C. McManus and Arthur F. Evans, agents of Swift & Co.; the Fairbank Canning Company, and Edward Morris, vice-president; Ira N. Morris, secretary of the Fairbank Canning Company; the Cudahy Packing Company, and Edward A. Cudahy, vice-president and general manager of the Cudahy Packing Company.

Again this indictment many preliminary objections were urged. All were disposed of in favor of the Government, except certain special pleas of immunity in bar, based upon information concerning the matters for which they were indicted, which they had given to the Department of Commerce and Labor. The court sustained the pleas so far as the individual defendants were concerned and overruled them with respect to the corporations.

3. The tobacco trust cases (Hale v. Henkel, 201 U. S. 43; McAlister v. Henkel, id., 90) —These cases grew out of an investigation by a Federal grand jury in the southern district of New York of the American Tobacco Company and the MacAndrews & Forbes Company, believed to be violating the antitrust laws, the matter having been brought to the attention of the grand jury by the officers of the Department of Justice, special counsel having been appointed for the purpose of investigation and prosecution. Subpœnas duces tecum were served upon the officers of the companies directing them to produce papers and other documentary evidence belonging to the corporations. They refused to obey the subpœna or to answer questions propounded to them. The circuit court adjudged them in contempt and committed them until they should produce the books and answer the questions. They applied to another judge of the same court for writs of habeas corpus, which upon hearing were discharged. Upon appeal the Supreme Court affirmed the orders denying the writs.

June —, 1906, the grand jury returned an indictment against the MacAndrews & Forbes Company, the J. S. Young Company, a corporation of Maine, and Karl Jungbluth and Howard E. Young, their respective presidents, for illegally combining and conspiring to regulate the interstate trade and sale in licorice paste, an article used in the manufacture of plug and smoking tobacco, snuff, and cigars. Defendants entered pleas of not guilty, with leave to withdraw or demur on or before July 9, 1906. July 9, 1906, demurrers filed by all of the defendants. December 4, 1906, demurrers overruled. December 19, 1906, trial commenced. January 10, 1907, MacAndrews & Forbes Company found guilty on first and third counts of indictment, the J. S. Young Company found guilty on first and third counts; verdict of acquittal as to individual defendants. MacAndrews & Forbes Company fined $10,000. J. S. Young Company fined $8,000. Stay of sixty days to perfect appeal.

4. United States v. F. A. Amsden Lumber Company et al.—Indictment returned in the district court of Oklahoma, May 4, 1906, for violation of the Sherman Act in restricting competition and maintaining prices in the sale of lumber. May 13, 1907, change of venue granted to Grant County. September 25, 1907, pleas of guilty and fines imposed aggregating $2,000, which were paid.

5. United States v. Virginia-Carolina Chemical Company et al.—May 25, 1906, the Federal grand jury for the middle district of Tennessee, upon information furnished by the Department of Justice, returned an indictment against thirty-one corporations and twenty-five individuals engaged in the fertilizer business in the States of North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Arkansas, and Tennessee, charging them with engaging in a conspiracy in violation of the Federal antitrust act, and with conspiring to commit an offense against the United States, viz, the aforesaid conspiracy, in violation of section 5440 of the Revised Statutes. The fertilizer manufacturers combined to fix the price of fertilizers in the territory mentioned and to apportion the trade among themselves according to an agreed percentage. July 11, 1906, all the defendants appealed to the Supreme Court of the United States from an order of the circuit court of the eastern district of Virginia denying the right of habeas corpus and remanding them to the custody of the marshal for removal to the middle district of Tennessee for trial. The case before the Supreme Court was argued on December 3, 1906, and on March 4, 1907, the judgment of the circuit court for the eastern district of Virginia was reversed and the case remanded to that court for further proceedings in accordance with the opinion of the Supreme Court.

6. United States v. American Ice Company et al.—July 12, 1906, indictment returned in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, charging an unlawful agreement to control prices and restrict competition in the sale of ice. Case pending.

7. United States v. Chandler Ice and Cold Storage Plant et al.—September 19, 1906, indictment returned in the district court for the Territory of Oklahoma against the Chandler Ice and Cold Storage Plant and others, charging a combination to apportion territory in the matter of the sale of ice. May 5, 1907, demurrer filed by defendant Groves and overruled. May 20, 1907, demurrer filed by Chandler Ice and Cold Storage Plant. Pending.

8. United States v. Alfred M. Gloyd et al.—September 21, 1906, indictment returned against Alfred M. Gloyd and others in the district court for the Territory of Oklahoma, charging a combination to maintain prices and restrict competition in the sale of lumber. The case is pending.

9. United States v. People's Ice and Fuel Company, a corporation, and W. B. Lount.—October 23, 1906, indictment returned in the district court for the Territory of Arizona, charging a combination to control prices and restrict competition in the sale of ice. January 5, 1907, trial commenced. Verdict not guilty as to People's Ice and Fuel Company and company held to next grand jury. Trial of W. B. Lount continued over term.

10. United States v. Demund Lumber Company et al.—October 23, 1906, indictment returned in the district court for the Territory of Arizona, charging a combination to control prices and restrict competition in the sale of lumber. January 2, 1907, trial commenced. Verdict of not guilty as to Demund Lumber Company. January 7, 1907, cases against Chamberlain Lumber Company and Valley Lumber Company continued over term.

11. United States v. Phoenix Wholesale Meat and Produce Company, a corporation, P. T. Hurley, and S. J. Tribolet.—October 23, 1906, indictment returned in the district court for the Territory of Arizona, charging a combination to control prices and restrict competition in the sale of meats. January 7, 1907, trial commenced. Verdict of not guilty as to Phoenix Wholesale Meat and Produce Company. January 8, 1907, indictment against Hurley dismissed. Verdict of guilty as to defendant S. J. Tribolet. January 12, 1907, Tribolet sentenced to pay fine of $1,000.

12. United States v. T. B. Hogg et al.—December 8, 1906, indictment returned in the district court for the Territory of Oklahoma, charging a combination and conspiracy in restraint of trade and commerce in the sale of lumber. March 25, 1907, plea of not guilty. Change of judge granted on application of defendants. Case pending.

13. United States v. Atlantic Investment Company et al.—February 11, 1907, indictment returned in the United States district court for the southern district of Georgia against the Atlantic Investment Company and others, charging a combination in restraint of trade and commerce in the matter of the manufacture and sale of turpentine. February 18, 1907, four corporations and two individuals, defendants to this indictment, entered pleas of guilty, and the court imposed a fine of $5,000 upon each of the six defendants, making a total of $30,000.

14. United States v. American Seating Company et al.—March 12, 1907, indictment returned in the district court of the northern district of Illinois charging a violation of the Sherman antitrust law by engaging in a combination in restraint of trade in the manufacture and sale of school and church furniture. April 1, 1907, defendant corporations entered pleas of guilty, with one exception. May 20, 1907, fines imposed aggregating $43,000. Defendant E. H. Stafford Manufacturing Company filed demurrer April 3, 1907. May 31, 1907, demurrer overruled and plea of not guilty entered.

15. United States v. Santa Rita Mining Company and Santa Rita Store Company.—April 4, 1907, indictment returned in the district of New Mexico charging a violation of section 3 of the Sherman antitrust law for engaging in a combination in restraint of trade. Demurrer filed and overruled. Fine of $1,000 imposed.

16. United States v. National Umbrella Frame Company et al.—July 1, 1907, indictment returned in the district court for the eastern district of Pennsylvania charging a conspiracy to restrain interstate trade and commerce in the manufacture and sale of umbrella material, in violation of the Sherman antitrust law and section 5440 R. S. Case pending.

17. United States v. E. H. Stafford Manufacturing Company et al.—July 10, 1907, indictment returned in the district court for the northern district of Illinois charging a violation of the Sherman antitrust law by engaging in a combination in restraint of trade in the manufacture and sale of school and church furniture. Case pending.

18. United States v. H. D. Corbett Stationery Company et al.—November 1, 1907, indictment returned in the district court for the district of Arizona charging a combination in restraint of trade. November 4, 1907, demurrer filed. November 14, 1907, demurrers sustained and defendants referred to next grand jury.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee and the gentleman from Illinois each have the same length of time remaining to their credit.

Mr. PADGETT. There must be some mistake about that. I had forty-seven minutes remaining when I yielded thirty, which leaves me seventeen minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee must remember that the time is not absolutely all taken during the course of the day.

Mr. PADGETT. I was only basing my remark on the statement of the Speaker's clerk, who informed me I had forty-seven minutes before yielding thirty minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. According to the calculation of the clerk, the same amount of time has been consumed on both sides.

Mr. PADGETT. How much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has one-half of the time between now and 5 o'clock.

Mr. PADGETT. Then I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. O'CONNELL].

Mr. O'CONNELL. Mr. Chairman, yesterday the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. LAMAR], in a beautifully worded prose poem, told of his happy people in Missouri, and described with picturesque glow the beauty of the sunset in the Ozark Hills. We were delighted to listen to his charming description, as we were all willing to rejoice at the happiness of his people.

Now, I come from a great metropolitan district, which takes pride in the possession of hills—Dorchester Heights, memorable for the expulsion of the British troops by George Washington on St. Patrick's Day, 1777. Meeting-House Hill in Dorchester and its surrounding hills, on the slopes of which was erected the first free public school in this country that was supported by taxation of the people. That school was the forerunner of the great public school system of this country that has been its strength and bulwark. The Granite Hills of Quincy, on whose sides were born two Presidents of this Republic, and at the base of which sleeps the mortal remains of those two great men—Adams, and his son, John Quincy Adams. The magnificent Blue Hills of Milton, the highest on the Atlantic seaboard, to-day used as part of the great park system of the city of Boston, and upon whose heights the setting sun rests—

Not * * * obscurely bright,
But one unclouded blaze of living light.

[Applause.]

But we do not bother ourselves much with the sunset on those hills. We are a wakeful, watchful, alert people, and we are more concerned with the rising of the sun. For this reason we have probably the happiest Congressional district in this great country. Take us, big or little, and you will find less poverty and more general comfort than any other Congressional district can show. We are rich in history and tradition, and take great pride in the part we have played in the history making of this country. [Applause.]

As the sun emerges from the waters of Massachusetts Bay and sends its beams over the glistening waves, we are mindful that those same waters may to-morrow or at another time bring forth our ancient enemy of three great wars. We receive the hope and cheer of each day, but we recall the great past, and we are thoughtful as to the future. So it is, Mr. Chairman, that my people have sent me various petitions and resolutions protesting against any treaty of arbitration with Great Britain, and urge the building of an adequate navy for the national defense. It is with pleasure, therefore, that I rise to urge the building of four battle ships or more during the coming year. [Applause.] I believe, with a due regard for the past and for the dangers of the future, we should hasten the upbuilding of that arm of the defense, the Navy, which is so important to our well-being. We have built a great navy in the past, and it is agreed that that navy was built for the protection of the Atlantic seaboard. If it was not built for that purpose, then there can not be a reason given for is existence; and if it was built for that purpose and has now left these shores, then the same reasons that brought that fleet into existence should quickly build another fleet to take the place of this absent one. [Applause.] No one knows when our fleet will return; no one can tell how many of those ships will be greeted again in the Atlantic Ocean. No man knows what the future may have in store for us. I believe the policy of this Government should be to keep apace with all its possible enemies.

We have two possible enemies to-day, two likely opponents—Great Britain and Japan. My colleague from Alabama, Captain HOBSON, has told us to-day of the dangers and imminence of war with Japan. Let me call your attention to the danger on the Atlantic seaboard.

I have received various petitions from my district, one of which was from the John Boyle O'Reily Club, of West Quincy, which I will read:

We, citizens of Quincy, Mass., in meeting assembled, taking account of the announcement made in the British House of Commons recently by Sir Edward Grey, the secretary for foreign affairs, and confirmed by news dispatches from Washington, that a treaty of arbitration is now being negotiated between the United States and Great Britain, protest against the ratification of such treaty, and call upon the Senate to reject it for the following reasons, which we respectfully commend to the earnest consideration of the Senators:

I. Such treaties are notoriously sought by England, not for the maintenance or promotion of the world's peace, but for the purpose of leaving herself free to carry on her policy of aggression and spoliation against weaker peoples and maintaining her robber grip on and continuing to oppress countries to which her rule has been a curse and a blight.

II. These treaties are intended by England to limit or destroy the freedom of action of the powers with which they are concluded, while she herself pursues untrammeled her policy of aggression elsewhere; or they are the first steps to a closer alliance for the purpose of waging war, as is clearly demonstrated by her present entente with France, which is aimed directly against Germany, and has encouraged and stimulated France in the savage and predatory war she is now carrying on in Morocco, which is a disgrace to civilization and humanity.

III. England's professions of peaceful intent are belied by her colossal naval preparations for war and her alliance with Japan, which involves not the mere possibility, but the certainty of war with the United States, as is conclusively proved by the speech delivered in the Dominion House of Commons on January 28 last by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the Canadian premier, in which he said:

"It is to the credit of Lord Lansdowne that, of all the diplomatists of Europe, he was the first to recognize the possibilities of this change in the condition of Japan. Such was the importance that he attached, and rightly attached, to this changed condition that he, all of a sudden, broke loose from all the traditions of British policy. Hitherto it had been the rule and tradition of British diplomacy that Britain would not become entangled in any foreign alliance, that she would stand alone in her insular position, and be ready in all circumstances to take advantage of her opportunities without being shackled by weighty alliances. But Lord Lansdowne attached so much importance to the new condition Japan had attained that in 1902 he did what had not yet been done for us by any British statesman, and concluded a treaty, defensive and offensive, between Britain and Japan.

"What is the condition, therefore, which has existed since 1902? It is that, under the treaty negotiated by Lord Lansdowne, it is possible, if unfortunately the interests of Great Britain were to be jeopardized in the northern Pacific Ocean, we might see, should unfortunately war break out, the fleet of Japan and the fleet of England riding the waves together for a common purpose and against a common enemy. It is possible that, under the treaty, we may see the fleet of Japan weighing anchor in the harbor of Vancouver for the protection of those British interests to which Canada attaches such vital importance."

The importance and significance of this declaration of the Canadian premier can not be ignored. For these reasons we urge most earnestly on the Senate the rejection of the proposed arbitration treaty with England, and we commend to the American people the adoption of a continental policy based on a good understanding with all American Republics, sustained by an army and a navy adequate to the national defense and free from all entangling alliances with European powers.

Resolved, That copies of this protest be sent to the President of the United States, to the Secretary of State, to the chairman of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, and to the Senators and Representatives from this State and district.

JOHN BOYLE O'REILLY CLUB,
West Quincy, Mass.

I received several others—from the Irish-American Club, Wolfetone Club, Grattan Club, Hugh O'Neil Club, and numerous other civic bodies against the ratification of a treaty of arbitration with Great Britain. Is there justification in their fears? I rather think so. An inspection of history, a due regard for the lessons which it has taught, and the presentation of the evidence of the present hour can lead to no other conclusion than that the danger which threatens us is imminent and great.

Sir Wilfred Laurier (prime minister) in a speech delivered before the Dominion House of Commons on January 28, said that in 1902 "Lord Lansdowne had concluded a treaty of alliance, defensive and offensive, between Great Britain and Japan. Under the conditions of this treaty it is possible, if war broke out where the interests of Great Britain would be jeopardized in the north Pacific Ocean, that we would see the fleet of Japan and the fleet of England riding the waves together against a common enemy."

The exact language used by this great leader of the Conservative party is as follows:

But Lord Lansdowne attached so much importance to the new condition Japan had attained that in 1902 he did what had not yet been done for us by any British statesman, and concluded a treaty of alliance, defensive and offensive, between Britain and Japan. What is the condition, therefore, which has existed since 1902? It is that, under the treaty negotiated by Lord Lansdowne, it is possible, if unfortunately the interests of Great Britain were to be jeopardized in the northern Pacific Ocean, we might see, should unfortunately war break out, the fleet of Japan and the fleet of England riding the waves together for a common purpose and against a common enemy. It is possible that, under that treaty, we may see the fleet of Japan weighing anchor in the harbor of Vancouver for the protection of those British interests to which Canada attaches such vital importance.

Shall it be said in this Parliament, are honorable gentlemen on the other side of the House to vote to-day that we shall admit Japanese into this country only when they come with a man-of-war in company with the British fleet in order to protect our shores, and that there shall be an enactment of Parliament to prevent them coming in times of peace?

A verbatim report of this speech, delivered in the Canadian Parliament, is found in the "House of Commons Debates," fourth session, Tenth Parliament, January 28, 1908, from column 2090 to 2101.

This is significant language, and of itself should be sufficient to put this nation on its guard. [Applause.]

The history of the great past tells us that we drove the British from these shores in the days of the Revolution because of their tyranny and oppression. Britain went unwillingly and because she had to. She came back in 1810 and 1812 and ravaged our shores and drove our shipping from the seas. That I may not be considered as in any way coloring the situation as it then was, let me read from the life of John Quincy Adams a brief description of the situation. Speaking of the conditions which then existed, Morse, in "American Statesmen," says:

All this while the impressment of American seamen by British ships of war was being vigorously prosecuted. This is one of those outrages so long ago laid away among the mouldering tombs in the historical graveyard that few persons now appreciate its enormity or the extent to which it was carried. Those who will be at the pains to ascertain the truth in the matter will feel that the bloodiest, most costly, and most disastrous war would have been better than tame endurance of treatment so brutal and unjustifiable that it finds no parallel, even in the long and dark list of wrongs which Great Britain has been want to inflict upon all the weaker of the uncivilized peoples with whom she has been brought or has gratuitously forced herself into unwelcome contact.

The more illegal the act committed by any British officer the more sure he was of reward, till it seemed that the impressment of American citizens was an even surer road to promotion than valor in an engagement with the enemy. Such were the substantial wrongs inflicted by Great Britain. Nor were any pains taken to cloak their character. On the contrary, they were done with more than British insolence and offensiveness, and were accompanied with insults which alone constituted sufficient provocation for war.

To show that the customary conduct of Great Britain did not change in subsequent years, in the estimate of John Quincy Adams, let me read his opinion given of England in 1843, when the matter of the attitude of Great Britain toward slavery in Texas was being considered:

(Referring to the attitude of Lord Aberdeen, who pretended that he was astonished at Adams's distrust of the British Government on the subject of slavery and particularly on the surrender of fugitive slaves.)

"This article is a patent example of diplomatic swindling. There is hope that its purpose may be defeated by the alarm of the English abolitionists and their remonstrance against it before the enactment of it by Parliament as English law. A grosser fraud was never practiced upon nations than was intended by that article. The apologies for it by Lord Ashburton and by the British ministers are lame and prevaricated, and all my suspicions of the duplicity of British ministers on the subject of Texas and slavery are but too strongly confirmed. The policy of the British Government is to cherish, sustain, and protect the institution of slavery in our Southern States and Texas, and their task is to do it by humbugging the abolitionists in England in the belief that they intend directly the reverse." (Memoirs of John Quincy Adams.)

I have the honor to represent the same Congressional District that was represented by John Quincy Adams, and I believe that in all fairness I can urge upon this House to regard the present policy of the British Government in seeking a treaty of arbitration with this country as a scheme entered into for the purpose of blinding the American people to the real purpose of Great Britain while she pursues her policy of aggression and spoliation which in time she will endeavor to extend toward this country. [Applause.]

Let us skip hurriedly down to the days of the civil war, twenty years later, and we find at the breaking out of hostilities there was a treaty existing between Great Britain and the United States, which compelled Great Britain by its terms to remain friendly. Yet the most disgraceful violation of the terms of that treaty is discovered in the record of Great Britain.

I do not care to designate this in language of my own. My feeling on the matter can best be conveyed in the language of the Senator from Massachusetts, Charles Sumner, who was then chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations. I read from his description his idea of the so-called "British friendship."

Stating the case against England, Sumner showed how the civil war began, how England in hot haste recognized the Confederate States as belligerents, and how the Alabama was built and put to sea:

> The case is not yet complete. The Alabama, whose building was in defiance of law, international and municipal, whose escape was "a scandal and reproach," and whose enlistment of her crew was a fit sequel to the rest, after being supplied with an armament and with a rebel commander, entered upon a career of piracy. Mark now a new stage of complicity. Constantly the pirate ship was within reach of British cruisers, and from time to time within the shelter of British ports. For six days unmolested she enjoyed the pleasant hospitality of Kingston, in Jamaica, obtaining freely the coal and supplies so necessary to her vocation. But no British cruiser, no British magistrate, ever arrested the offending ship, whose voyage was a continuing "scandal and reproach" to the British Government. The Alabama case begins with the fatal concession by which the rebels were enabled to build ships in England and then to sail them without being liable as pirates. It next shows itself in the building of the ship, in the armament, and in the escape with so much of negligence on the part of the British Government as to constitute sufferance, if not connivance; and then again the case reappears in the welcome and hospitality afforded by British cruisers and by the magistrates of British ports to the pirate ship when her evasion from British jurisdiction was well known. Thus at three different stages the British Government is compromised: First, in the concession of ocean belligerency, upon which all depended; secondly, in the negligence which allowed the evasion of the ship in order to enter upon the hostile expedition for which she was built, manned, armed, and equipped, and, thirdly, in the open complicity which, after this invasion, gave her a welcome hospitality and supplies in British ports. Thus her depredations and burnings—making the ocean blaze—all proceeded from England, which by three different acts lighted a torch. To England must be traced also all the widespread consequences which ensued. One after the other ships were built; one after the other they escaped on their errand; and one after the other they enjoyed the immunities of British ports. Audacity reached its height when ironclad rams were built and the perversity of the British Government became still more conspicuous by its long refusal to arrest these destructive engines of war, destined to be employed against the United States.
> It is plain that the ships were built under the safeguard of this ill-omened proclamation, which stole forth from the British shores, and afterwards enjoyed the immunities of British ports, were not only British in origin, but British in equipment, British in armaments, and British in crews. They were British in every respect, except in their commanders, who were rebels, and one of these, as his ship was sinking, owed his safety to a British yacht, symbolizing the omnipresent support of England. British sympathies were active in their behalf. The cheers of a British passenger ship crossing the path of the Alabama encouraged the work of piracy, and the cheers of the House of Commons encouraged the builder of the Alabama, while he had defended what he had done, and exclaimed, in taunt to him who is now an illustrious member of the British cabinet, John Bright, that he "would rather be handed down to posterity as the builder of a dozen Alabamas than be the author of the speeches of that gentleman 'crying up' the institutions of the United States," which the builder of the Alabama, rising with his theme, denounced as "of no value whatever" and as "reducing the very name of liberty to an utter absurdity," while the cheers of the House of Commons echoed back his words. Thus from beginning to end, from the fatal proclamation to the rejoicing of the accidental ship, and the rejoicing of the House of Commons, was this hostile expedition protected and encouraged by England.
> No candid person who studies this eventful period can doubt that the rebellion was originally encouraged by hope of support from England; that it was strengthened at once by the concession of belligerent rights on the ocean; that it was fed to the end by British supplies; that it was encouraged by every well-stored British ship which was able to defy our blockade; that it was quickened into renewed life with every report from the British pirates, flaming anew with every burning ship; nor can it be doubted that without British intervention the rebellion would have soon succumbed under the well-directed efforts of the National Government. Not weeks or months, but years, were added in this way to our war, so full of the most costly sacrifice. Mr. Cobden boldly said in the House of Commons that England made war from her shores on the United States, "with an amount of damage to the country greater than in many ordinary wars." According to this testimony, the conduct of England was war; but it must not be forgotten that this war was carried on at our sole cost. The United States paid for a war waged by England upon the national unity.

Great Britain, in thus breaking the sacred stipulations and obligations which she was under to a friendly country, effectively drove American commerce off the seas, and it has never gone back. The indignation of this country was such at that time that if we had been in a position to retaliate unquestionably a greater war would have followed the wrongs and treaty violations which were, in effect, declarations of war on the part of Great Britain toward the United States. For her violations of her treaty with this country we made Great Britain pay to us $15,500,000 in the court of arbitration which met in Geneva. [Loud applause.]

Now, what brought about this sudden change of attitude on the part of Great Britain which we find toward us since the war with Spain? Is it that she loves us any more than she did? The feeling that was rampant for many years up to 1880 and subsequently had no reason to suddenly die forever. That feeling had existed for over one hundred years from the time that British tyranny first began to show its head in this country. It is found and explained in the fear which Great Britain has, and that acknowledgment wrung from her that we are a world power to-day. She claims that she helped us win the war with Spain. I am one of those who believe that we would have won that war if England had been allied with Spain. I do not wish to be misunderstood as saying that we could have done it as easily. The task would have been harder, it would have been a more strenuous proposition, but I have an abiding confidence in the ability and capability of our people, and I am sure that we would have thrashed Britain the third time, as we have done it twice before. [Loud applause.]

Now, with these lessons of the past, are we to make a treaty with this perfidious nation; a nation which, when the treaty of Limerick was written, broke it before the ink with which it was penned had dried; a nation that disregarded its sacred obligations in the days of the civil war, not because she loved the South any more than the North, not because she wanted to see the cause of the Confederacy prevail, but because she felt she could deal a blow to the American Republic from which it could never recover? Her friendship for the Southern cause was not the friendship of a nation that believed in the principles of that cause. Rather it was the determination of mercenary ministers taking revenge for the loss of territory once their own, but now the United States of America.

Are there any dangers at present that we may be invaded by a British fleet? There certainly are. Bermuda is less than 700 miles east of Charleston and in the same latitude. Bermuda is less than 700 miles south of Halifax, which is a base of supplies for England on this continent. Within the last two or three years a fire broke out in Bermuda. She telegraphed to Halifax for engines, and these engines arrived the next day and put out the fire. Certainly with such a base as Halifax, with communications that can be established with Bermuda, with the great Atlantic seaboard just as close as Charleston, the chances which a hostile fleet would have against our undefended coast would be beyond all argument.

I believe I correctly represent the desires of my district when I state that I am in favor of four or more battle ships. I know President Roosevelt is correct in his attitude in asking for four, and I am convinced that the nation at large, particularly the 16,000,000 people along the Atlantic seaboard, are strongly in favor of a large increase in our Navy to replace those ships that have left our waters.

It should be borne in mind that the United States on the Atlantic proper has 5,400 miles to defend. If there is added to that the Gulf of Mexico, Cuba, and Porto Rico, there is a total of 17,200 miles. The coast line of Great Britain, France, and Germany totals only 4,700 miles.

On the Atlantic coast there is a population of 16,000,000 people within gunshot of a ship; there is approximately eighteen billions of property within striking distance of the ships' guns; our coast defenses are inferior. We have spent $84,000,000, but there remains $70,000,000 which must be spent before the present scheme is complete. Only five out of the twenty-seven fortified harbors have complete equipment of fire control; only one-third of the searchlight equipment has been completed. We have no merchant marine from which to extend our Navy and to draw transports and colliers. We have no bases on either side of the ocean such as Europe has on this side. Less than 20,000 regular soldiers are available, and these are scattered over the whole country.

At the present, Great Britain has in the Atlantic 45 battle ships and 33 armored cruisers, making a total of 77, while the United States has but two battle ships and three armored cruisers. To-day England has ten Dreadnoughts under way, of over 17,000 tons each, and two more are about to be laid; Japan has four Dreadnoughts under way with seven more about to be laid. The United States has only two under way, and inasmuch as it takes three years to complete one of these monsters of the sea it can readily be seen how completely unprotected the Atlantic seaboard is.

Our seacoast is woefully wanting in proper defense. Our batteries are not manned as they should be, and unless we have battle ships in sufficient number to stand off an invading force from Great Britain, we stand in great danger. She broke her treaties in the past because it was to her advantage; what security have we in the promise of Great Britain that she would not break any treaty that she made to-day? We have been strong and powerful in our isolation; we have been independent of the rest of the world because we have not allied ourselves with any other nation. [Applause.] Let us continue that course; let us say to Great Britain that the ideals which she has are not our ideals. [Loud applause.]

Ambassador Bryce last winter appeared before the Society of Colonial Wars in Boston and urged that there was a community of ideals between the people of the two countries. He would not dare tell this doctrine to a camp of the Grand Army of the Republic. Yesterday he sat in the galleries and possibly to-day he has his representative in the diplomatic gallery. He is vitally interested in the outcome of this appropriation. If you appropriate for only two battle ships Ambassador Bryce will say to his ministry that they won an advantage; you will have helped him to get a treaty through, because they can urge the weakness of our defenses along the Atlantic seaboard as a reason for an alliance.

Let Mr. Bryce say to the people of England that America has adopted the policy of equaling the type of the Dreadnought, which England is now building, and then she will realize that we can not be hoodwinked into any kind of treaty. [Applause.] We have no more occasion for a treaty of arbitration to-day than we ever had, and this House should never yield in its protest against the ratification of such treaty. The greatest and surest form of protest is to build a sufficient number of battle ships that will protect our coast.

I believe that with four battle ships building each year, all the shipyards in this country could be kept busy for the next twenty-five years, and the navy-yards could be kept up to such a high grade of efficiency, either in building a few of these ships or in repairing those already built, that thousands of men could be given employment and millions of dollars' worth of material used to the general benefit of the country at large. [Applause.]

A strong navy is the surest insurance we have against war. Our Navy was gotten together and maintained at an expense of over $200,000,000. To-day it is absent from our shores and no man knows whether that armada will ever come back. There can be no good reason for leaving the Atlantic coast unprotected. It is the most valuable part of this country.

If there was any reason for building a fleet such as we have for the protection of the Atlantic seaboard, then there is equally good reason for replacing that fleet as soon as possible by one just as strong if not stronger. [Prolonged applause.]

During the delivery of the foregoing remarks,

Mr. O'CONNELL said: I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. NEEDHAM. Mr. Chairman, I do not object to that, but I want to couple with it a request that the gentleman from California [Mr. MCKINLAY] may have leave to extend his remarks.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I dislike to intervene in that kind of a situation; but everybody knows what the situation is. I objected to Mr. MCKINLAY's request yesterday, and I adhere to it.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Mr. Chairman, can I have the one minute of my time that has been occupied?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not, unless the gentleman from Tennessee yields the time.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Give me one minute more.

Mr. PADGETT. Take it right quick.

Mr. O'CONNELL resumed and concluded his remarks as above.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY].

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I have here a letter from Capt. Walter S. Thomas, chairman of the Ohio Afro-American League, which I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read in my time.

The Clerk read as follows:

[Officers: Capt. Walter S. Thomas, chairman, Columbus, Ohio; Hon. C. L. Maxwell, vice-chairman, Xenia, Ohio; Rev. E. L. Gilliam, secretary and treasurer, Columbus, Ohio. State central committeemen-at-large: Hon. J. S. Atwood, Ripley, Ohio; Rev. T. W. Woodson, Dayton, Ohio; Rev. E. L. Gilliam, D. D., Columbus, Ohio; Capt. Walter S. Thomas, Columbus, Ohio.]

OHIO AFRO-AMERICAN LEAGUE,
HEADQUARTERS STATE CENTRAL COMMITTEE,
No. 473 South Eleventh street, Columbus, Ohio, March 21, 1908.

Hon. HENRY T. RAINEY,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Permit me, a stranger, to address you this letter in obedience to what I consider my duty to the colored Republicans of the State of Ohio.

I note in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of March 18, as I had already noted in the public press on March 15, that Mr. BANNON, Representative from the Tenth District of Ohio, in a speech delivered before the House on March 14, 1908, took occasion in reply to your speech, made a few days prior thereto, to make the following statement:

"The gentleman from Illinois, in a speech in this House the other day, said the negroes in Ohio would vote the Democratic ticket next November and that Ohio would go Democratic. He failed to give the Ohio negroes credit for any intelligence. The Ohio negro knows what Democratic hard times are just as well as the white people do. They do not want a Democratic administration any more than we do. They are no better prepared for it than we are, and they would suffer from it just as much, if not more, than we would."

I agree with Mr. BANNON in this, that we are no better prepared for a change of administration than are the white people, but I disagree with him when he says to Ohio and the country that the colored voters of Ohio, no matter whom the standard bearer may be, will vote solidly for that standard bearer, even if he be Mr. Taft or President Roosevelt.

Sir, the American negroes have reached that point in their civilized history where they know just as well what is best for them as their friends of the so-called "dominant race" variety. We have had since the close of the war of 1861–5 two Democratic Presidents, and I am frank enough to say to you, as a Republican of the Lincoln, Garfield, McKinley, and Foraker type of Republicans, that the colored people, during the two terms of Mr. Cleveland as President of the United States, lived better in the South, socially, morally, financially, and politically, than they have ever done under any other administration. I mean to say by this, that the colored people were free from petty bickerings, caused by political chicanery on the part of just such men as now surround the President and try to dictate to the colored people of this country as to whom and for what they should vote.

We have reached that point where we believe it to be our duty to emphasize our position as free Americans by refusing to be led like dumb, driven cattle to the voting booths and there cast our ballots for President Roosevelt, his Secretary of War, or any man he may see fit to support for the nomination for the President of the United States at Chicago. We believe that a great injustice was rendered our people by the act of President Roosevelt in his summary discharge, without honor, of the colored soldiers, who were entitled to a fair and impartial trial, as provided under the Constitution and statutes. We are not so much drawn to the support of any man by reason of our resentment along this line as we are for the reason that if the President of the United States can discharge, without honor, humble black soldiers, he can commence at the head of the Army and Navy of the United States and discharge in disgrace the highest officer in either branch of the service.

I want to add, in conclusion, that the colored people of Ohio and all over the United States, wherever they have the free and untrammeled right of suffrage, will support no candidate for President of the United States who does not stand squarely upon the broad principles of justice and equality as exemplified and typified in the lives of Lincoln, Grant, and McKinley, who obeyed the Constitution and dealt justly by all Americans whether black or white.

We have almost reached that point where we can say "Thank God for Senator TILLMAN," for we believe him to be at least honest in his expressions and we believe him square in his life. I am absolutely convinced of this one fact: That should Secretary Taft be nominated at Chicago for President of the United States the colored voters of Ohio, and of the whole United States—95 per cent of them, at the least calculation—would cast their votes for the straight Democratic ticket for President or remain away from the polls, thus making the election of a Democratic President absolutely certain.

With great respect, I am

Very truly, yours, WALTER S. THOMAS.

No. 221 North Sixth street.

[Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, there being no one on this side who desires to speak, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of the time I have and that yielded to me to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen of the Committee, it has been my pleasure to see this Congress appropriate more than $11,000,000 for the benefit of the farming and agricultural pursuits of this land. That was more than was appropriated last year. It was more than was appropriated the year before. It should be more than it is this year. I am proud to know that this Congress has recognized the necessity of this appropriation. I am proud to know they have exceeded former limits and it begins to look like the farmers' cares were our cares and that agriculture might take a new lease on life. [Applause.]

But while we are rendering this aid, I want to say that there is some legislation needed for the farmer that will do him more good every year than the appropriation we have already made, viz, the total annihilation of the "future dealing, bucket-shop gambling, and gambling in American farm products."

The last census report furnishes us with figures that let us know that our United States is populated by more than 80,000,000 industrious people. It is further a conceded fact of common knowledge that practically one-half of them are engaged in the useful and historic art of agriculture.

Forty million people, that produce more every year than they themselves consume, renders them good and useful citizens. It entitles them to careful consideration from this Congress. They not only support themselves, but they contribute largely to the support of the entire nation. They contribute to other nations. They are indispensable.

It is an oft-told and oftener-used adage that "England expects every man to do his duty."

With the same propriety and precision, America expects this Congress to do its duty.

1. I am going to charge and do charge that "dealers in futures," "dealers in margins," "bucket-shop dealers," and gamblers in American farm products are conducting a fictitious, fraudulent, and dangerous business in New York, which has a very depressing effect on the price of farm products and are a great menace to the producer and consumer alike.

2. I charge further that, by false reports and fictitious sales, they are able to control the price of farm products, raising and lowering them almost at will and wholly independent of the true producer.

3. I charge that they neither produce, export, manufacture, nor consume, and that more than 95 per cent of their dealings are fictitious and tend to throttle and curtail the market.

4. I charge that more than 95 per cent of their contracts are wagers as to whether the price of commodities will go up or down, with no intent or apparent ability to perform them in keeping with their terms.

5. I charge they are selling contracts for products that do not exist—are selling approximately ten times more cotton in the New York Stock Exchange alone than is produced in the entire United States each year.

6. I charge they are using the farmers' money—the farmers' products—to an unlawful advantage and to the great detriment of the American producer and consumer.

7. I further contend that these evils should be abolished, and, further, that it is the duty of this Congress to do it.

It will be my purpose to give you a reason for the faith that is within me.

Some of the New York bankers associated with these concerns and other defenders of this nefarious business take the position that this wild-eyed gambling and speculation is a necessary evil in this: First, that people will gamble in any event; second, that it affords a useful market for the products.

In reply to the former, I am going to lay down the broad principle that gambling is never necessary; gambling never brings good results, but universally corrupts morals and brings home a direful effect. I am going to say, further, that this is the worst form of gambling; that it is the most far-reaching gambling, and that it is not confined to the participators or their immediate associates, but is of a far-reaching character, as for example: If "A" plays at dice, at cards, at faro, or any other game of chance, he demoralizes himself and denies his family his association, attention, and support. I am further going to say that he is a criminal in the eyes of the law; his crime is described on the statute books and other categories of crime; his property is subject to confiscation; he is subjected to fine and imprisonment, and the world all agrees that it is right. No one would repeal the statute if they could. No one could if they would. [Applause.]

"A" steps into one of the Wall street dens where agricultural products are gambled upon and trafficked in and buys a margin contract for future cotton at the rate of 10 cents per pound, the same to be delivered some time later, and pays $1 per bale down to hold it. We will say he buys 1,000 bales and pays $1,000 for the option. When he buys it he knows the bucket-shop dealer has no cotton to supply his contract. He knows that there is no such cotton in existence; he knows that the largest crop of cotton that was ever raised in the United States was thirteen and a half million bales; he knows they have sold through the exchange many times that amount, or any other reasonable and probable crop. Further, he well knows that he does not want any cotton for export; further, he does not want any cotton for use; further, never expects to see the cotton or have it delivered to him; would not know what to do with it if it was. Now, what does he buy it for? I believe I can tell you what he buys it for. He buys as a plain wager as to whether the price will go up or down. What does he do to accomplish the raise in price, so that his fictitious contract may become valuable to him? He at once joins in with other bucket-shop operators and they put out false and fraudulent reports as to the true output of cotton; further, put out false reports from the ginners; further, put out false reports from foreign countries, and the farmer is induced to hold his crop, thinking he will get a higher price. Further, that while the farmer is holding his spot cotton the spinners will become anxious to buy their contracts for spots for the ensuing year.

The unsuspecting American producer thinks these false reports are genuine and are a good criterion to follow. Thinks he, "I will hold my crop; will wait for higher and better prices." The spinner thinks it is time for next year's supply; he finds there is little spot cotton on the market. Cotton goes up and is apparently scarce, and continues for a time to go up in price. The bucket-shop dealer, while the price is high, is hurriedly disposing of his cotton future contracts as fast as he can; some to the spinner and some to unsuspecting speculating buyers. Well knowing his selling price is speculative and unhealthy, he can reduce the price by false reports, so that he can buy the future contracts back for about half of amount sold for. The spinners are then supplied with contracts which they expect to be carried out. There is little call for the spot cotton. The false reports have spent their force, and then comes a reaction. Cotton goes down, down, down, until it has reached a price that the producer can hardly afford to raise it and pick it.

What does the bucket-shop dealer do? He lays in wait like a tiger for its prey, and the speculator, with his little or no means with which to pay the balance of his contract price, is forced to sell his equity or interest in his fictitious contract for what he can get. The farmers' taxes, mortgage, and interest come due, and he is forced to sell his cotton product for what he can get. He is not situated so he can hold his crop. What does the bucket-shop dealer do? He buys back from the lamb speculator for 6 cents a pound the future contract he had previously sold to him for 12 cents. He buys the spot or actual cotton from the farmer for 6 cents, and supplies the contracts that have reached the hands of the spinners at 12 cents. Here the farmer has sold for less than it cost to produce the cotton. Here the weak and unsuccessful speculator, or "lamb," as they are called in bucket-shop parlance, has lost his money. The spinner has paid higher prices than he should pay for the cotton; the bucket-shop gambler has made the money, and practically all of it.

Which of these classes have profited? Which have lost? The answer comes that "surely the farmer has not profited," for he has sold his cotton for less than it cost him to raise it, and has no product to sell and no money with which to buy again. The imprudent lamb has lost his money, and has performed a hard day's labor in the field of experience. The bucket-shop dealer has the money in his pocket, and he is safe and sound. The spinner has paid an exorbitant price, but has a chance to get out. How? we ask. How? Why, he can weave the cloth and add his profit on top of the swollen price he was forced to pay; the retailer can add to his profit on the price that he is forced to pay the spinner, and the poor consumer who wears the garment pays tribute to them all.

You may ask, "Why does not the farmer hold his crop?" Many of our American farmers are in debt. They have mortgages on their homes, many of them have mortgages on their teams and wagons, mortgages on their crops. Interest rates are high. They know not the facts and the bickerings and jugglings of the speculator. It is all confusing to their brain. They must sell their products or lose their homes under the mortgages; must sell or lose their teams; must sell or lose their cotton crops, with court costs and attorneys' fees along with it. Interest rates are high. The producer who earns slowly but honestly can not compete with the speculator on interest rates, for one earns honestly, but slowly, while one earns rapidly, but dishonestly. There is no alternative for them. It is, therefore, the duty of this Congress to help maintain an open, uniform, and healthy market.

The farmer is at great disadvantage when the prices are rising and falling almost with the tide. Their uniformity in change is not governed by the sun, the moon, or the revolutions of the earth. The sliding and gliding of prices come not with equal regularity, so honest calculations may be made, but without notice, without warning, and while the farmer is wholly unawares change with the will and wish of the future dealers who operate independent of the law of supply and demand, independent of right and wrong, independent of intrinsic value, and even wholly independent of the very existence of the actual commodity itself.

The producer and consumer alike are chained like Prometheus to this practice of future dealing, fictitious dealing, margin dealing, corner dealing, and bucket-shop dealing that divest them of an honest, healthy, and open market; divest them of the value of their products without advice, consultation, or a sigh.

Oh, but the bucket-shop advocate says this system furnishes them a boundless market. "They need a market as wide and boundless as the ocean," they will blandly remark. It is quite true; they do need a boundless market. But the difference of opinion is whether this fictition and gambling will afford it to them. Instead of affording a boundless market as broad as the ocean, they are afforded a market the width of one street, and that during the recent disclosures of this panic is not a very popular street at that. It but serves to blind their eyes, shackle their feet in a network of unlawful practices behind closed, locked, and bolted doors, the number of members being at all times limited to 450 members.

Is such a proceeding as that conducive to the best interests of our American farmers that we have sworn to protect? Is such bickerings and juggling as that what it takes to afford the producer with an untrammeled, open, boundless, and honest market? Must we confess that such an evil as that is an inevitable condition that we must submit to and refuse to legislate upon? Is that good government for all and special privileges for none? Will that serve as a protection to the 40,000,000 people that are engaged in agriculture? Does that tend to promote and encourage the historic and noble art of agriculture? The answer comes from every farmers' union in all the land; the answer comes from most of the rulers of the leading countries of the world; the answer comes from most of the legislatures of the States where the fleecy staple grows; the answer comes from most of the governments of the world; the answer comes from the President of the United States of to-day in his recent message; the answer comes from the next President of the United States, W. J. Bryan—all answering in unison and accord: "No! No! No!" [Loud and prolonged applause.]

Some Wall street bankers who lend these concerns the reserve deposits that belong to the farmers of the South and West argue and stubbornly contend, in their 45-page brief full of subtle defenses of this nefarious business, that "future dealers" are just as honorable and that their transactions are just as honorable as the man who gives his note for $100 to another. In each case, they blandly argue, is a contract to do something in the future.

Comparison is always fair. Comparison helps us arrive at true situations. Let us compare. In the note case we will say that Mr. A lends Mr. B $100. Mr. B executes a promissory note, which is a signed promise to pay. The note also includes interest. This is a positive and an honorable transaction. There is no fiction here. There is no deception here. Here A has money that he does not need. Here B needs money that A has. B can use to his advantage by investment and necessary use, and can use it to an advantage that he can afford to pay interest on it. B uses the money and keeps it in circulation. A gets his interest and the return of his money. No fraud, no wrong; all a perfectly regular transaction, and one that is countenanced the world around. While in the cotton case the seller has no cotton and does not expect to get any cotton. The buyer knows the seller has no cotton to sell him and would not want it if he did have. He does not pay over the price of the cotton; he merely makes a payment on it of a dollar a bale to hold his contract and wager that amount on the price going up or down as his judgment leads him. Neither has any cotton, neither uses any cotton. Usually dealing in a thing not in existence renders commerce and society no service whatever and an irreparable injury instead.

They contend that it is a practice that we must countenance, as there is no way to separate the wheat from the chaff. Let us see. Let us use another humble example:

A sells B 160 acres of land in Oklahoma for $10 an acre. They draw up a contract similar, if not identical, with the cotton contract, save that one relates to land and the one to cotton. It develops later that A had no 160 acres of land in Oklahoma to sell. What is done? The answer comes quickly from every mouth from all corners of the land. A criminal! Guilty of fraud! Arrest him, indict him, prosecute him, convict him, send him to jail, and the whole world says it is right. It is right in this case, and the same doctrine should be applied to the men or set of men who inhabit these dens on Wall street in the greatest city in the United States and sell by their fraudulent and improvised contracts, approximately, 100,000,000 bales of cotton every year, when the greatest output of cotton ever produced in the United States in an entire year was 13,500,000 bales.

In the latter case the prosecution should be more vigorous than the first, for in addition to the fraud they perpetrate on the unsuspecting lamb dealer it is but infinitesimal to the wreck and ruin it deals to the whole agricultural and consuming world over the lamb speculator's shoulder.

Oh, but the bucket-shop dealer says it is not a parallel case. He says: "Yes, but in the cotton case the seller could go in the cotton belt and get the cotton, when in the land case he could not." To this doctrine I can not subscribe, for when they have contracted, approximately, ten times as much cotton as there is in existence in the United States, it is an utter impossibility to perform or procure, while in the land case the Oklahoma land is in existence, and I submit the chance to procure a thing that is in existence is more susceptible of procurement than that which is not in existence at all.

Certain bankers in New York have come to the rescue of these violators of the law, and have sought to defend them and their nefarious business, and have been sending briefs and circulars to Members of Congress in an attempt at justification. They contend that the bucket shops and gambling exchanges are a necessity to the cotton and grain business. If this be true, it seems to me that the actual cotton that grows in the Sunny Southland in all its purity and grandeur would seek them, or at least they in return would seek the cotton fields. This they have not done in the past, and from the constantly diminishing trade we could easily speculate that they would not do so in the future.

I submit some figures for your examination that I think will quite well show it. The three leading ports of the United States as cotton markets are:

1. Galveston—receipts, 1906-7, 3,891,695 bales; no cotton exchange.

2. Savannah—receipts, 1906-7, 1,668,633; no cotton exchange there.

3. New York—receipts, 1906-7, 23,108 bales; a cotton exchange there.

Now that we have seen how much cotton was actually received this last year, it might be interesting to know how much New York sold in future contracts last year. We are advised from reliable sources that during the last year on the New York Cotton Exchange alone they sold about 100,000,000 bales, this, if you please, being more than 4,000 times the actual amount sold. Stop and compare receipts of 23,108 and sales of a hundred million. Enormous! Startling! Almost inconceivable!

These figures do not stand alone for the last year, for the receipts for the years prior thereto may be easily run down. The New York Cotton Exchange has been on the decline for the past decade of years so far as actual receipts are concerned and on the incline so far as fiction and gambling are concerned. I desire to submit some figures that will quite well show it. These figures apply to New York:

	Bales actually received.

Now, it must be interesting to observe that each year with precision has the real cotton diminished in receipts at the New York Cotton Exchange, while their volume of business on the future side has steadily accumulated. So we can but conclude that as the fictitious business prospers it is at the expense of the real business. These figures can but lead us to further believe that the future business and the actual cotton business do not walk hand in hand, are not a necessity, are not conducive to the best interests of the producer or the consumer, but are a menace instead. They certainly prove that the cotton does not seek this gigantic institution; its location conclusively shows that they are not in operation where the fleecy staple grows. We are constrained to believe that the farther apart the real product of the soil and this institution, known as a "cotton exchange" or "bucket shop," remain, the better for both and all concerned. For as the cotton exchange is permitted to keep itself remote from the real cotton, they are harder to detect and know of their fiction, oppression, and vice; while in the cotton case, the atmosphere and market is apt to be more pure where they have not polluted it with fiction and false reports of false and fraudulent sales. [Applause.]

It is not a benefit to the spinner, for it does not bring the cotton to his door through the bucket shop. The receipts conclusively prove that, as above given.

Nor to permit them to sell commodities that do not exist for prices where the consideration is not paid, nor is it expected to ever be paid. To permit them to report through the mails and over the wires this fiction is but to permit them to blind the eyes of the honest producer and permit them to loot the threadbare pocket of the consumer who wears the garment and uses the product. Surely this Congress will not longer permit it. [Applause.]

The figures, if we can rely on figures and they prove anything, they prove it a myth and a snare. They offer nothing to commend it and everything to condemn it. [Applause.]

Oh, but the friend of the bucket shop says: Why, the price of cotton is higher now than when the bucket shop was in its infancy. This may be true, but of course there is no course of reasoning that can trace the credit of this to the gamblers in farm products. It is because cotton is more universally used. It now takes the place of the silkworm and the sheep. There was a time when it could only be used when woven with hemp, flax, wool, or silk. To-day, under the benign influence of modern science and invention, this useful product stands alone and is king. It has robbed the silkworm of his tedious task. It has robbed the historic shepherd of his usefulness. It is king of every clime. It is used in every home. [Loud applause. Prolonged applause.]

The recent panic, with its many ghastly disclosures, very vividly demonstrates to a marked degree who is even furnishing the money to carry on this business. When the Southern and Western banker called for his account in the local bank last fall, in the good year 1907, he learned that his money had gone East to the reserve banks, as it has been permitted to do under the very defective banking laws of the present. The reply came that he could not draw his account. The reserve banks would not, if you please, pay over the funds that had been intrusted to their institutions by the Western and Southern banks. Where was the money? The answer came faint, but clear. It was loaned to carry on the very business the American farmers are asking to have driven from our borders—the stock gamblers. Whose money was it? We can easily trace it. The local farmers and business men of the West and South had unsuspectingly deposited their money and little accounts with their local banks. The local banks in turn had forwarded to the Eastern banks. The Eastern banks in turn had loaned it to wild-eyed speculators with which to gamble on American products. I respectfully ask, Who furnished the products? The American farmer. I again repeat, Who furnished the money? The American farmer. The American farmer here furnishes all the paraphernalia for this New York gambling, but is not permitted to sit in the game. He is not, if you please, permitted to even make inquiry as to what is to be done with his money or with his product, but must believe the gamblers when they say, "It is inevitable, for men will speculate, men will gamble." Sir, will this Congress permit 40,000,000 American farmers to longer be looted, overridden, and abused? [Applause and voices of "No!"]

Who is here defending this nefarious business? Is it the American farmer? No! No! He is opposed to it. Is it the American consumer? No! No! He is opposed to it. It robs him. Is it the American banker? No; not all of them, but I regret to say, some of them, for I have within my possession a brief and a fierce attack against any attempt to legislate against them. This defense comes from a Wall street banker, seeking to ridicule and disgust Members with the idea of legislation to prevent it. Such a defense, though unsound, is dangerous to those who are not personally and vitally interested in the matter.

In reply to that defense, I would say, to my mind, it does not come in good grace from them. It does not come with a good odor, for it is but a few weeks ago when every bank in my entire State had to close its doors on account of overspeculation on reserve funds in the reserve banks of the city of New York. It is not my purpose to assault all the banks in New York, nor all in the street of Wall, which is getting to be a widely advertised place, and whose popularity does not always keep abreast with its advertisement; but it is my purpose to deal rebuke to any bank or set of banks who hope to share in such a vicious speculating scheme as the bucket shop or seek to defend its nefarious methods.

I have read their defense carefully, and they have nothing even bordering on a true or genuine defense. They offer such defenses as "Men will gamble, and there is no use to try to prevent it." Shame on such a theory! Shame on such an argument! Shame on such a principle! There is no place in the world where such a principle, where such a thought, can find lodgment in an honest breast or a thoughtful brain. It may be practiced by good men, but they wink at vice and forget virtue when they do it, and honest men will own it. [Applause.]

I would very much prefer to have their nefarious defense that is now cloaked in criticism, ridicule, and playing the rôle of a disinterested party bear a well-worded, careful, and painstaking apology to the Southern and Western bankers, to the Southern and Western depositors, and the whole panic-stricken Union, for that matter, that they so ruthlessly help retard, disgrace, overturn, and upset from their vicious and unworthy banking methods employed. I say they have bank failures and suicides to their credit now for their lax and irreconcilable methods. Their conscience must be whalebone! Their hearts must be stone! [Applause.]

In my own little home city in Oklahoma they have one banker suicide to their credit, one bank failure, and thousands of depositors who lost their all. This is but a pitiful example of the thousands that exist. This, I say, is but one of the many!

Where do we find them now? Do we find them in the attitude of the meek and lowly, sorrowful and careworn from their vice? No, indeed; we find them arrogantly presenting briefs to the Sixtieth Congress to kill all classes of legislation that tend to harm a hair in the head of the bucket shops and stock exchanges.

These bankers give their address as 16–18 Wall street, New York. In their 45-page brief they blandly reply that every contract is made and every contract for futures is made in strict accord with the rules of the exchange! Pray tell. How many farmers know this rule? How many farmers helped make these rules that are to govern their future destiny? The answer comes! None of them! None of them! It leads us to believe their operations are carried on with much greater success where we know them not! [Applause.]

This firm of legal lights, who call themselves "bankers" and give their address as 16 and 18 Wall street, say in substance: "Why, it would be to the utter ruin to let the spinner and the producer deal direct." "Their interests are directly antagonistic to each other," they blandly contend. "One, you see, is the buyer; he wants to buy as cheaply as possible," "while the producer is the seller, and he wants to sell as high as possible." Think of this logic! Think of the anxiety these bankers have for the producers! Their anxiety must be so acute that it brings about insomnia. [Applause.]

As to the status of the buyer and the seller and their respective interest with reference to the price, we must all subscribe to the fact that their interests are opposed to each other in that regard. But it is an open, an apparent interest that accompanies every business transaction known to the business world.

Now, pause for a moment and think of this logic! How terrible that would be. Now, I want to urge this Congress to think of what a deplorable condition that would be to put the real producer in if, perchance, he was ever permitted to sell to the real spinner himself instead of letting a dozen middlemen who have bought, sold, and juggled with the product, and everyone made a profit before it reaches the true market, which is the spinner. It is to be remembered of them—that paternal, knightly, and good Samaritan spirit of the New York banking institution, in their 45-page brief, elegantly bound and very tastefully gotten up, full of deception, full of ridicule, full of snares, and full of pitfalls, aimed at those who have not a deep interest and who are not willing to study the philosophy they call into vogue. It is amusing and interesting to know of the keen sensibilities they possess for the producer. [Applause.]

It is interesting to know how they have picked out the pitfalls (such as the one above mentioned) for the farmer. They must certainly feel the farmer owes them a deep debt of gratitude, and think they are to be applauded and commended for their ever vigilance and watchfulness over the interest of the American toiler, the American producer, and the American consumer! That same self-sacrificing Samaritan spirit was made manifest in the recent panic; it had been visible prior to that; it was not only visible then, but was a howling reality! [Applause.]

No; it is all wrong. It has not a peg on which to stand. It is a vicious practice of speculating that this Commonwealth not only does not need but it is very desirous of getting rid of. It needs legislation to wipe it off. It needs hasty legislation to do it. There are a number of bills here on the subject. I have introduced H. R. 11785 on the subject. It may not be the best. It may be the poorest. I care not whether it be the best or the worst. It deals with legislation that is all-important and it is your duty to act and consider it. Amend the bill if there be defect. Draw one yourself that will stand the test. What the 40,000,000 American farmers want is legislation to cure the evils. No matter whose bill you pass, or from which side of the House; in either event it shall have my loyal support. It is relief the farmers want. [Applause.]

My bill first denies them the use of the mails; second, the uses of the telegraph, the telephone, and every other hasty method of transmission of intelligence, thinking this would rout them out of their den in New York and make them seek the fields of cotton in the Southern districts, where the local legislatures could handle them from time to time as their wants needed administering to. It further subjects those who deal either as proprietors or patrons to a fine and imprisonment for bucket-shop wagering and speculating in future transactions, unless the vender is possessed of the article or has the apparent ability to deliver the same. This would deny them the benefit of hasty communication to their lieutenants in the field and would retard their vicious practices, and in my judgment would put them out of business. I say, put them in stripes for these wrongs! Stamp them out root and branch! And the American farmers and producers will see her first proud day.

Let the farmer have an open market, where all can read and all can know. Let the farmer have a chance. His lot is not the brightest in all the land. Let that ever-faithful wife and children of tender years, when they crawl on their hands and knees from gray daylight till close of day gathering the fleecy staple, believe and know that they are gathering nature's most useful crop for an honest and open market. Let them feel a true and honest pride in procuring and being made secure in a fair price, and let it serve as a solace to tired constitutions, but ever-rested souls, that this Congress has yet a heart that throbs, yet an ear that hears, and is willing to give them heed. [Loud applause.]

Let us not permit the bucket shops and dens of gamblers in farm products to longer curb, throttle, checkmate, divert, debauch, and destroy this noble and historic art. Let us not permit them to discourage, hamper, and burden the 40,000,000 of American citizens who are engaged in agricultural pursuits, living and residing on 6,000,000 cultivated farms. Let us not permit further exploitation of that class that produce more every year than they themselves consume. It is wrong in principle. It is wrong in morals. It is the burning duty of this Congress to make it wrong and criminal in law as well. [Applause.]

If you legislate for them as you ought to do, it will not retard the growth of the historic cotton plant in the springtime. It will not make the cotton bloom in midsummer with any less splendor; it will not increase the appetite of the ever-vigilant boll weevil; it will not cause its bolls holding the valued product to open with less speed or less certainty; it will not make the task more difficult of gathering; it will not increase the expense of hauling to market or of ginning. The fleecy staple will yield and grow and produce as of yore. [Applause.] To refuse to legislate against this evil will not make the wheat of the North and West greener in winter and spring, will not make it more golden at harvest time; it will not retard the binder or the sickle; it will not make the showers less plentiful in summer; it will not make the sun-kissed petals produce less than of yore. But if Congress will act, nature will continue to do her annual task and do it well. Agriculture will progress and improve. The ever faithful American farmer will start with new zeal and new energy and agriculture will take a new lease on life. [Applause.]

The farmers of America believe the bucket shops should go. They feel there is no place in this country for them. They feel they are plain, everyday gamblers. They think that their crimes should be described in the category of crime the same as the man that conducts the Louisiana lottery or the game of chance. They think it corrupts the morals of this Commonwealth. They neither produce nor consume. They neither furnish pleasure nor value, but, on the contrary, deal vice and disaster throughout the land. They reap where they have not sown. They deal where and when they have not with which to deal. They control prices, raising and lowering them at will. They deal independent of the producer and irrespective of their rights. I ask the American Congress if this is inevitable? Is this necessary? Surely this Congress can not longer be misled. Surely they will not longer refuse to act. [Applause.]

You have the right to look into the books of the corporations and know their wrongs. You have the right to know their vices and their methods. Surely, when corporations, creatures of law, are subjected to regulation and control, surely enough should this class of citizens which operate in the absence of law, in the face of the law, and because there is no law be dealt with speedily and effectually.

I am one citizen that believes the people should have an inning. I am one citizen that believes that the time is at hand when the people should have the opportunity of good laws to protect their own; should have a Congress that represents the wish of the people, and when the wishes of the people are proven wrong, let them repeal the laws.

These gamblers and garblers of prices wield a two-edged sword that smites both consumer and producer at the same stroke. How can the farmer know when to sell? How can he know when to buy? He has not their figures. He knows not of their machinations and vice. He knows not of their fictitious deals. He knows not whether the market be healthy or unhealthy, and there is no law to enable him to find out, or protection afforded. Can such a fictitious market benefit the farmer? Can this benefit the consumer? Can this purify the morals of the land? No; it is all wrong. There is no dividing line. There is no reason why the bucket shop should not be viewed in the proper light, to wit, that of the everyday gambler and of the most injurious character.

No; this is an era when men should deal honestly, when men should deal fairly and squarely, when the products of the soil should be handled in a careful and painstaking way.

The farmer knows not of the "bulls" and "bears." They do not want to know them. They do not want to know of or concerning them. It has been humorously but truthfully said that our Oklahoma farmers do not care to know of any bulls but "Durham bulls" nor any bears but the ones in the zoological gardens in safe captivity. I take it this rule is quite universal and applies to the American producers generally. [Loud applause and laughter.]

The products of the soil should be a sacred matter. They should not be longer subjected to this orgy of speculation by a failure on the part of this Congress to act. This Congress has authority to act—has authority to go into this matter in detail. This Congress has men on both sides of the House who have introduced bills on the subject.

This is not a partisan question. This is not one that Republicans should be against because the Democrats are for. This is not a bill that will unsettle conditions that now exist. This is not a measure that will wound the feelings of any, save a few gamblers who are making their living by irregularity and speculation. It is a measure the farmers are pleading for, a measure the consumers all need and many of them are asking for, a measure that is to-day being opposed chiefly by New York reserve banks who are interested in the transactions and the bucket-shop people themselves, who are annually robbing the farmers out of millions of dollars, not by honest business methods, but by fraud, vice, stealth, and irregular transactions.

It is not my disposition to threaten this Congress, for you would not heed me if I did; but I am going to make a modest prophecy that I think will come true. This prophecy is made, of course, only on the theory that you fail to act. I am going to say that I think you will find 40,000,000 farmers anxious to know why this bill was not passed. They are going to be so inquisitive and so unkind as to ask why a Republican House, why a Republican Senate, why a Republican President that is eminently qualified to do all things at all times; why, when every committee was loaded down with Republican members—there being on an average twice as many Republicans on every committee as there are Democrats—refused to stop this gambling in high places by passing a bill that will forever put them out of business and cause them to pursue honest industry as other citizens do. You can not lay it onto the Democrats, for they could not stop you if you wanted to pass it. And, fortunately for us, there are not many Democrats that I know of trying to stop it. The truth is, most of them have been working ever since they came here to get this bill through for the relief of the farmers.

You may defeat this legislation that the farmer is asking for; you may let this gambling in farm products run on and on; you may go home and tell the farmers you were in favor of the bills, but could not get them out of the committee. You may fool them again on this matter. It is not my prophecy to say you can not, for, as experience is our blessed teacher, you have been doing it for twelve long years. But even if you can fool them again, even if you could get all of their votes again under misapprehension, you would still feel and know down in your heart, which is often more honest than your vote, that you had rendered them a sting when you had sworn to protect. You should not do it. I hope you will not do it. [Loud applause.] I desire to submit the views of some citizens and some farmers' union organizations—some from my district, some from the nation, and any of them entitled to consideration equal to the gamblers who are flooding this Congress with briefs, arguments, and subtle defenses of this future, corner, margin dealing business.

W. J. BRYAN'S INDORSEMENT.

On Monday, June 18, 1894, in the Fifty-third Congress, second session, in an able speech on the question of "bucket shops, options, futures, corners, and gamblings upon agricultural products," while a member of that body, W. J. Bryan, among many other things, said:

When the farmer has taken the chances of rain and drought; when he has taken the chances which must come to the farmer as they scarcely come to anybody else; when he has escaped the grasshopper and the chinch bug and the rain and the hail and the dry winds, I insist that he shall not then be left to the mercy of a gang of speculators, who, for their own gain, will take out of him as much of the remainder as they can possibly get.

S. H. Greely, a Chicago commission merchant, admits, and the digest of his testimony is that the law of supply and demand no longer control prices of farm products, which are regulated by four distinct systems—bucket shops, railroads, warehouses, and future speculation. Mr. Greely estimates that from 75 to 90 per cent of the business done on the stock exchanges is fictitious, and that the success of the bucket shops is depressing to prices and markets.

Hon. Joseph Brigham, who was Assistant Secretary of Agriculture during the first session of the Fifty-seventh Congress, testified before an investigating committee that gambling in farm products on the exchanges tends to injure the farmer.

Franklin Dye, secretary of the State board of agriculture of New Jersey, was of the opinion that gambling in farm products was detrimental to both consumer and producer alike.

Michael P. Moran, president of the National Grain Growers' Association, advocated the total abolition of gambling in futures, holding the bucket shop to be a destroyer of values.

(Also signed by 14 other farmers.)

INDORSEMENTS FROM BECKHAM COUNTY, OKLA.

ERICK, OKLA., March 26, 1908.

We, the members of North Star Union, No. 250, do petition and pray that Congress pass an "antibucket-shop" bill to put a stop to gambling in farm products.

INDORSEMENTS FROM GRADY COUNTY, OKLA.

COLBERT LOCAL, NO. 76, F. E. AND C. U. OF A.,
Bradley, Okla., March 30, 1908.

We, the members of Colbert Local, do indorse, commend, and approve the bill known as "antibucket-shop" bill, No. 11785, introduced by the Hon. SCOTT FERRIS in the House of Representatives. We therefore urge the passage of the bill at this session of Congress, as we believe it is one of the crying needs of working humanity.

W. E. SPENCER, President.
N. E. HEYING, Secretary.

INDORSEMENTS FROM M'CLAIN COUNTY, OKLA.

DIBBLE, OKLA., March 28, 1908.

We, the members of McClain County Local, No. 391, F. E. and C. U. of A., do indorse and recommend "antibucket-shop" bill No. 11785. We think gambling in farm products is against the interest of the farming class.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS,
Washington, D. C.

The Murray County Farmers' Union indorses "antibucket-shop" bill No. 11785.

SULPHUR, OKLA., March 28, 1908.

Be it resolved by the Murray County Union in regular session assembled, That we do hereby indorse the efforts of Hon. SCOTT FERRIS, our Representative in Congress, in his efforts to stop gambling in futures in farm products, and we ask all our Representatives and Senators to assist him in every honorable way, to the end that his bill introduced for this purpose may pass and become a law.

Unanimously adopted this 28th day of March, 1908.

BIRT RUCKER,
County Secretary Farmers' Union of Murray County, Okla.

INDORSEMENTS FROM POTTAWATOMIE COUNTY, OKLA.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your "antibucket-shop" bill, No. 11785, was read before our local, and we unanimously indorse and heartily recommend the passage of said bill. We realize that the worst enemy the farmer has is the parasite who gambles in farm products. We feel that in you we have a representative of the working people of Oklahoma.

J. E. MADDEN, Secretary.

COOPER LOCAL UNION, NO. 183, POTTAWATOMIE COUNTY, OKLA.

ASHER, OKLA., March 22, 1908.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS, Washington, D. C.:

The Cooper Local Union, No. 183, F. E. and C. U. of A., in convention assembled, heartily indorses your "antibucket-shop" bill No. 11785.

F. T. LASTER, Secretary.

William A. Graham, president of the North Carolina Farmers' Alliance, had no doubt that dealing in futures has much to do with the low prices of farm products and believed that the Government ought to treat such dealing as it did the lottery.

A. J. Wedderburn, corresponding secretary of the National Pure Food and Drug Congress, and Master of the State Grange of Virginia, believed that the effect of dealing in options and futures is absolutely ruinous. If a man has a right to sell something he does not own and never expects to have, in competition with the actual commodity and at a lower price, it is bound to bring the price down. The selling of many times as much wheat as is raised for delivery for future dates, makes it necessary for the men who have to deliver the wheat to work to keep the price down.

Hon. O. B. Stevens, commissioner of agriculture of the State of Georgia, declared that grain and cotton gambling had been very harmful to the farmers of the South and to industry in general. He believed that if all gambling in futures could be suppressed the price of commodities would advance and the farmers would be in much better condition.

J. Pope Brown, president of the Georgia State Agricultural Society, was of the opinion that dealing in options and futures has a tendency to demoralize the prices of cotton, and on the whole to depress them. Forty, fifty, or a hundred times as much cotton is sold in a week on the exchanges as is raised in a year, and this apparent greater supply naturally reduces the price.

In 1893, President Cleveland, in his inaugural address at Washington, spoke in the strongest language against trade conspiracies which, he said, "Were unnatural and opposed to all American sense of fairness."

In 1894, the German Emperor announced, in his speech from the throne, the introduction of two Government measures "in connection with the gambling 'future' systems and agricultural depression, in order to protect the trading and industrial community."

In 1904, King Edward VII, in his speech from the throne, specially dwelt upon the distress of the "Lancashire cotton crisis" of that year.

In 1905, Her Majesty Queen Alexandria, by example as well as precept, nobly showed her deep and active sympathy in relation to certain internal social problems in Great Britain.

President Roosevelt, during the whole period of his Presidency, has never ceased attacking the various financial and trading frauds in the United States and other scandals caused thereby.

PRAYER OFFERED BY THE BISHOP OF MANCHESTER ON AUGUST 13 AND 20, 1905.

Almighty God, who art always more ready to hear than we to pray, and art want to give more than either we desire or deserve, we humbly beseech Thee to hear our prayer that Thou wouldst guide at this time the minds of those who, as leaders of the employers and of the employed, are in Thy providence charged with the issue now at stake in the cotton industry. Grant unto them both an earnest desire for conciliation, and wisdom in devising means thereto. Avert, if it be Thy will, the calamities which we fear, and give peace and prosperity in our homes. We pray Thee, Heavenly Father, to teach us also to make a right use of all that Thou sendest, of all times of tribulation, and of all times of our wealth. May we acknowledge Thee in all things, and ever seek Thy glory and the advancement of Thy Kingdom, through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

Mr. FERRIS. I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Mr. Chairman, I desire at this time to say a word with reference to the Sulloway widows' pension bill, which recently passed this House, and later on, with some amendments, passed the Senate. The amendments, of course, made it necessary that conferees be appointed, and they accordingly were appointed on the part of the House and the Senate. As I understand, from underground sources, the committee are deadlocked on the proposition as to what shall be the date permissible for widows of soldiers to come under the provisions of the act. In the brief time allowed me I think I can best serve the purpose that it is my desire to promote by reading an article recently printed in the National Tribune, of this city, which paper is the recognized organ of the old soldiers of the country, which is as follows:

AN OPEN LETTER.

To the Senators and Representatives.

GENTLEMEN: A fortnight ago the country was delighted at the speedy prospect of the passage of the widows' pension bill by both Houses of Congress. Certainly the reception which the country gave this intelligence is sufficient demonstration to you of the wisdom and justice of that act and the immensity of the good that it would accomplish.

Undoubtedly each of you has heard extensively from his State and district as to the number of most worthy women, who are held in esteem by the people of their respective localities, who will be benefited by this act. It was received everywhere with as much general approval as the passage of the McCumber Act a year ago, and is regarded as a legitimate and proper extension of the benefits of that act to the widows of the veterans. In every community in the country the widows of veterans are as near the heart of the people as the veterans themselves. As much honor and credit as was due the veterans for going to the front in the nation's days of peril are felt to be also due to the noble women who shared their lives with them and gave a wife's unpurchasable devotion and care to the veterans in their mournful passage toward the tomb. The people are as insistent that these women be properly treated by the Government as they are that the veterans themselves shall be so treated. In all its history the National Tribune has never seen a more popular piece of pension legislation than the widows' pension bill.

Now there is understood to be an inexplicable hitch which threatens the final enactment of that law, and the people of the country are nervous lest it should not be approved at this session. Like the McCumber bill, the widows' pension bill is imperative in its demand for speedy action. The beneficiaries are generally aged women, who are incapacitated by their many years and attendant disabilities from earning a livelihood; they are nearly all in dire need of such assistance as the bill proposes, and it will give them a sum which will secure their old age and decrepitude from the cruel gnawings of want. While a broken-down veteran, unable to earn his livelihood, is an object that arouses our most sincere compassion, his feeble widow is equally deserving of our pity and help. She has given all her life to him, as he gave his to the country, and the debt of the nation is as great to her as to him.

Whatever is to be given should be given at once. The years of all these widows are numbered, and most of them will not enjoy their pensions long. They can not, in the very nature of things, and it is nothing short of cruelty to withhold from them, for even a short time, that which both Houses have unanimously agreed should be given.

The cost of the bill is but a trifle in comparison with the services which the husbands of these widows rendered the country, and the disbursement of the money under it will be of the highest benefit to the country at this time. The greatest public need at present is for additional currency in circulation, and there is no speedier or more equitable way of securing this than through the payment of pensions. Money given in pensions goes to every crossroads and hamlet in the country, and at once becomes part of the life blood of business in the remotest sections. This has been so thoroughly demonstrated that it is useless for us to argue further upon the subject.

Gentlemen, we appeal to you by considerations which should be the most powerful in moving men. We ask you in the name of the tens of thousands of broken and aged widows in this country to allow no factious disagreements, no obstinate quibbling over details, no Congressional jealousies, to prevent your coming together upon this most meritorious and just bill. You are being watched with sickening anxiety by most deserving women all over the country, whose sole hope of support during the last few years of their lives is in the passage of this bill. Every day that you delay agreeing upon it brings ineffable sadness to their hearts and shrouds them with the gloomy clouds of despair.

We beg of you with the utmost earnestness to complete your work next week by the passage of the bill which will carry joy to tens of thousands of bereaved women sitting by their desolate and fireless hearthstones.

Yours, in anxious hope,

THE NATIONAL TRIBUNE.

I hope that the fears expressed in this editorial are groundless and that the House and the Senate conferees will come together and that this bill will be passed. If it fails, it will add a dark and gloomy chapter to this country's pension laws.

RECESS.

The CHAIRMAN. The hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, under the order of the House, the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union will stand in recess until Monday morning at 11.30 a. m.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Blanchard, Iowa, praying for the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in all Government buildings, grounds, and ships, which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

REGULATION OF LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. On behalf of the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] I report from the Committee on the Judiciary a substitute for the following bills:

A bill (S. 749) to limit the effect of the regulations of commerce between the several States and with foreign countries in certain cases;

A bill (S. 2926) to limit the effect of the regulations of commerce between the several States and with foreign countries in certain cases;

A bill (S. 3069) to limit the effects of the regulations of commerce between the several States and with foreign countries in certain cases;

A bill (S. 3634) to limit the effect of the regulation of commerce between the several States and Territories in certain cases;

A bill (S. 4087) to limit the effect of the regulation of commerce between the several States and Territories in certain cases;

A bill (S. 5151) to regulate interstate commerce in intoxicating liquors; and

A bill (S. 5745) to limit the effects of the regulations of commerce between the several States and with foreign countries in certain cases.

I ask that the bill be read twice by its title and that it go to the Calendar.

The bill (S. 6576) to regulate the interstate commerce shipments of intoxicating liquors was read twice by its title.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I present with the bill a report (No. 499) and the views of individual members of the committee. On account of the widespread interest in this matter, I ask that 1,000 extra copies of the report and bill be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar. The Senator from Wyoming asks that 1,000 additional copies of the bill and the report accompanying it be printed. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BACON. I simply wish to say, in connection with the report, that the report is the action of the Judiciary Committee, but represents the views of a majority and not of the entire committee.

I think it has already possibly been stated by the chairman, but I desire also to state that the report is accompanied by the separate views of several members of the committee who favor that particular report and who are in favor of a more enlarged measure. I will ask the chairman of the committee if I am correct in stating that those views have been handed in with the report?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. With the report, and a request was made for printing 1,000 extra copies of the whole matter.

Mr. BACON. Very well.

Now, Mr. President, I wish to state that while there is no minority report made, the committee was very nearly equally divided upon the subject, and those of us who compose the minority, at least a part of that minority, are in favor of a bill which is found upon pages 25 and 26 of the printed pamphlet. It is in a measure similar to the substitute which has been reported. The first section of the bill to which I refer has been eliminated from the substitute. The substitute is substantially the same as the bill which is found upon pages 25 and 26, beginning with the second section of the bill and running through to the seventh section. While there is a change in the phraseology it is substantially the same bill in that particular.

As these two propositions will come before the Senate, I ask that the same number of copies of the bill found on pages 25 and 26 may also be printed for the use of the Senate. It will be offered as a substitute when the bill is presented for action by the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia asks that 1,000 additional copies of the bill appearing upon pages 25 and 26 of the pamphlet be also printed. Is there objection?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I of course make no objection, except I call the Senator's attention to the fact that that bill will appear in each of the thousand additional copies I have asked for.

Mr. BACON. I beg the Senator's pardon; I possibly misunderstood the motion which he made. I thought he asked for the printing of a thousand additional copies of the substitute.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Of the substitute and the paper accompanying it, which is undoubtedly the pamphlet the Senator holds in his hand.

Mr. BACON. But I understand the Senator to ask that a thousand additional copies of the substitute be printed separately and also that a thousand additional copies of the pamphlet be printed. Am I correct?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes.

Mr. BACON. And the bill is to be printed separately?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I have no objection, Mr. President.

Mr. BACON. I ask that there may be a reprint of the bill as set out on pages 25 and 26, and that it may be stated that it is the bill favored by the minority of the committee as a substitute for that which is proposed by the committee.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I desire to make a little more clear the position of the majority of the committee on this matter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection the request made by the Senator from Georgia is agreed to.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The entire committee was substantially in agreement as to a certain portion of this whole question. The phase of the question on which the entire committee was agreed appears in part in the bill which has been mentioned by the Senator from Georgia as appearing on pages 25 and 26 of the pamphlet. There were certain portions, however, of that bill that the majority of the committee could not bring themselves to view with favor. So there was a divided opinion on that particular question, which struck at the root of the whole business, to wit, the constitutionality of the proposed legislation.

The entire committee was favorable to that portion of the bill that is recommended by the majority, as I understand the situation. The minority of the committee were satisfied that the remainder of the bill would also be constitutional. I think that states the attitude of the committee.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, in order that the original bill may be properly identified, I will ask that the reprint of it may be denominated as the substitute for Senate bill 5151.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I object to that.

Mr. BACON. And the same will be offered as a substitute for the substitute proposed by the committee.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I ask that the report be printed as made.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will state the question. The Senator from Georgia asks for a reprint of the bill appearing on pages 25 and 26 of the pamphlet, and that it be designated as a substitute to be offered for the original bill reported by the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. BACON. I ask that it be so printed.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. To that I object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. BACON. I should like to know what is the ground of the objection of the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Because the committee has reported this measure as a substitute for all the bills which are mentioned in the report, and I ask that the report of the committee be received as made.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. NELSON. I desire to say, with all due respect, that I think the chairman of the committee is in error about one thing, and that is, that the bill reported is not the unanimous report of the committee. It is the bill reported by the majority of the committee.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I so distinctly mentioned in my statement.

Mr. BACON. I will not stickle with the Senator as to whether the original bill should be denominated as a substitute for Senate bill 5151. I simply wished to identify it.

In order that the matter may be thoroughly understood, I will state that Senate bill 5151 is one of the bills which was before the committee. There were four or five bills before the committee. Senate bill 5151 was the only bill which contained the part of the legislation to which the chairman of the committee states there was no material objection on the part of the committee. In other words, a part of that bill proposed legislation which commanded the approval of practically all of the committee. The committee framed a substitute which is substantially the same as that part of Senate bill 5151, eliminating from their substitute the first section of the bill, which related to the exercise of the police powers of the State, that being the particular part upon which the committee was divided, the majority of the committee holding that part to be unconstitutional.

Now, the committee reports as a substitute that part of the proposed legislation which is found in a part of that bill. The minority of the committee favor not only the part of the legislation which is represented by a portion of the bill, which is substantially the same as the substitute reported by the committee, but they favor the entire bill. The only purpose I have is to have that bill so printed that it may be properly identified, that we may know what it is, that it may have some heading. As there is no minority report, I presume, under the objection of the Senator from Wyoming, as the committee fail to report the bill back, it can only be printed without a heading, and I presume it will be offered as a substitute when the proper time arrives.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senate has already ordered the printing of a thousand additional copies of the bill proposed by the minority.

Mr. BACON. It is to be printed, I presume, in the same shape as the thousand additional copies of the substitute reported by the committee.

Mr. CULBERSON subsequently said: Mr. President, as a member of the Committee on the Judiciary, I desire to file at this time and present with the report which has been made my individual views on what is known as the proposed liquor legislation. I ask that it be printed with the other reports in the case and with the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas submits his views upon the bill known as the liquor bill, reported this morning from the Committee on the Judiciary, and asks that they be printed in connection with the other reports upon the bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none and it is so ordered.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2487) to amend section 5278 of the Revised Statutes, reported it without amendment.

Mr. DILLINGHAM, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 14382) to establish a United States court at Jackson, in the eastern district of Kentucky, reported it without amendment.

Mr. CARTER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4063) for the widening of Benning road, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report (No. 500) thereon.

Mr. CURTIS, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6525) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to remove restrictions on Indian allotments in Oklahoma for school-site purposes, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report (No. 501) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4547) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to segregate for town rights certain lands belonging to the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes, and for other purposes, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 552) providing for the commutation of second homestead entries in certain cases, submitted an adverse report (No. 502) thereon, which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. OVERMAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3732) regulating injunctions and the practice of the district and circuit courts of the United States, reported it with an amendment.

Mr. BORAH, from the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6018) providing for the disposition of town sites in connection with reclamation projects, and for other purposes, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 503) thereon.

Mr. BRANDEGEE, from the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game, submitted a supplemental report (No. 459, part 2) to accompany the bill (S. 4825) for acquiring national forests in the Southern Appalachian Mountains and White Mountains, heretofore reported by him from that committee.

COLORADO BOUNDARY LINE.

Mr. FORAKER. From the Committee on the Judiciary, I report back favorably, without amendment, the joint resolution (S. R. 78) establishing the boundary line between the States of Colorado and Oklahoma and the Territory of New Mexico. I ask for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

The Secretary read the joint resolution.

Mr. CULBERSON. My attention has just been called to the joint resolution. I ask the Senator who reported it if it affects in any way the eastern boundary line of Oklahoma—the Texas line?

Mr. FORAKER. No; it does not. It simply establishes the boundary line as it was established and approved by the Interior Department—the line upon which monuments have been set. But the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], who introduced the joint resolution, can give more specific information in answer to the Senator's question than I can, and I request that he may answer.

Mr. TELLER. It does not interfere with any line. It simply determines where the thirty-seventh parallel is on the ground, and the monuments have been put up on what the astronomer says is the parallel. We only ask to have that recognized on the part of the Government. It will be necessary then, of course, that the State of Colorado should do the same thing, if that should become the line. There is nothing to affect Texas in any way. We will not try to take any part of Texas.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SPOKANE INDIAN RESERVATION LANDS.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. From the Committee on Indian Affairs, I report back favorably, with amendments, the bill (S. 6163) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to sell and dispose of the surplus unallotted agricultural lands of the Spokane Indian Reservation, Wash., and to place the timber lands of said reservation in a national forest, and I submit a report (No. 498) thereon. I desire to call the attention of the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. ANKENY] to the report.

Mr. ANKENY. I ask for the immediate consideration of the bill, as it is rather important to the people in that section.

The Secretary read the bill, and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The first amendment of the committee was, after the word "purpose," in section 3, page 4, line 3, to strike out the remainder of the section, in the following words:

But any of the lands so granted and which may be classified as timber lands shall be subject to the same provisions and be administered in the same manner as the other unallotted timber lands on the reservation, as herein provided.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

And of the lands which may be classified as timber lands, no account shall be made of said sections 16 and 36 until further action for the disposal of said lands.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out sections 5, 6, and 7 of the bill and in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 5. That the lands so classified as timber lands shall remain Indian lands subject to the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior until further action by Congress, and no provision authorizing the sale of timber upon Indian lands shall apply to said lands unless they be specially designated: Provided, That until further legislation the Indians and the officials and employees in the Indian Service on said reservation shall, without cost to them, have the right, under such regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe, to go upon said timber lands and cut and take therefrom all timber necessary for fuel, or for lumber for the erection of buildings, fences, or other domestic purposes upon their allotments; and for said period the said Indians shall have the privilege of pasturing their cattle, horses, and sheep on said timber lands, subject to such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to sell and dispose of for the benefit of the Indians such timber upon said timber lands as, in his judgment, has reached maturity and is deteriorating and which, in his judgment, would be for the best interests of the Indians to sell, the purpose being to as far as possible protect, conserve, and promote the growth of timber upon said timber lands. The Secretary of the Interior shall deduct from the money received from the sale of such timber the actual expense of making such sale and place the balance to the credit of said Indians, and he is authorized to prescribe such rules and regulations for the sale and removal of such timber so sold as he may deem advisable.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. SCOTT submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $9,000 to grade and improve M street NE., Bladensburg road to Twenty-eighth street, in the District of Columbia, intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. DIXON submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $30,000 to enable the President to reserve and except from the unallotted lands now embraced within the Flathead Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana, not to exceed 12,800 acres, near the confluence of the Pend d'Oreille and Jocko rivers, for a permanent national bison range for the herd of bison to be presented by the American Bison Society, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the agricultural appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENTS TO THE OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. MONEY submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to House bill 15372, known as the "omnibus claims bill," which were ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

COMMODITY CLAUSE OF RATE LAW.

Mr. FORAKER. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed as a substitute for the joint resolution (S. R. 74) suspending the commodity clause of the present interstate commerce law, which I ask may lie on the table and be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RESERVED RIGHTS OF STATES.

Mr. RAYNER. I submit a resolution. I ask that it be read and lie on the table.

The resolution was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Resolved, That in the opinion of the Senate the powers delegated by the Constitution to the United States must no be enlarged by implication or so construed as to conflict with or encroach upon the reserved rights of the States as guaranteed by the tenth amendment.

FUNERAL EXPENSES OF THE LATE SENATOR WHYTE.

Mr. RAYNER submitted the following resolution, which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay from the contingent fund of the Senate the expenses incurred for Senators and officers of the Senate in attending the funeral of the late Senator William Pinkney Whyte, of Maryland, on March 19, 1908, including floral offering furnished.

MILITARY POSTS.

Mr. SCOTT. I submit a resolution for reference to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs be, and it is hereby, authorized and directed, by subcommittee or otherwise, to visit, during the recess of the Senate, such military posts of the United States as in the committee's judgment should be examined, in order to ascertain existing conditions at such posts, the necessities for legislation, and any other and further information bearing upon military posts as may seem important and of value in the consideration of future proposed military legislation. And the committee is further authorized to send for persons and papers, to subpœna witnesses and administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer to take notes or testimony and to do clerical duties, the expenses incurred to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. KEAN. I think the resolution should be referred first to the Committee on Military Affairs for that committee to report upon it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, in the absence of objection.

REVENUE-CUTTER SERVICE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 24) to increase the efficiency of the personnel of the Revenue-Cutter Service, which were: On page 1, line 6, to strike out "who shall serve;" on page 1, line 7, to strike out "unless" and insert "who may be;" on page 1, line 7, after "for," to strike out "a;" on page 1, line 7, to strike out "period" and insert "periods;" on page 1, line 8, after "years," to strike out "and" and insert "each;" on page 1, line 14, after "Treasury," to insert "or the President;" on page 2, line 4, to strike out "who shall serve;" on page 2, line 5, to strike out "unless" and insert "who may be;" on page 2, line 5, after "for," to strike out "a;" on page 2, line 6, to strike out "period" and insert "periods;" on page 2, line 6, after "years," to insert "each;" and on page 7, line 6, to strike out all after "Alaska" down to and including "oaths," line 7.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

SITES FOR PUBLIC BUILDINGS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, in accordance with the notice I gave on Thursday last, I now ask that Senate bill No. 122 be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the bill referred to by the Senator from West Virginia, the title of which will be read by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 122) authorizing the purchase of grounds for the accommodation of public buildings for the use of the Government of the United States in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, the most important question, in my opinion, confronting Congress in its relation to the work of the Government itself in the District of Columbia, is that of buildings in which that work can be conducted. Instead of compact structures in which the business of the various Departments can be carried on, the work of the Government is being scattered all over the city and most unsatisfactory results follow. The amount of money spent by the Government for rental in the District of Columbia is increasing at an alarming ratio, and I think it is time that a halt should be called, department buildings erected, and the clerical affairs of the Government carried on with dispatch and economy.

It is a plain business proposition which I desire to bring to the attention of the Senate. No business man in the United States would hesitate one minute on a rent proposition of 2 per cent as opposed to 5, 10, or 20 per cent. Neither would he hesitate on the proposition for proper, commodious, and connected offices in which to carry on his business. Where is the proprietor of a large department store who does not demand that all his wares shall be housed under one roof? He does not care to have his silk counters at one place and his linen goods shown in a building a mile away. Such a proprietor is aiming always at economy and the best results on the money invested. Should the Government act differently? Are we not here as the representatives of our States and our people to see that the moneys of the Federal Government are carefully and economically expended and that the best results are obtained? Should we hold it to be economy and carefulness merely to refuse to make appropriations? Are we legislating for the best interests of our country when we go on record as opposed to an appropriation for buildings needed in the District of Columbia in which the work of the Federal Government is to be carried on? Do we really salve our consciences with the ointment of being "watch dogs of the Treasury" and of always being on the alert to protect the interests of the people? I wonder if we do? For if we do, I fear we are resting in false security, and that some day our refusal to act fairly on plain, business proprositions will rise up to haunt us. For I think an alarming situation confronts us.

During the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, the Government will have spent for rent of buildings in the District of Columbia the sum of $415,622.03, or, in round numbers, $416,000. To show how the annual rental has been constantly increasing, I desire to present to the Senate the amounts so used for the past ten fiscal years.

1902	273,219.50
1903	316,249.84
1905	349,266.17
1907	415,622.03

These figures speak for themselves, and this table shows that each year there has been an increase, and unless several departmental buildings are erected it is not unreasonable to suppose that ten years from now over a million dollars will be spent annually in this city for rentals for Government purposes.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask him a question for information?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from West Virginia yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. SCOTT. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. Is it not true that during all this period, when the rentals have been increasing in the way the Senator suggests, we have, in fact, been providing new and additional buildings to accommodate the various Departments in the District of Columbia?

Mr. SCOTT. A very few of them, I will say to the Senator from Ohio. We are erecting near the Capitol a very elaborate building for the use of Senators that I think could very readily and very appropriately be adapted to the use of the Department of Commerce and Labor; but I am not taking that position in my argument this morning.

Mr. FORAKER. I know that constantly from time to time during the last ten years I have been voting for appropriations to erect public buildings in the District of Columbia. In addition to the building mentioned by the Senator, the Post-Office building has been provided, and I do not know how many others. We have been providing public buildings right along. I do not complain of it at all. I merely want to get the facts.

Mr. SCOTT. If the Senator will bear with me for a few moments, I think we will get to that.

The Government to-day has no difficulty in placing all the bonds it desires at an interest rate of 2 per cent. At such a rate the $416,000 being spent this fiscal year represents an investment of over $20,000,000. With $20,000,000 departmental buildings enough can be erected to house every clerk in Government buildings, and these will be a credit and a saving to the United States. And would not such an investment be the part of economy? The Government would then only be paying a 2 per cent rental and would own in time buildings whose rents have paid for themselves. It would have held in its own Treasury money which otherwise would have enriched the individual. If our Government is to be administered on sound, economic principles, this is the only solution. If it is to be administered for the benefit of a few in the District of Columbia, the rental system should remain as it is, and no further efforts should be made to erect buildings in this District for the necessary work of the Departments. We should rely on private enterprise and reward it with from 5 to 20 per cent interest on its investment. Then we can give account of our stewardship to our States and our people and prove how we have economically handled the public money for the benefit of a few; how we have zealously guarded the revenues against the greed of a plain, economical, necessary business proposition.

For it is a necessary business proposition. I have only stated one of the aspects. There is another, and that is the right the Government has to require from its employees the highest grade of results. But in securing this there are reciprocal obligations. The Government must give the employee all the opportunities, all the implements, all the necessities with which to do his best. Is the Government living up to its part of the contract? All the testimony says "no." For it is a declared fact that in the present day sanitary and commodious quarters must be furnished clerks to secure from them the best work. They must be given room in which to turn around. At present halls and stairways are being utilized to give clerks space in which to do their work, and when they are thus cramped and crowded they are unable to give that which should rightly be demanded.

But is it possible that such a condition as this exists? Are halls in crowded buildings absolutely unfitted for the purposes thus used? Are heads of Departments asking, clamoring for relief? Have they been clamoring for years? Has Congress heeded their appeals? The records of each House will show. Shall I illustrate?

Take, for example, the Department of Justice. When the old building on the corner of Madison place and Pennsylvania avenue was torn down, that Department rented the Baltic Building, on K street, and also one building on Lafayette square. At the same time its library was placed in the Court of Claims building. Two years later, in 1901, to relieve the building on Lafayette square, the Department was forced to rent nine rooms in the Bond Building, and later the building on Vermont avenue, directly east of the Baltic Building. In the same year a building for the Spanish Treaty Claims Commission had to be secured. But even this was not enough, and two years later the Department was obliged to rent the building directly west of its main building on K street, and all these are now crowded to their utmost limit.

This situation is bad enough, but it is not the worst. Not only is the business of this Department scattered in these various buildings, but it is absolutely at the mercy of the owners. Listen to the testimony of Attorney-General Moody, now a justice of the Supreme Court, before a Senate committee two years ago. In answer to a question he said:

> Let me give you a rather humiliating example of the position in which we are placed. I will not name the particular building. The landlord of one of the buildings which we rent, and which we must have, declined to make repairs which, in my judgment, under the terms of the tenancy, he was bound to make. I started to be very severe with him and insist upon our rights. In substance, he replied: "If you don't like it, you can get out," and I had to submit. I could not be turned out upon the streets, and therefore I was at his mercy. In the main, I think our landlords have treated us with fairness, but as the leases expire of course we are at their mercy upon the question of renewal.

Now, another illustration, before the same committee at the same time, given by Mr. O. J. Field, chief clerk of the Department of Justice. In relation to the building occupied by the Spanish Treaty Claims Commission he said:

> We leased that building five years ago for $200 a month for three years. At the expiration of three years they increased the rent $50 a month for two years. That two years' lease expired the 1st of April. They demanded a further increase of $50 a month on a six months' lease. We hardly wanted to lease a building for just six months, and in endeavoring to reach some compromise proposition for a longer tenancy they notified us that they declared all negotiations off a week or ten days before the lease expired, and we are hunting around for some place to move the Spanish Treaty Claims Commission to on a week's notice.

As a sequel to this testimony, I can state that the Department of Justice finally compromised with the owners of this building by signing another lease for three years at an increase of $50 per month.

Has any Attorney-General presented this situation to Congress, and is this body still ignorant of these conditions? A business man, a man of affairs, would think the latter. The people might think the same. But for years every Attorney-General of the United States has been pleading for relief from these almost unbearable conditions. They have appeared before committees; they have, within their rights, officially acquainted Congress with this state of affairs. With what result? An effort to fairly meet the difficulties and remedy them in a plain businesslike way? No; but with the stern admonition—

> We are carefully guarding the revenues. Crowd your clerks up a little closer, Mr. Attorney-General, and, if necessary, close up windows and utilize halls. We must economize.

Shall I illustrate again? Take, for example, the State Department. Thirty years ago it was given the entire south wing of the State, War, and Navy building, but encroachments have been made upon it for uses of the War and Navy Departments, and at present only 60 per cent of the room then provided is used by the Department. Has the business of that Department increased in the past thirty years? Yes; enormously. Thirty years ago, and for a long time after that, we were a debtor nation. American capital and American enterprise were engrossed in the development of our own country; there was comparatively little foreign travel, and the relations between the United States and other countries of the world was largely formal. Now we have come to a new era. American enterprise is pushing into every country; American construction is going on all over the world. American trade, American banking, and great American interests are being built up in almost every country on the earth, and a very large representation of our 80,000,000 of people is traveling all over the world. The enormous activity which has sprung up in all of these ways has developed enormous additional labors on the State Department, and yet it only has 60 per cent of the space originally provided thirty years ago. Secretaries of State have reported that their Department is reaching a point where it will be swamped for lack of proper organization. Records can not be handled in a proper manner because of inadequate space. The Secretary of State can not have a private interview with a Senator, a Member of Congress, a Cabinet officer, a foreign ambassador, minister, or consul, because he has no private room.

Before the Senate committee I referred to a few minutes ago Secretary of State Root testified as follows:

> There are a great many Senators and Representatives who come to the State Department with constituents, and what they come for is to introduce the constituents. They do not want to waste any time about it. They do not want more than a minute. I have no place to see them, because I have just this one room. I may be having an important conversation with someone that will take twenty minutes or half an hour. In the War Department, as soon as I found there were a number of people in the anteroom I would stop the conversation, go out and dispose of the one-minute people, let the Senators and Representatives introduce their constituents and go their way. I would find a dozen people who would not want a minute. There might be two or three who wanted more time, and I would let them wait and take their turn, instead of keeping the whole crowd waiting. It is exceedingly inconvenient. It is injurious to the public business and it is very undignified; but I know of no way to cure it, because I can not find any room without turning a lot of clerks out of doors, whose services are absolutely necessary. My private secretary is now in a room away off in a corner, a long distance from me.

Secretary Root further complained that recently he had the gentlemen here who were to go to the Rio conference and that he had to give them the diplomatic anteroom and make special arrangements to have foreign diplomats remain in their embassies and not visit him until after these gentlemen were through with their work. At another time the Sanitary Congress, under a resolution passed by the Second Pan-American Conference at Mexico, came here, and the only thing that he could do was to secure rooms at the Willard Hotel, and the same procedure was followed in the case of commissioners from China. At another time the arbitrators of the Salvador Commercial Company's claim against the Government of Salvador met here. The arbitrators needed space for only a few weeks. What should be done with them? There was no space in the State Department, none of the desirable rooms in the nicer office buildings could be taken for less than six months, so the State Department was compelled to be content with securing rooms in the second-rate building, and even these were hard to find. As a final example, the Anglo-American Joint High Commission was forced to meet in the ordinary of the Arlington Hotel.

Mr. President, these are only a few of the many difficulties with which the State Department has to contend. It is the one official depository of the original acts of Congress, of the original proclamations of the Presidents, and of the original Executive orders—all of the greatest importance, not only to ourselves, but to our posterity. And these are all filed in vaults and cases which are not even fireproof. What recklessness!

Have not the Secretaries of State presented this situation to Congress? Is this body still ignorant of these conditions? Again I say, a business man and a man of affairs would think the latter; the people might think the same. But for years the Secretaries of State have been pleading for relief from these almost intolerable conditions. They have appeared before committees; they have, within their rights, officially acquainted Congress with this state of affairs. With what result? An effort to fairly meet the difficulties and remedy them in a plain businesslike way? No. And, as in the case with the Department of Justice, they are met with the stern admonition:

> We are carefully guarding the reserves. What difference does it make if you have all the files since the foundation of the Government, since 1789, stowed away in nonfireproof cases? What difference does it make if you have many valuable and confidential papers relating to prosecutions and matters of all kinds? What difference does it make if you have diplomatic correspondence which could not be replaced? What difference does it make if the vaults and cases are not fireproof? Papers massed in a bunch will not burn; only the edges will be charred; fire dies out for lack of oxygen, you know. And it will not make much difference anyway; get new files; get new diplomatic documents; crowd up your clerks; close up your windows and utilize halls. We must economize.

Shall I illustrate again? Then take, for example, the Department of Commerce and Labor. It is scattered over a large portion of the business center of the city. Part of it is in the Willard Building, on Fourteenth street; another part of it in the Emory Building, at First and B streets, NW.; another part of it in the National Safe Deposit Building, New York avenue and Fifteenth street; another part of it in the Builders' Exchange Building, on Thirteenth street; another part in the Adams Building, on F street between Thirteenth and Fourteenth streets; another part in the Munsey Building, north side of E between Thirteenth and Fourteenth streets; still another part on E street between Ninth and Tenth, and the Department is asking for additional quarters. Think of it! This Department is distributed over a distance of a mile and a half long east and west, and about one-third of a mile north and south. This Department is a new one, and its needs are more patent than some of the others.

Have not Secretaries of Commerce and Labor presented this situation to Congress? And is this body still ignorant of these conditions? A business man, a man of affairs, would think the latter; the people might think the same. But since the establishment of this Department each Secretary has been pleading for relief from these almost unbearable conditions. They have appeared before committees; they have, within their rights, officially acquainted Congress with this state of affairs. With what result? An effort to fairly meet the difficulties and remedy them in a plain, businesslike way? No. But with the stern admonition:

> We are carefully guarding the revenues. In that section of the city, a mile and a half long east and west and one-third of a mile north and south, you must have many windows and hallways. Close up some of your windows and utilize your hallways; crowd your clerks up a little closer, Mr. Secretary of Commerce and Labor. We must economize.

Similar conditions, of course in a less degree of intensity, exist in other Departments which have been housed for years in homes of their own. The Senate Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, during the last Congress and during this session, too, took up this situation and tried to find a remedy. It made a favorable report on the proposition for buying the squares of ground lying between Fourteenth and Fifteenth streets, Pennsylvania avenue, and D street NW., as a site on which departmental buildings could be erected. These buildings were to house the Departments of State, Justice, and Commerce and Labor. This site was selected, since there seem to be the strongest of reasons why two of these Departments should be within a short distance of the White House. I refer to the Department of State and the Department of Justice. The heads of these two Departments of the Government are more often called by the President to the White House than are any other members of his official family, and the length of their absence from the offices would thereby be reduced to a minimum. This site was also selected on account of its size. Owing to the fact that these buildings were to be near the White House it was obvious that the Treasury Department should not be dwarfed, and the general architectural plan called for structures of four or five stories only. In no other section near the White House could these requisites be met. In addition, the selection of this site was in the general line of the proposed parking system, having in view the most economical beautifying of the city—the carrying out of the plans of the founders.

At the time the committee had a rough estimate of the cost of such buildings made. A building which would supply all the present wants of the Department of Commerce and Labor, allow for a one-third increase in that Department, and still give room for the Interstate Commerce Commission, could be erected, in round numbers, for $5,000,000. This building would be granite faced, of modern type, four stories and basement. A building sufficient to house the Department of State and the Department of Justice could be erected, in round numbers, for $2,000,000, making a total of $7,000,000, exclusive of site. It is only a question of time until the Government will have to own this property anyhow in order to carry out its parking schemes, and for the time being the cost of the site could be left out of consideration.

Let us see if from a financial standpoint this would be a businesslike proposition. What are the savings in rent? During the present fiscal year the State Department pays out in rent $3,580; the Department of Commerce and Labor, $60,049.80; the Department of Justice, $28,200; the Interstate Commerce Commission, $29,160, a total of $110,489. With the State Department moved from its present quarters into a new building, the rent of the Mills Building and some other buildings used by the War and Navy Departments could be saved and run this total up to at least $140,000—2 per cent of $7,000,000. But in a late annual report of the Secretary of Commerce and Labor he says the assembling of the bureaus and offices of the Department under one roof would result in a saving in the cost of administration, on a very conservative estimate, of at least $66,000 per year. I am informed that at least $50,000 could be saved in a similar manner in the Department of Justice. These savings added to the amount paid for rent would bring the total of savings in these two buildings up to $256,000, a 2 per cent rate of interest on $12,800,000.

Is not that a fair, businesslike statement? Would it not be true economy to begin at once the erection of these buildings?

Another condition contronts us, and that is that the buildings now occupied by the various Departments are all crowded, and each Secretary is calling for more space. Some day this condition will have to be met and several other buildings erected in the District of Columbia. Those just mentioned would take care of three Departments and would relieve the War and Navy Departments of the crowded condition which exists in their buildings. The Government at present owns the corner lot across Pennsylvania avenue from the Treasury building. The purchase of the Arlington Insurance Company Building and the Belasco Theater would give the Government a fine site on which could be erected a handsome four-story auditors' office.

Such a building as this would relieve at once the Treasury Department of its congestion. Forty-three per cent of the floor space in the Treasury Department is occupied by auditors' offices. These auditors do not necessarily come in contact with the Secretary or his assistants every day, while in the purely Treasury work of the Department the heads of bureaus are constantly being called into consultation with the Secretary or his assistants. The location of such a building on Pennsylvania avenue would at once put the auditors in the different Departments together, give more room in the Treasury Department, and relieve the Post-Office Department of some of its congestion.

To still further relieve the congestion in the Post-Office Department a new postal workshop should be erected at the Union Station. Here all mails could be handled promptly, carriers could start their deliveries from this point and the objects of a fast mail service absolutely obtained. It is the veriest nonsense to run fast mail trains from New York to Washington and then have forty-five minutes wasted in carrying mail from the Union Station to the present post-office building. Other cities have seen the necessity of a post-office which is a workshop, and are already clamoring for such an improvement. With this addition the Post-Office Department would have the space it needs.

For years a new building for the Bureau of Printing and Engraving has been needed. In the last Congress the necessity was realized and the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized to prepare a plan. He has found the most deplorable overcrowding of men and women in every part of the building. He has found that it was necessary to work a part of the force beyond regular hours, and a considerable part of the men and women at night. Should Congress provide by new legislation for increased issues of notes, it would be necessary to resume this overtime work. The Secretary of the Treasury has made his recommendations and they are worthy of consideration, and I understand they are to be adopted. I shall offer no objections. I am only too glad to see the needs met. But I think the Bureau of Printing and Engraving should be a workshop—it is merely an establishment where money is manufactured. It should be located where it could have railroad facilities, and as much as possible of the work should be done on the ground floor. This could be accomplished by securing a cheap site near one of the railroads and erecting a modern manufacturing plant. All the heavy machinery could then be on the first floor, instead of running up into the air five or six stories, as it does in the present building. Such a structure would not need to be a granite Government building, but simply a substantial, handsome, brick, manufacturing establishment. With the Bureau of Printing and Engraving located along the railroad where it could have switching and other facilities, the Treasury Department could be relieved of a great expense in the hauling of paper to and fro, checking up, weighing, etc. All this could be done at the Bureau of Printing and Engraving, and one hauling would be sufficient. But, as I stated before, I understand the present building is to be enlarged, and when the matter comes before the Senate I shall offer no opposition further than to repeat these views.

I had thought that with the Bureau of Printing and Engraving housed in such an establishment as this, the present building could be used as a hall of records, since such a structure is badly needed. But a new building for such a hall can be erected for $2,000,000, and no Senator can for a moment oppose its erection on a plea of no necessity.

One more building is needed, that for the Geological Survey. Its necessity has been shown before numerous committees on numerous occasions. I feel that I am within the limits of reason when I say that $20,000,000, the amount on which the Government is now paying a 2 per cent rate of interest in rent, would more than erect and equip these buildings. It would even go far enough, in my opinion, to build a separate structure for the Census Bureau, though that is taken care of in the rough estimates of the Commerce and Labor building spoken of before, 136,000 square feet space being given to it. The erection of a building for the Census Bureau is a mere matter of opinion. Each ten years a large number of clerks will be employed for a couple of years and then the Bureau will drop to its normal size of a few hundred clerks. This is the one Bureau of the Government that contracts and expands. The space used at its greatest expansion could be temporarily occupied during the period of greatest contraction, and it is six of one and half a dozen of another whether it is in a department building or in a structure by itself.

To erect such buildings, it seems to me, is the plan which a business man would follow and which I think the Federal Government should adopt. In making an estimate of the savings to the Government, I have only given the figures for rent. But there are other savings on which I have only touched—I mean savings in administration. As before stated, the Department of Commerce and Labor estimates this saving at $66,000 per year, the Department of Justice at $50,000, and I am informed the Bureau of Printing and Engraving can save at least $20,000. In the other Departments a similar administrative saving could be accomplished by placing all bureaus and offices under one roof; but I have been unable to secure figures that would be of any value. It is fair, however, to estimate that the saving would be in the same proportion as in the two Departments and one Bureau from which I have received estimates. To be perfectly fair, I should state that the total rent figures which I have presented include the rent of certain buildings in the District used for school purposes—buildings which properly should not come within the scope of my remarks. The figures also include rent for stables and $65,000 used by the Agricultural Department this year, but which may not be needed hereafter. These amounts, though, are easily covered by the saving in administration in the other Departments not mentioned. At this point I desire to present a list of all buildings in the District of Columbia rented by the Government and the amounts paid for each. This statement is prepared yearly, as required by the act of July 16, 1892. I will not read it, but ask that it may be appended to my remarks in tabular form. [See appendix.]

Having thus covered the situation, I desire to emphasize my original statement that all the Departments and bureaus of the Government now located in rented buildings can be housed in buildings owned by the Government at a rental rate of 2 per cent per annum until the said buildings are paid for. To do this, I desire to give estimates showing what such structures would cost. These estimates are in the rough, but approximate the actual cost. Money would be needed as follows:

Commerce and Labor	$5,000,000
Justice and State	2,000,000
Hall of Records	2,000,000
Auditors' offices	1,500,000
Bureau of Printing and Engraving	2,150,000
Post-office workshop	800,000
Census building	350,000

This cost is estimated exclusive of site. But, as I stated before, the sites of a number of these buildings will have to be purchased by the Government at some future date for parking purposes, so their cost should not really be counted on. But, allowing for the cost of sites, $6,000,000 would more than buy all the land needed for each one of these buildings, and then we have a $20,000,000 investment, on which amount the present rental would pay 2 per cent. The twenty millions easily covers any increase of cost of any of the buildings, for six millions will not be needed in the purchase of sites.

But this is not all. Two Departments and one bureau have given rough estimates of saving in administration—a total of $136,000. Add this to the amount paid out in rent and we have a total expense during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, of $652,000. This, Mr. President, is a 2 per cent interest rate on $32,600,000. Should we hesitate?

But even this is not all. Washington is a beautiful city. In travels which have extended almost around the earth I have seen none more beautiful. Americans are proud of it, and they come here from all over our broad country. They travel up and down our streets and feel that they have a part in every public building or park they see. And the American likes a handsome public structure. He is proud of the Congressional Library, for example, and would be pleased with more buildings of a similar order. He likes to see beautiful parks—he is proud of them. I do not believe that a dollar of money which has ever been expended in buildings needed for the Government work, even in beautifying the city, has been criticised by the taxpayers of the United States. The visitors return to their homes and tell their friends and neighbors of the beauties of the Capital City, of the handsome buildings that our country has erected, of the commodious quarters in which some of our clerks are housed.

But if they happen in their sight-seeing cars to pass, for instance, the Department of Justice, what a beautiful prospect is presented! What a magnificent building is pointed out as the home of the Spanish Treaty Claims Commission! What magnificent quarters as part of the workshop of the Department of Commerce and Labor! Do you not think that these Americans go back home and tell their friends all about this? They draw comparison between these Departments and the other Departments, which are housed in beautiful and commodious buildings. And those comparisons are not to our credit.

As I stated before, I do not believe that the expenditure of a single dollar for the city of Washington in order to beautify the capital of the nation and erect its workshops has ever been criticised by an American taxpayer or an American voter. I do not believe that if to-day the Congress of the United States were to pass a bill appropriating even $32,000,000 for the purchase of sites and the erection of buildings to complete the plans I have detailed above there would be a dissenting voice raised in the United States. I do not believe there would be one criticism from any paper in the United States. On the other hand, I think it would be one of the most popular measures ever passed by Congress and one that would be met with the heartiest approval everywhere.

I have tried, Mr. President, to give this question to the Senate as a business proposition. I have shown how the Government's needs can be more economically met in the District of Columbia. I have shown the true economy of the situation. I have shown the humiliating positions in which heads of Departments have been placed by landlords and by being forced to invite diplomatic representatives of other governments not to call. I have shown the almost intolerable conditions that exist in rented quarters and in buildings now owned by the Government—conditions that any Senator can examine into himself. I have shown how buildings are absolutely demanded and required. In face of all these facts, I now ask for simple justice to heads of Departments, clerks from whom the best service should be expected, and the people, whose money should be expended in the most economical manner. Shall this state of affairs continue? Shall we still hear the self-deluding, the self-satisfying cry of "We must economize?"

Mr. CARTER. The remarks of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT] were very interesting, and inasmuch as they contain not only statements of great value but figures which may be consulted hereafter, I ask unanimous consent that, aside from being printed in the RECORD, they be printed as a document.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent that the remarks just made by the Senator from West Virginia be printed as a document in addition to appearing in the RECORD. In the absence of objection, it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. NELSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After fifteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 1 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, April 14, 1908, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, April 13, 1908.

[Continuation of the legislative day of Monday, April 6, 1908.]

The recess having expired, the House, at 11 o'clock and 30 minutes a. m., was called to order by Mr. MANN, as Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, under the rule.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The CHAIRMAN. The hour of 11.30 o'clock having arrived, the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, under the order of the House, will resume its session for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 20471) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes. General debate is closed by order of the House, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums be, and they are hereby, appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the naval service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendments, to go at the end of line 7, page 1.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Insert on page 1, at the end of line 7:

"For promoting the cause of international arbitration, so as to decrease as rapidly as possible the necessity for maintaining costly armaments, $100,000, to be expended as directed by the executive committee of the American group of the Interparliamentary Union."

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. HOBSON. May I beg the gentleman to reserve the point of order?

Mr. FOSS. I will reserve the point of order for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves the point of order on the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to establish a precedent by which every appropriation for the purpose of armaments made by the United States may carry with it an appropriation for the purpose of arbitration. It is conceded by all that for national security arbitration, when effective, is preferable to armaments. It is not only more in keeping with modern civilization, but is also far more economical. The public opinion of the whole world is now preparing the way for the time when arbitration can be made effective. In order to promote the cause of arbitration and hasten the day when it will become adequate for the necessities of the nations, there should be financial support, not only from broad-minded philanthropists, like Mr. Carnegie, but also from those governments that earnestly desire to substitute arbitration for armament in settling the differences that arise between nations.

The time has arrived when the Government should give substantial support in consolidating the groups of the Interparliamentary Union in preparing adequate representation at the meetings of the councils, and at the congresses of the Interparliamentary Union. Provision should also be made for permanent representation at the Pan-American conferences and for The Hague conferences. A Pan-American conference has already been called for 1910, and a third Hague conference for 1915, and it is time that measures should be taken to prepare to get the best results from these conferences. The time has come for the nations of the earth who desire to reduce the great burden of armaments to begin to promote through literature and through other means, such as the exchange of visits, those ideas that will advance the progress of public sentiment, and permit the evolution not only of general treaties of arbitration, but also of an international court that will not be a diplomatic body, but a judicial body, that will not simply have abstract jurisdiction, but concrete jurisdiction, and before which nations guilty of breaches of international law can be called for compulsory trial.

It is time to make The Hague conference permanent and automatic and thus evolve an international congress that will have authoritative power to make just laws for the world. The time is ripening when the nations of the world that desire arbitration to supersede armaments should begin to group themselves and evolve a system of executive power adequate to enforce the laws that have been made by an authoritative international legislative body and that have been adjudicated by an authoritative international judicial body.

As to the point of order, I submit that this amendment bears directly upon the question of expenditures involved in this bill; that just in proportion as arbitration is made more effective can armaments be decreased, and that an effort to extend arbitration is in line with the purposes of this bill, to provide for national defense. I earnestly appeal to the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs not to insist on his point of order. Let it go forth to all the world that this Congress, when it provides for necessary national defense, has in mind and in heart the coming of the day—not only abstractly, like the dreamers, but as practical men, who will spend the money and do the work to hasten it—when arbitration can be substituted for armament.

And let me point out that this amendment carries less than one-tenth of 1 per cent of the amount that the bill will carry. Can we not give one-thousandth part of what we believe necessary for armament to the cause of arbitration? I hope the gentleman will not insist upon his point of order.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I understood the gentleman from Illinois, the chairman, to reserve the point of order.

Mr. FOSS. I reserved the point of order, but only for a few moments. I will reserve it until the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT] is through.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I am very glad to find myself in a position where I can agree with the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON], even though we do disagree most seriously on other provisions of this bill. On the point of order which has been raised I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, that if this bill is one providing for national defense, then the point of order will clearly not lie, because the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama has this very object in view. There can be no more effective national defense than agreements between nations not to fight hereafter. There can not be any more effective security for this country than the knowledge on the part of all that in case of any difficulty we need not call upon the Army or upon the Navy for defense, but that we can quietly rely upon and invoke international agreements by which law and justice have been or will be substituted for the employment of force in the settlement of international differences.

It is time, Mr. Chairman, that the American Congress should do something in the way of constructive legislation for the cause of peace. We are spending hundreds upon hundreds of millions of dollars for war, but we are not spending one dollar for constructive work in behalf of the cause of peace. It is time that an appropriation, small as is the amount asked for in this amendment, should be made in order that the work of disseminating information on this great question, the work of educating the public opinion, can go on, and also that the necessary expenses may be paid and repaid to those men who, in attending international peace conferences, have from their own private means defrayed all of these expenses.

I think it is incumbent on the Government of the United States to show to the world that they are thoroughly in earnest in the promotion of the cause of peace. And let me state to you a few instances which might throw some light on this question. The small country of Norway is paying the expenses of all the delegates she sends to the interparliamentary conferences. The Republic of Switzerland pays all the traveling expenses of its delegates to the International Peace Congress. The Kingdom of Denmark, too, as I understand, pays all of those expenses. Why should not this rich and powerful country which has been marching in the forefront of the peace workers during the last twenty-five years show by actual appropriations that we are willing to support the cause, not only by sentiment, but materially, in order to enable the men who are engaged in it to do that work more efficiently? I hope, Mr. Chairman, that this point of order will be overruled, and if it should not be overruled, I give notice here and now that I shall introduce a bill in the House to-day which will provide for these appropriations.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I insist on the point of order.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I would like to have the gentleman withhold it for two minutes.

Mr. FOSS. I have already given notice that I would withhold it no longer.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that this provision is clearly new legislation and that it is not germane to the question. This is a bill that provides appropriations for the naval service of the United States, and this amendment provides for the expenses of an interparliamentary union on the part of the United States. Clearly it is subject to a point of order as new legislation.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of personal privilege. I should like to hear from the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] on this amendment and to invoke his good offices to remove the objections and point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The object of the bill under consideration is to make appropriation for the naval service, and for other purposes. The enacting paragraph of the bill provides for appropriations for the naval service of the Government, and for other purposes, and the amendment is to promote the cause of international arbitration so as to decrease as rapidly as possible the necessity for the maintenance of costly armament, to be expended as directed by the executive committee of the interparliamentary union.

The Chair thinks it is perfectly patent that the amendment proposes an appropriation not authorized by existing law, and proposes an item not germane to a bill appropriating money for the naval service. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

PAY OF THE NAVY.

Pay and allowances prescribed by law of officers on sea duty and other duty; officers on waiting orders; officers on the retired list; clerks to commandants of yards and stations, clerks to paymasters at yards and stations, general storekeepers, receiving ships, and other vessels; commutation of quarters for officers on shore not occupying public quarters, including boatswains, gunners, carpenters, sailmakers, warrant machinists, pharmacists, and mates, and also naval constructors and assistant naval constructors; for hire of quarters for officers serving with troops where there are no public quarters belonging to the Government, and where there are not sufficient quarters possessed by the United States to accommodate them, or commutation of quarters not to exceed the amount which an officer would receive were he not serving with troops; pay of enlisted men on the retired list; extra pay to men reenlisting under honorable discharge; interest on deposits by men; pay of petty officers, seamen, landsmen, and apprentice seamen, including men in the engineers' force, and men detailed for duty with Naval Militia, and for the Fish Commission, 42,000 men; 3,000 of the additional men herein authorized may be recruited upon the passage of this act; and the number of enlisted men shall be exclusive of those undergoing imprisonment with sentence of dishonorable discharge from the service at expiration of such confinement; and as many warrant machinists as the President may from time to time deem necessary to appoint, not to exceed twenty in any one year; and 2,500 apprentice seamen under training at training stations and on board training ships, at the pay prescribed by law, $27,274,201.

Mr. MAI DEN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that part of the paragraph beginning after the word "men," in line 17, page 2, and including the words "acts," line 18, same page. This would seem, Mr. Chairman, to make available the amount of money authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to recruit 3,000 additional men immediately upon the passage of this act. I do not wish to say that I object to this language in the paragraph, but I believe there ought to be an explanation made as to the necessity for it before it is enacted into law.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, in this bill we provide that 3,000 of the 6,000 additional men shall be recruited at once. This is due to the fact that the Secretary of the Navy in his hearing before the committee stated that he was very desirous that he should be given this privilege, for the reason that we have now recruited up to our present quota of 36,000 men and the recruiting at the present has been exceedingly good. We have to get men when we can get them, but there are times when it is difficult to get men to enlist in the service; but just now it is possible to get a large number of good men, and for that reason the Secretary asked that this provision as to 3,000 of the 6,000 increase might be made immediately available.

Mr. MADDEN. I am satisfied with the explanation of the chairman of the committee, and I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to state in addition to the reason given that the Secretary stated that these 3,000 men were necessary to go upon the ships that will be commissioned between now and the 1st of July.

Mr. FOSS. Those are the California, the Mississippi, the Idaho, the New Hampshire, the South Dakota, the North Carolina, the Montana, the Chester, the Birmingham, and the Salem. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment on page 2, line 1.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 1, after the word "vessels," insert the following: "Two clerks to general inspectors of pay corps."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order, awaiting an explanation from the chairman of the committee.

Mr. FOSS. This is a provision for two clerks to general inspectors in the pay corps. This estimate was sent to us in the Book of Estimates, and when we considered it, after hearing from the Paymaster-General, the committee were under the impression that it related to two new clerks, but upon further information and talk with the Paymaster-General we learned that unless this provision was put in we would be doing away with two clerks already employed in the Navy Department. One of them has been employed there as a clerk to the general inspector's corps since 1889, and the other for about a year, but under a decision of the Comptroller—and I may say it is hardly a decision yet, but it will be a decision after the 1st of July—the Comptroller will hold that these clerks are not authorized by law, but the Comptroller has agreed to hold up his decision until the Paymaster-General shall have an opportunity to secure, if possible, authority for these two clerks.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the chairman of the committee will yield for a question——

Mr. FOSS. I will yield.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understood the gentleman to say that the committee believes that these additional clerks are necessary for the service, and this is merely to provide——

Mr. FOSS. They are not additional; they are already employed.

Mr. STAFFORD. This is to provide for clerical service that is really necessay for the service?

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to ask, further, where are they now employed?

Mr. FOSS. In the Paymaster-General's office.

Mr. STAFFORD. I withdraw the point of order, with that explanation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FOSS. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment:

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 3, line 3, after the word "dollars," insert the following:

"Provided, That the pay and allowances, except forage and mileage, which shall be governed by existing law, of all officers of the Navy and the Marine Corps shall be the same as the pay and allowances of officers of corresponding rank in the Army.

"That the pay of midshipmen, warrant officers, mates, and paymasters' clerks is hereby increased 25 per cent: Provided, That the pay and allowances of midshipmen after graduation at the Naval Academy shall be the same as that provided for second lieutenants of the Army, not mounted.

"That the pay of all commissioned, warrant, and appointed officers, and enlisted men of the Navy and the Marine Corps on the retired list shall hereafter be based on the pay, as herein provided for, of commissioned, warrant, and appointed officers, and enlisted men of corresponding rank and service on the active lists.

"That nothing herein contained shall be construed so as to reduce the pay or allowances now authorized by law for any commissioned, warrant, or appointed officer or any enlisted man on either the active or retired list of the Navy or Marine Corps, and that all laws or parts of laws inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that this is new legislation and out of order on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. FOSS. I hope the gentleman will reserve the point of order for a statement in connection therewith.

Mr. MADDEN. I will reserve it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves the point of order upon the amendment offered by his colleague.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is clearly subject to the point of order. It is new legislation, but I think it is new legislation which ought to go upon the bill at this time. This amendment provides that the pay of officers in the Navy shall be the same as those in the Army. The situation is this: In the Army bill in the Senate a provision has been placed upon it increasing the pay of officers in the Army. It will be recalled that here in the House we put on a provision increasing the pay of the men in the Army. They have added to that in the Senate not only by increasing the pay of the men over and above that which was provided for in the House, but in addition thereto they have put on an amendment increasing the pay of the officers of the Army.

Mr. MADDEN. I wish to ask my colleague, the chairman of the committee, whether by the passage of this amendment he wishes to give notice to the Senate that we will accept the amendment which has been placed upon the Army bill in the Senate?

Mr. FOSS. No; not at all. This amendment simply states in so many words that the pay of the officers of the Navy shall be the same as the pay of the officers of corresponding rank in the Army, so that if the Senate amendment on the military bill does not go through it will not affect anything, and if it does go through, then it places the Navy just where the Army is. This amendment which I have introduced here is the same as the special bill which has been reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs unanimously, and is upon the House Calendar to-day.

Mr. MADDEN. Is the pay of the Army and the Navy the same to-day under the existing law?

Mr. FOSS. It is the same as to the active list.

Mr. MADDEN. If this amendment should be adopted, would it not then be anticipating an increase in the pay of the Navy because of the fact that the Senate has put on such an amendment on the House military bill as a rider?

Mr. FOSS. I do not know what the action of the House will be on the military bill. It is difficult to state what it will be, but I rather imagine that there will be an increase in the pay of the officers of the Army this year. What that increase will be I do not know; but, anyhow, by putting this amendment on the naval bill we will be in a position where the Navy will stand upon the same footing as the Army. In other words, it will go into conference, and if there is no increase in the pay of the officers in the Army, then, I can say to the gentleman, there will be no increase in the pay of the officers of the Navy.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman wish to convey to the House the information that if this amendment is adopted in this bill now it will go into conference?

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. He surely does not wish the House to believe that if this particular amendment goes into the bill at this time, and is approved by the Senate, that the conferees will have anything to do with it?

Mr. FOSS. I do not say that it will be approved by the Senate.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I would like to ask the gentleman to tell us if these lines in this proposed amendment—

That the pay of midshipmen, warrant officers, and paymasters' clerks shall be increased——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion of the gentleman is out of order.

Mr. PADGETT. Does the five-minute rule apply to a discussion pending the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is advised that the five-minute rule applies where the discussion is as to the merits of the proposition, but the five-minute rule does not apply in a discussion of a point of order.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read:

Insert on line 3, page 3, after the word "dollars:"

"That Navy bands or members thereof shall not receive remuneration for furnishing music outside the limits of military posts, when the furnishing of such music places them in competition with local civilian musicians."

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Chairman, on that I make a point of order.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I hope the gentleman will withhold his point of order for a minute.

Mr. MUDD. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, a provision identical to this was unanimously approved by the House the other day when the Army appropriation bill was under consideration. It was subject to a point of order then, and I am aware that it is subject to a point of order now, but I desire to explain for a few minutes the meaning of this amendment. The practice has grown up in this country to send out soldiers and permit them to compete with civilian laboring men. Especially is this true with regard to the bands. Members of military and naval bands will go out and take contracts for music, and in that way deprive the civilian musicians of the opportunity of making a living. It is quite natural that the competition is uneven and unfair, because the members of military and naval bands are furnished with sheet music, with instruments, with rations, with pay from the Government, while the civilian musician is obliged to pay for all these things out of his own pocket. And consequently I say the competition is an unfair one, and it is time that it be stopped. I hope that in the other House, where corrective legislation may be had, this matter may be taken into consideration.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Chairman, while the point of order is reserved, I would like to say one word in explanation of my making it. The Committee on Military Affairs has reported and the House has passed—in fact, if I am not mistaken, it is now in the law—a provision giving fair wages to the band at West Point. That has not been done as to the band at Annapolis, and until that is done I shall make the point of order as to any amendment of this character including them, and not consent to taking away from them the little opportunities that they have to get living wages in Annapolis or elsewhere in the community by extra and outside work.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Does the gentleman think it is fair to citizens engaged in private business, not supported by the Government, that the Government should permit men employed by it and paid regular wages to compete with them? Does the gentleman think that the Government, when it employs men as these are employed, and pays them money that is raised by taxes from the citizens, and when they are clothed and fed and kept by taxes collected from the citizens, should permit those men to go out into public and compete with the citizens in their customary business?

Mr. MUDD. Ordinarily not.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I do not think so, either, and I would like to correct it by legislation.

Mr. MUDD. When you come to this band at Annapolis, it does just as much work in the line of its duty as the band at West Point. As Congress has passed a law recently increasing the wages of those at West Point, and has refused thus far to do it for the Naval Academy band, I insist upon the point of order.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I am sorry the gentleman makes it. I would like to vote for the amendment, so as not to subject the private citizen to competition with the employee of the Government.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. I would like to ask the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MUDD] a question. I believe the gentleman is a member of the Naval Committee?

Mr. MUDD. I am.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Did not the gentleman have an opportunity to amend the bill by offering an amendment increasing the pay of the band at Annapolis?

Mr. MUDD. I would suggest to the gentleman that he might answer that by the experience he is just having, an experience that any other Member will have who offers an amendment to the naval bill that is subject to a point of order. If he will go back through the last several years and note how many times a proposition of this kind has been made and stricken out by point of order, and how many times provisions for better pay for the Naval Academy band have gone out in the same way, I think he will understand my position.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. In the case of the Army bill, Mr. Chairman, a provision was passed increasing the pay of the enlisted men, and at the same time stopping this unfair competition.

Mr. SLAYDEN. It would not have been out of order for the committee to have reported an increase of pay for them.

Mr. MUDD. It has been reported here for several years and it has never been able to get through. I insist on the point of order. I am looking out for the members of this one band in my own country. Make the amendment in such shape as not to apply to them and I shall not oppose it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The amendment is clearly obnoxious to the rule, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

PAY, MISCELLANEOUS.

For commissions and interest; transportation of funds; exchange; mileage to officers while traveling under orders in the United States, and for actual personal expenses of officers while traveling abroad under orders, and for traveling expenses of civilian employees, and for actual and necessary traveling expenses of midshipmen while proceeding from their homes to the Naval Academy for examination and appointment as midshipmen; for rent and furniture of buildings and offices not in navy-yards; expenses of courts-martial, prisoners and prisons, and courts of inquiry, boards of inspection, examining boards, with clerks' and witnesses' fees, and traveling expenses and costs; stationery and recording; expenses of purchasing paymasters' offices of the various cities, including clerks, furniture, fuel, stationery, and incidental expenses; newspapers and advertising; copying; care of library, including the purchase of books, photographs, prints, manuscripts, and periodicals; ferriage; tolls, and costs of suits; commissions, warrants, diplomas, and discharges; relief of vessels in distress; recovery of valuables from shipwrecks; quarantine expenses; reports; professional investigation; cost of special instruction at home and abroad, in maintenance of students and attachés and information from abroad, and the collection and classification thereof; all charges pertaining to the Navy Department and its bureaus for ice for the cooling of drinking water on shore (except at naval hospitals), telephone rentals and tolls, telegrams, cablegrams, and postage, foreign and domestic, post-office box rentals; and other necessary and incidental expenses, $723,000.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of calling the attention of the committee to a matter that has been of considerable interest to the Committee on Naval Affairs. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr DAWSON] Saturday called attention to the cumbersome methods of administration and to the necessity of reformation in the Department. Here is an illustration, and your committee has attempted, by the italicized words of the section just read, to remedy to some extent the evil of extravagance of administration. I desire to call attention to a statement of Admiral Rogers as found in his hearing on pages 49 and 50, which I read, as follows:

In the case, for instance, of telephone service for any particular yard, one contract is made with the telephone company for a switchboard, use of trunk line, so many telephones, etc. The amount of this contract must be prorated among the nine departments, necessitating nine vouchers, where otherwise one would answer.

Again, take the item of telegrams. Under the present system each yard submits nine requisitions (one for each Bureau and the Secretary's office). There are two telegraph companies, and each month or quarter—depending upon whether the companies render monthly or quarterly bills—there are eighteen sets of vouchers to be prepared by the general storekeeper at the yard and forwarded for payment. The same laborious process exists with regard to all requisitions for ice.

At present, requisitions and vouchers for telephones, telegrams, and ice are about 2,350 annually, and under the new plan they would be about 270. The number of requisitions for postage, being submitted for small quantities of stamps as needed, would not be materially affected. This proposition would much reduce paper work and result in a corresponding saving of time and expenses in all yards, pay offices, in the bureaus, and the office of the Auditor.

The accompanying statements "C" and "D" show a close estimate of the amounts paid from the appropriations of the various bureaus for telephone rentals, telegraph charges, and postage, also for ice, during the fiscal year 1907. These aggregate $48,000, made up of $38,000 for telephones, etc., and $10,000 for ice, which, added to the $675,000 appropriated under "Pay, Miscellaneous, 1908," makes the amount estimated, viz, $723,000, and the various bureau appropriations which have borne these charges can be justly reduced accordingly.

The words "foreign postage; telegraphing, foreign and domestic; telephones" and "and express fees," appearing in the various parts of the appropriation for 1908, should accordingly be eliminated, and again inserted in a single item with the wording so amplified as to cover all charges of this character for the naval establishment for the reasons stated.

Now, I want to call attention to a statement on page 59 of the Admiral's hearing, as follows:

Admiral ROGERS. If by trouble you mean friction, there is none; if you mean cumbersome methods, there is plenty. I will give you an example and will take a yard with which I am most familiar—my last duty. We have an increase of the navy account, a common general stock account, and a naval supply fund account. These are in loose-leafed ledgers, with a page 10 by 12 inches, and about 200 to 250 pages to the book. There were between 150 and 200 of those books in which to keep account of stock under three separate heads. It is a cumbersome method of bookkeeping.

Why do we need three accounts? Why not transfer all to the naval supply fund? Why not have one set of books instead of three sets—all parallel?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] asks unanimous consent for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PADGETT. I will read further:

I need not tell you gentlemen that the cost is great. It means more clerks, more stationery, more books, and more time. What reason can there be for the enumeration of one item several times? It does not cost so much money to keep an account of 100,000 pounds of bar iron under the naval supply fund as it does to keep 33,000 pounds in each of three separate accounts.

The Admiral made the astonishing statement that the average cost of each voucher was $10. Here we have the statement that the ice, telephone, and postage cost $48,000, and that it required 2,350 requisitions or vouchers each year. He also says:

It is the clerical work on requisitions, contracts, vouchers, and things of that kind which cost money. It has been estimated in previous years that each one of our vouchers in the Navy cost about $10 on the whole. That is about $700,000 a year in the clerical work culminating in vouchers. Of course that includes also all work that leads up to them.

So that in expenditures for a little fund of $48,000 it costs $23,500 for clerical services. I simply call the attention of the House to that, in order to show the duplication and the cumbersome methods and the antiquated processes that prevail. I call attention to the method of bookkeeping—150 to 200 books in which three parallel accounts are kept of all items of purchase and expenditure.

Now, I am glad to say that the Committee on Naval Affairs have been giving their careful and serious consideration to this matter. I recognize and you doubtless will do so, that it is impossible to convert in a day or in a month or a year, perhaps, processes that have accumulated in years. We have the assurance of Admiral Rogers and also of Mr. Newberry, Assistant Secretary of the Navy Department, that the Department is taking up these matters for consideration and improvement. They have assured us by the next year they hope to have a plan to submit that will materially and radically change this system for the better. I call the attention of Congress to this, in order to call to their minds what the committee is doing and the necessity of improving, very radically, the methods of work along that line. [Applause.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Contingent, Navy: For all emergencies and extraordinary expenses, exclusive of personal services in the Navy Department, or any of its subordinate bureaus or offices at Washington, D. C., arising at home or abroad, but impossible to be anticipated or classified, to be expended on the approval and authority of the Secretary of the Navy, and for such purposes as he may deem proper, $65,000: Provided, That the accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to allow, in the settlement of accounts of disbursing officers involved, payments made under the appropriation "Contingent, Navy," to civilian employees appointed by the Navy Department for duty in and serving at naval stations maintained in the island possessions during the fiscal year 1909.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that paragraph. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee if this is not new language and a new disposition of the funds appropriated.

Mr. FOSS. It is not. It has been in identically the same language for years.

Mr. SLAYDEN. What is it for?

Mr. FOSS. "Contingent."

Mr. SLAYDEN. It says, speaking of civilian employees:

In the settlement of accounts of disbursing officers involved, payments made under the appropriation "Contingent, Navy," to civilian employees appointed by the Navy Department for duty in and serving at naval stations maintained in the island possessions during the fiscal year 1909.

Mr. FOSS. They are employed in the Philippines. A few civilian employees are employed under this appropriation.

Mr. SLAYDEN. It is not new legislation?

Mr. FOSS. It is not new legislation at all.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF NAVIGATION.

Transportation: For travel allowance of enlisted men discharged on account of expiration of enlistment; transportation of enlisted men and apprentice seamen at home and abroad, with subsistence and transfers en route, or cash in lieu thereof, transportation to their homes, if residents of the United States, of enlisted men and apprentice seamen discharged on medical survey, with subsistence and transfers en route, or cash in lieu thereof; transportation of sick or insane enlisted men and apprentice seamen to hospitals, with subsistence and transfers en route, or cash in lieu thereof; apprehension and delivery of deserters and stragglers, and for railway guides and other expenses incident to transportation, $475,000.

Mr. KELIHER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On line 25, page 4, after the word "enlistment," insert the words "and for the following reasons: Sentence of summary or general court-martial, inaptitude, unfitness for the service, illegal enlistment, undesirability, Executive order, or for such other reasons as may be determined upon by the Secretary of the Navy."

Also, on line 11, page 5, strike out the words "four hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars" and insert in lieu thereof the words "five hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars."

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that amendment.

Mr. KELIHER. Will the gentleman reserve his point of order?

Mr. FOSS. I will reserve it for five minutes only.

Mr. KELIHER. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is offered for the purpose of remedying a crying evil in the naval service of which the committee must be well aware. Under existing conditions to-day men who have served sentences in naval prisons when discharged therefrom are turned loose upon the streets in a great majority of cases without a single penny in their pockets. This also holds true of men discharged from the service because of unfitness, inaptitude, and because they have been found undesirable. These men are frequently discharged at places far removed from the location of their enlistment, penniless and desperate. There are no other paths open to them but those that lead to crime or mendicancy. Destitute in a strange city, miles away from their homes and friends, they fall an easy victim to temptation and recruit the ranks of criminals. Cities in which are located naval prisons bear the burden of the trouble and demand that some steps be taken by Congress to remove from their midst these unfortunates who, in a large per cent of cases, have homes elsewhere and have been recruited in far-off stations.

The chairman of the committee knows that the Secretary of the Navy has made a strong plea for authority which will permit him to remedy this evil. If the comparatively small sum which my amendment carries is added to the appropriation for transportation, and the chairman does not press his point of order, it will be possible for the Navy Department to care for these men by sending them back to the places of their enlistment, thus ridding communities of the duty of caring for an unwholesome class, the existence of which they are not in the slightest responsible for.

The Secretary of the Navy feels strongly upon the subject, as his letter to the committee will attest. In an endeavor to have done what my amendment will do, Secretary Metcalf wrote under date of March 18:

The condition which exists at present is one that has long been a source of embarrassment to the Department, but which it has been unable to relieve. The sentence imposed in most cases by general court-martial allows for the payment to the prisoner of the sum of $20 upon his discharge, provided he has it due him.

In view of the entirely inadequate prison facilities, the Department has been compelled to discharge many men before the term of confinement has half expired; frequently they are in debt to the Government when sent to prison, and as his indebtedness must be worked off before a prisoner can begin to draw pay to his own credit, the length of time which these men remain in prison is not sufficient for their accumulated pay to satisfy their indebtedness to the Government and also to entitle them to the $20 allotted upon discharge by the sentence of the court. As a result, many of the men are discharged practically penniless, and as there is at present no provision of law by which they may be furnished civilian apparel, they are released with the clothing they wore when admitted to the prison—in most cases their uniform.

This letter of Secretary Metcalf to the committee, praying for relief which has not been granted, was inspired by reports received from officers of the service who come in contact with the unfortunates who are discarded from the service. From practical experience these officers realize the need of such action as I propose. Rear-Admiral Swift, recently in command at the Boston Navy-Yard, forwarded to Secretary Metcalf this communication, which offers ample reason why the chairman should not press his point of order, but should join with me in providing relief from a disgraceful condition of affairs.

UNITED STATES NAVY-YARD,
Boston, Mass., March 14, 1908.

SIR: On January 15 I forwarded a letter from the commanding officer of the Wabash, with an indorsement, in which certain usages in connection with the discharge of general court-martial prisoners were discussed. The whole letter shows a condition of affairs which must be a cause of solicitude to the Navy Department, as it is to me. As a result of the existing conditions, general court-martial prisoners are sometimes discharged in Boston without money and with Navy uniforms for clothing, and there is much unfavorable comment on the part of civilians, much criticism of the naval authorities here, and much discredit cast upon the uniform of the enlisted man.

Within two or three days I have been interviewed upon this matter by several people—to-day by Bishop Lawrence, of Massachusetts. He was very guarded in what he said; but the impression made by the present state of things is very unfortunate, and the people who are brought directly in contact with these discharged prisoners, who find them in destitute circumstances and hear their stories, show considerable temper in discussing the situation. They also feel that the Government is unloading upon Boston and the vicinity a responsibility which does not belong to them.

Paragraph 8 of the above-mentioned letter from Captain Nazro states that a number of these men have joined the lower criminal class in the city, and several instances have occurred in which they, in company with others of such class, have waylaid enlisted men on their way to and from the navy-yard and robbed them of money and clothing. They have also been begging in uniform about the streets of the city. Instances of this last kind have occurred within a few days.

It appears to me that provision should be made by law, if necessary, and immediately, if possible, to provide all discharged court-martial prisoners with suits of plain clothes, making some rule by which their outside uniform clothes shall be sold, so that they may not appear after discharge in the uniform of the Navy; also that upon discharge they should be supplied with transportation, being put on board a train to take them in the direction of their homes and sufficiently far from Boston to make their return here improbable. In most cases a ticket costing from $5 to $10 would take them from Boston home.

As a number of rulings have been made by the Treasury Department which prevent the execution of the sentences of court-martial in regard to the allotment of $3 per month for prison expenses, also that ordinary provision giving them $20 upon discharge, it might be advisable to provide the prisons with a printed statement showing precisely what court-martial prisoners under different conditions may expect. Much of the unfavorable criticism now heard results from discharged prisoners showing the terms of their sentences, with a statement that they have not received the money to which they are entitled, and they leave the prison with a distinct suspicion that they have not been justly treated and make statements to this effect after leaving the navy-yard.

Very respectfully,

WM. SWIFT,
Rear-Admiral, United States Navy, Commandant.

The SECRETARY OF THE NAVY,
Washington, D. C.

Bishop Lawrence, of Massachusetts, has added his powerful voice to the appeal for relief and not without knowledge of conditions. This distinguished churchman, whose practical and effective work for the uplifting of the unfortunates of the city of Boston entitles him to marked consideration in a matter of this nature, says:

DIOCESE OF MASSACHUSETTS,
OFFICE OF THE BISHOP,
1 Joy street, Boston, March 14, 1908.

The SECRETARY OF THE NAVY,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: I take the liberty of forwarding to you the inclosed letter, which has come to me from the superintendent of our sailors' work in Charlestown. As you will see, he is accustomed to speak in rather lively language. It is, however, I understand, a fact that men in the uniform of the United States Navy are discharged from the prison without money with which to get away from the city. There is this evil, too: That they naturally group together and influence each other badly. If, in addition to supplying them with citizens' clothes, arrangements could be made for distributing them separately through the country, it would be an advantage to the service as well as to the men.

No doubt this subject has come before you before, but I take the liberty of sending this letter on with this line from myself, which you need not take the trouble to acknowledge.

I remain yours, respectfully, WM. LAWRENCE.

(P. O. address, 122 Commonwealth avenue.)

SAILOR'S HAVEN, 46 WATER STREET,
Charlestown, Mass., March 13, 1908.

Right Rev. WILLIAM LAWRENCE, D. D., Boston, Mass.

MY DEAR BISHOP LAWRENCE: During the past few days several enlisted men of the Navy have been discharged from the prison in the Charlestown Navy-Yard entirely destitute of money. These men are wearing the uniform of the Navy. Some of them have come to me to beg for a night's lodging, and it does seem to me that there is something radically wrong. Court-martial sentences read that these prisoners are to receive $20 from the Government at the expiration of their confinement. I would beg of you to find out from Washington what becomes of this $20 that these prisoners are supposed to have. I am told that it is used for prison expenses, such as writing material, towels, etc. If the sentence reads that they are to have $20 at the expiration of their term, who has the authority to advance this money to the men so that when they are discharged they are so absolutely destitute? Again, I would ask that something be done so that these men when discharged from the naval prison shall be given a suit of civilian clothes. It is a disgrace to the uniform to have men thrown on the street begging assistance wearing the Government uniform. I am now helping some of these men, sheltering and feeding them, and I believe that were you to take it up with the Secretary of the Navy something would be done for them.

I am also informed that the citizens are not allowed to purchase the uniform from these ex-naval prisoners, and therefore the men have no resource whatever in getting a new start. A man discharged from the State prison is treated with more consideration than a man from the naval prison.

STANTON H. KING.

Mr. Chairman, there are naval prisons located at Boston, Portsmouth, N. H., Mare Island, Puget Sound, and at New York Navy-Yard a small number of prisoners who are awaiting trial are held. In Boston is located the second largest prison, and that city suffers great abuse from this inexplicable, unjustifiable system.

This statement, showing number of prisoners discharged from naval prison at Boston, Mass., and the places from which they hail, during the six months ended March 31, 1908, furnishes an idea of what we have to contend with:

Mr. Chairman, it must be apparent to all that the inevitable result of opening the doors of a prison to so many men, precipitating them upon the streets, penniless and friendless, that only one of a few means of keeping from starving is open to them. They must beg, steal, starve, or throw themselves upon public charity, for the door to employment is closed to a stranger in a strange city fresh from prison. That crimes have been traced to the desperate former inmates of these naval prisons our court records will show. That my State is put to the burden of caring for many of them, this letter and accompanying statements prove conclusively:

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS,
STATE BOARD OF CHARITY,
DIVISION OF STATE ADULT POOR,
Boston, April 11, 1908.

Hon. JOHN A. KELIHER, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN: It has been a source of annoyance to this office and an apparent injustice to the Commonwealth for quite a period of years, but more markedly the past two years, from the applications of discharged prisoners, not only from the Charlestown Navy-Yard, but also from that at Portsmouth. These men come into our office almost invariably wearing the uniform of the United States Navy, having been directed here by the police or philanthropic citizens, absolutely penniless, and in very many cases not having had food for at least twenty-four hours, requesting transportation to their homes.

Investigation by my officers at the proper sources substantiate their statements that they were practically turned out upon the streets of Boston by the United States Government to starve, beg, or steal. I have found quite a number of these cases in the prison department of our State farm as vagrants, having been sentenced from our courts for begging and tramping. The statute provides for this offense a two-year indeterminate sentence, but under the rules of our board nine months is the minimum time they must serve.

You will recall my interview with you last summer at your office in Boston, accompanied by one of these discharged and penniless prisoners. I have made many appeals to the naval authorities in Boston to remedy this seeming injustice, but without avail.

The Commonwealth of Massachusetts has spent quite a good many hundreds of dollars for the transportation of these men to their homes in various parts of our country.

I inclose herewith, as typical of these cases, a copy of the investigation made by my officers in three of them. I trust that your efforts to remedy this great wrong to the discharged prisoner and the apparent injustice to the Commonwealth will meet with success.

Assuring you of my distinguished consideration and holding myself in readiness to assist you in any way you may suggest, I remain,

Yours, very truly,

J. F. LEWIS,
Superintendent.

BOSTON, March 22, 1907.

J. F. LEWIS, M. D.,
Superintendent State Adult Poor.

DEAR SIR: I herewith submit report in the case of Henry S. Pruette, who requests transportation to his home in Dubbs, Miss.

Henry S. Pruette, aged 22 years, born in Dubbs, Miss., single. Served in the Marine Corps. Enlisted in Memphis, Tenn., September 24, 1905, for four years; refused duty; court-martialed March 24, 1906, in Cuba; was sent within three days to Charlestown, and served eleven months and ten days on a two years' sentence; discharged from marine barracks, Charlestown Navy-Yard, March 21, 1907, at 1:30 p. m., but he remained there overnight. He applied to the mayor's office, city of Boston, for help, and was referred to you. Has lived in Dubbs, Miss., practically all of his life. Parents, William D. Pruette and Margaret M., nee Bass, born in Salisbury, Tenn. Mother deceased. Father now living in Dubbs, Miss.; owns real estate and does nothing but look after his property. Applicant has no relatives in the East. No funds.

Respectfully,

F. W. GOODHUE,
Deputy Superintendent.

BOSTON, March 7, 1907.

J. F. LEWIS, M. D.,
Superintendent State Adult Poor.

DEAR SIR: In regard to the application of Lee Estes, alias Luther Eptersen, for transportation from Boston to Pittsburg, Pa.; also of Romeo Landy, alias Frank Charles, for transportation to New York City, I would make the following report:

Lee Estes, 19 years of age, said to have been born at Pittsburg, Pa.; his parents never resided in Massachusetts. He enlisted in the United States Navy in Boston as ordinary seaman, January 10, 1906, had previously enlisted in the State of Florida and deserted; was identified and brought before court-martial, convicted, and placed in prison brig of the U. S. S. Wabash of the Charlestown Navy-Yard; was given a dishonorable discharge and released March 5, 1907. Discharge says man had been overpaid to the amount of $11.30, and, further, it appeared on the paper that no travel allowance had been paid. Applicant says that the only money he received when released was $4.20, paid to him by the officer in charge of the marines, whose duty it was to guard prisoners.

Romeo Landy, alias Frank Charles; 19 years; born Manville, R. I.; to New York City with parents when a child and there until he enlisted in the Navy, October 30, 1906, as an apprentice seaman; his parents both dead; no residence in Massachusetts. Only relative is a sister, who resides in New York City. Applicant was court-martialed and committed to prison brig on U. S. S. Wabash and was confined there until March 5, 1907, when he was given a dishonorable discharge and released; discharge says man was overpaid to amount of $6.78 and no travel allowance paid. He received from the officer of the marine guard 10c. Estes paid from $4.20 which he received $3 to friend who advanced this amount for tobacco, so that when applicants left the navy-yard at Charlestown at 3 p. m., March 5, they had about $1.30 in their possession. Landy had received from sister in New York a suit of civilian's clothes; Estes appeared in uniform more in keeping with summer weather.

They made application to this board for transportation to their former homes same day.

Visitor called upon Lieutenant Taylor, executive officer of the U. S. S. Wabash, who stated that these men, having been court-martialed and convicted, were placed in the prison brig and by the rules of the Navy Department they would be entitled to receive 10 cents per day, or about $3 per month, from the Government for prison expense. When released they would be allowed $20; but if the prisoners were indebted to the Government at the time of their release the amount of such indebtedness would be deducted from the sum of money above mentioned, and nothing should be allowed if the amount to be given was not sufficient to liquidate debt of prisoner to the Department. He stated that he was unable to grant any relief to Estes and Landy, and said that he was simply following the instructions issued by the Department at Washington.

This Department sent Landy to New York and Estes to Pittsburg, Pa., on March 6, 1907.

Respectfully submitted.

W. J. HINCHCLIFFE.

Mr. Chairman, I trust that the chairman of the Naval Committee will not press his point of order. I want to assure him that in offering this amendment I do so after going over the subject fully and carefully with Admiral Pillsbury, Chief of the Bureau of Navigation. I arrived at the amount after computing the number of discharges from the Navy for 1907, which would come under the provisions of my amendment, which amounted to 2,005.

Upon the advice of the Bureau of Navigation I took Chicago as the mean distance for transportation, that being the center of enlistment, and figured $25 as the average cost, which would bring the approximate total that would be required up to $50,000. There is a time and a way to provide a much-needed remedy, and this is the time and this the way, if there is a disposition to do so. I will be told that the subject ought to be treated in a separate bill, but I answer by stating that the matter is of too much importance and is too imperative to be staved off by any such argument.

Of late we have heard the glories of the Navy sung in ringing tones, and brilliant orators have vied with each other in painting glowing word pictures of the splendor and patriotism that attach to the service, but it is well to give at least a cursory glance at the seamy side of the life and a stray thought to its humanity. By granting the wish of the Department, and providing it with the authority and means to send the unfortunates of the service back to their homes, to their friends, probably to get a fresh start in life, many a human derelict may be rescued. With this thought in mind, I beg of the chairman not to insist upon his point of order. [Applause.]

Mr. FOSS. I will state that there may be more or less merit in the statement of the gentleman from Massachusetts, but it has not come before the committee in the form in which he presents it. There have been bills introduced relating to this subject which have the approval of the Secretary of the Navy and are now under consideration by one of the subcommittees of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and in view of that situation I shall insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order on the first amendment. The Clerk will report the second amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Also, on line 11, page 5, strike out the words "four hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars" and insert in lieu thereof the words "five hundred and twenty-five thousand dollars."

Mr. KELIHER. Mr. Chairman, in view of the attitude of the chairman of the committee, I withdraw that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the amendment will be withdrawn.

The Clerk read as follows:

Recruiting: Expenses of recruiting for the naval service; rent of rendezvous and expenses of maintaining the same; advertising for and obtaining men and apprentice seamen; actual and necessary expenses in lieu of mileage to officers on duty with traveling recruiting parties, $130,000: Provided, That no part of this apropriation shall be expended in recruiting seamen, ordinary seamen, or apprentice seamen, unless a certificate of birth or written evidence, other than his own statement or statement of another based thereon, satisfactory to the recruiting officer showing the applicant to be of age required by naval regulations, shall be presented with the application for enlistment.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do that for the purpose of asking the chairman whether or not the amount carried in this appropriation for recruiting in the naval service is the same amount that has been heretofore carried in the provision for this purpose. It has been stated on the floor to-day that the matter of recruiting has been much easier of late than it has heretofore been. I presume that is on account of the vast number of men unemployed at the present time, and if that be true, I would like to have the chairman state whether this sum is necessary for the purpose, and whether it is the same amount heretofore carried in the appropriation bill for that purpose?

Mr. FOSS. It is an increase of $8,660, and that is due to the fact that the Navy Department intends to establish two more recruiting stations, and also to the fact that we are providing for the enlistment of 6,000 more men. In consequence of those two things it will require an additional expense.

Mr. ADAIR. I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Outfits on first enlistment: Outfits for all enlisted men, and apprentice seamen of the Navy on first enlistment, at not to exceed $60 each, $900,000: Provided, That hereafter the Secretary of the Navy may, in his discretion, require the whole or a part of the cost of outfits allowed upon enlistment to be refunded in cases where men are discharged during the first six months of enlistment for any cause other than disability incurred in line of duty: Provided, That hereafter such refunds shall revert to the current appropriation for outfits on first enlistment.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order to these two provisos. I do not know whether I will press the point of order or not. My purpose is to ascertain the reason for the distinction between the character of those who are discharged, making an exception of that class who are discharged for disability incurred in the line of duty. I direct the attention of the chairman to the first proviso and the exception at the end, "for any cause other than disability incurred in the line of duty."

Mr. FOSS. Of course, if he has been disabled in the line of duty, they do not want the money back. He is discharged in consequence of that. But if he is discharged for any other reason—that is, for misconduct or negligence or anything of that sort, or for some other reason—they might insist on the money back.

Mr. STAFFORD. The effect of the provision is to exact from a recruit if he is discharged within six months, the amount of money that has been advanced to him.

Mr. FOSS. Yes; it is left to the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy. When he is enlisted he gets $60 for his outfit. Very often after six months or a year he wants to get out, and the Government has invested so much money in him, and the Secretary of the Navy under this provision of the law can exact a return of the money. He enlists for four years and then he wants to get out, and it is no more than right that he should refund this advance payment.

Mr. STAFFORD. When he withdraws from service within six months, to whom does the clothing belong, the Government or the recruit?

Mr. FOSS. The clothing, or that which has been used, of course belongs to the recruit and he takes it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then I would like to direct the gentleman's attention further as to the need of the second proviso; whether it would not require an additional accounting system if this refund is turned back into the appropriation for that purpose?

Mr. FOSS. No; I do not think so. It did not so appear in the hearings.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the second proviso was not included, would not the money revert to the Treasury?

Mr. FOSS. The money would go into the Treasury, but in view of the fact that we appropriate the money for the special purpose, keeping track of the total amount for naval establishment, it is much better that what we do not use shall go to the credit of this outfit.

Mr. STAFFORD. Attention has been called in the consideration of other appropriation bills to the fact that where a separate fund is provided for money that reverts to that fund, considerable additional expense is incurred in order to keep track of it and keep the accounts.

I think, Mr. Chairman, unless there is some special reason why the second proviso should be inserted that I shall insist upon my point of order. As to the first proviso, I will withdraw it.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I will renew the point of order to the first proviso. I do it because of the fact that under this proviso one who enlists in the Navy may incur a disability by accident, through no fault of his own, and the Secretary of the Navy would have the power to require him at any time within six months to return the amount of money advanced to him. Or he may be unable to acquire the habit of the sea. He may be constitutionally unable to become a seaman. He may work five months in the Navy and not acquire the sea habit and be discharged and penalized therefor. If the gentleman would amend the proviso authorizing the Secretary of the Navy in his discretion to require the advance to be refunded in cases where men are discharged within six months on account of misconduct, I would have no objection to it.

Mr. FOSS. A boy enlists in the Navy, and three months after he gets in he desires to get out because it is not what he expected it to be, and the Government has invested $60 advance in that enlistment. Does the gentleman think that a part of that sum ought to be refunded to the Government?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. How can the boy get out?

Mr. KEIFER. Through the Secretary of the Navy or the President.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The Secretary of the Navy does not need to release him. The proposition suggested by the gentleman is not a sufficient reason for the incorporation in this bill of this proviso vesting in the Secretary of the Navy such power over men, innocent men, who may be discharged on account of disabilities that come to them in social life outside of the service altogether; men who might have to be discharged on account of sickness—on account of ptomaine poisoning, for instance, contracted by eating ice cream at a church social. I understand that officers and enlisted men in the Navy occasionally engage in social pleasures. The proviso is too broad. Unless the gentleman will limit it to discharges on account of misconduct I will insist on the point of order. Often in undertaking to remedy some abuse we make it a good deal worse, and do a good deal more mischief by the proposed remedy than we can possibly do good by the legislation.

Mr. FOSS. I will say that this is purely in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I do not care. I am here partly to prevent discretionary power in departmental officers where it can be avoided, and I insist on the point of order as to the first proviso.

Mr. MACON. I want to say to the gentleman before he takes his seat that I am informed by the Naval Department that there is no chance to have a young man who has enlisted in the naval service released from that service until after the first year of the service, unless it is discovered that he is physically unfit for the service, but after one year of service, then the Secretary of the Navy, within his discretion, can release him from further service on payment of so much money for his unexpired term of enlistment. I have forgotten just what the amount is. Therefore the gentleman's position is very tenable when he insists that he ought not to be required to return any part of the money when discharged before the expiration of his enlistment unless he is discharged because of bad conduct on his part.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I insist on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order on both provisos. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ordnance and ordnance stores: For procuring, producing, preserving, and handling ordnance material; for the armament of ships; for fuel, material, and labor to be used in the general work of the Ordnance Department; for watchmen at magazines, powder factories, and powder depots; for furniture in ordnance buildings at navy-yards and stations; for maintenance of the proving ground and powder factory, and for target practice, $4,500,000: Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for the purchase of shells or projectiles except for shells or projectiles purchased in accordance with the terms and conditions of proposals submitted by the Secretary of the Navy to all of the manufacturers of shells and projectiles and upon bids received in accordance with the terms and requirements of such proposals. All shells and projectiles shall conform to the standard prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois, chairman of the committee, as to the extent to which the Government manufactures powder for use in the Navy.

Mr. FOSS. I will state to the gentleman that we have not reached that point in the bill. It comes a little later.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I thought there was an item in here for powder.

Mr. FOSS. It comes over a little further. We do manufacture powder. I think last year we manufactured 1,047,000 pounds.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What proportion does that bear to the total amount consumed?

Mr. FOSS. We purchased 2,000,000 pounds—about one-third.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Manufactured about one-third. How does the cost of manufacture by the Government compare with the purchase price when bought of a private concern?

Mr. FOSS. We pay 67 cents a pound, and it costs to manufacture 47 cents a pound. Of course, that does not take into consideration the construction of the plant and the cost of the plant.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Has the gentleman brought in any measure here to manufacture a larger proportion in Government factories, inasmuch as the gentleman has shown that it costs 20 cents a pound less to manufacture by the Government than to purchase it?

Mr. FOSS. I do not think it costs any less, as a matter of fact, if we take into consideration the cost of the plant and the appropriations made every year in order to maintain the plant; but I would say that the price of powder is fixed by a Joint Army and Navy Board and it is regarded by that board as being a fair and reasonable price.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The gentleman means the price for the purchase?

Mr. FOSS. The purchase of powder.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. In the market?

Mr. FOSS. In the market.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I understand that the Army appropriation bill during this session provides that all powder used in the Army shall be manufactured by the Government, it having been demonstrated that the cost is so much less.

Mr. FOSS. I was not aware of that fact.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. And if the experience of the Government in this naval manufacture is that it costs one-third less, then it seems to me there ought to be some provision that all the powder for the Navy should be manufactured in the Government factories.

Mr. FOSS. The Navy Department, I think, are under the opinion that it costs about as much to manufacture as it does to buy it of a private concern, when you come to take into consideration the expense of the plant and the appropriations that are made for it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I understood the gentleman to say there was 33 per cent difference between the cost in favor of Government-made powder.

Mr. FOSS. That is simply for labor, and that does not take into consideration the cost of the plant or interest——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But taking into consideration the interest on the plant, what would the showing be?

Mr. FOSS. The showing would be practically the same.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Has the gentleman any figures?

Mr. FOSS. The joint Army and Navy board—I will refer the gentleman to the report——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Well, can the gentleman state how much is invested in the Government plant for the manufacture of powder?

Mr. FOSS. I can not state the full amount without looking it up.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It seems to me that where there is such an astonishing difference in the price paid and the cost of the manufacture, Mr. Chairman, in favor of Government manufacture that some figures should be presented to the committee—some information given. There is a very large margin of difference, 33 per cent, in favor of Government manufacture.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I want to say——

Mr. FOSS. Right in this connection, if the gentleman from Texas will excuse me, I want to read——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Texas yield?

Mr. SLAYDEN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. FOSS. If the gentleman will proceed, I will recur to this later on.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman from Nebraska that the question of the manufacture of powder for the Army by the Government was gone into very carefully, both before and during the session at which we established a Government powder factory. It was considered by the committee, and the House coincided in that view, that we should have a factory, not with the idea of manufacturing all the powder that the Government might require, because that would take too much of an investment, but simply to determine justly and intelligently as to prices. It was not thought desirable by the committee to do anything that would have a tendency to put the private manufacturers of powder out of business. It is conceivable that the country might be confronted by a situation when it would be necessary for the protection of the country that we should have private manufacturers on whom to draw for additional and for surplus supplies. For that reason, after having carefully considered the matter, the committee decided that they would not authorize or recommend the authorization of a plant so extensive as to manufacture all the powder required by the Government for actual current use and for the accumulation of a surplus. The difference in price between that manufactured by the Government and that the private manufacturers charge the Government is not as great as appears upon the surface. The cost of administration figures in that manufactured by private plants. The administration of the Government plant is not figured on in estimating the cost of the product as it must be in private establishments.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas seems familiar with this subject, and I would like to ask him what amount of money the Government has invested in the plant?

Mr. SLAYDEN. My recollection is $300,000, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Then, if the Government by an investment of only $300,000 in a very small plant is able to compete with this giant powder trust, which is manufacturing on a large scale, and in competition with which the Government is able to manufacture its powder 33 per cent less than the price it pays upon the open market, it seems to me it is about time either that the Government reduce the price that it is paying for powder or that it manufacture all that it requires. That is a self-evident proposition.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I will say to my friend I am not familiar with the current market quotations of powder, but there was a reduction at the time of the establishment of the Government plant; but the plant of the Government is not so small as the gentleman seems to think. Fortunately the Government owned a very large and an entirely suitable piece of property up in Pennsylvania, a property of great value, a property possessing peculiar and attractive topographical and physical qualities for the establishment of such a plant.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I wish to say to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], if I can have his attention, that the Government, on the recommendation of Secretary Long, about the time of the Spanish war, established an experimental Government smokeless-powder manufactory down here somewhere——

Mr. SLAYDEN. At Indianhead.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. At Indianhead. I think Congress put $10,000 in the experiment, and the reason why that distinguished and very able Secretary, Mr. Long, recommended this improvement was to get the Government of the United States out of the jaws of this powder trust, to get a better quality of powder, and get more powder than the Government was able to get without this Government plant. I recall that about this time an Army officer at one of our posts informed me that some of the powder we were being sold was "rotten," would not carry to the target, and that it was just as liable to shoot into the ground as elsewhere, and so forth. The RECORD will show what I said when I had this advice fresh in mind.

And I remember, Mr. Chairman, standing right within 10 feet of where I am now standing, I was first, or among the first, to challenge that report to the consideration of Congress, and if you will refer to the RECORD along about that time you will see what I then said, urging the building of this factory. During such time as I could possibly devote to the matter, I have tried to investigate this question, and I had a letter on the subject from Secretary Metcalf in my hand less than twenty minutes ago to bring it here to-day, but came off and left it in my office, having picked up the wrong paper in my hurry to the House. I am going to ask to put the letters that I have from the Secretary of the Navy and this naval board to which the gentleman alludes in the RECORD. My recollection is, and, of course, if I am incorrect this table will correct me, that the time Secretary Long made that recommendation, say 1897 or 1898, about the time the American Congress said, "We will start our own manufactory," we were paying about $1 a pound for powder. And the gentleman now says, and the fact is, as I remember it, we are paying about 67 cents. So that, notwithstanding our great country is in the jaws of this smokeless-powder monopoly, we have reduced it with this little infant Government factory from the oppressive rate of about $1 down to about 67 cents.

Mr. Chairman, I am going to ask the chairman who reports this bill from whom we now buy the 66⅔ per cent of powder we do not make? What concern or concerns?

Mr. FOSS. The Dupont.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Is not the Dupont concern to-day enjoined by the Federal courts of Delaware and New Jersey under the charge that it is a monopoly engaged in restraint of Federal commerce? Of course, that is true, Mr. Chairman, and only Saturday I read in the paper that the Department of Justice, that has charge of the suit, whether rightfully or wrongfully filed, has asked for four, instead of one, Federal judge to sit in that case—Judge Gray, Judge Dallas, who tried on the circuit the sugar trust case, Judge Buffington, and another judge's name I do not recall.

Now, gentlemen, we have reduced the cost of powder from $1, about the price that was maintained during the Spanish war, down to 67 cents, with an investment, I believe, as the gentleman says, of about $300,000 in a Government powder factory. And yet, on the other hand, we are buying the balance of our powder from whom? We are obliged to buy two-thirds of the powder from a monopoly that the great Government is to-day seeking to chain up and make obey the law and stop holding up the Federal Government with its monopolistic vices. It is a most pitiable and awful condition, Mr. Chairman, that the Government is in, even in time of peace, and yet when the Spanish war broke out we were in a worse condition, because then we had no powder factory and were paying about $1 a pound in order to get powder to carry on the Spanish war.

Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether or not the Dupont concern is an unlawful monopoly. My honest opinion is that it is a monopoly engaged in restraint of Federal commerce. That is my honest judgment. When the great Supreme Court of this country says it is not, Mr. Chairman, then, of course, I will submit to the judgment of that great tribunal, but until then I will stand here, as I have for twelve years, charging what I honestly believe, namely, that it is a monopoly engaged not only in the restraint of trade, but by its monopolistic prices restraining the military and naval arms of this Government in their great warfare to set up the Stars and Stripes in fair Cuba and drive the enemy from American borders.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to place the tables to which I have referred, from Secretary Metcalf, in the RECORD for the information of Congress.

The letters referred to by Mr. GAINES of Tennessee read as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, February 7, 1908.

SIR: Referring to your letter of January 31, 1908, requesting certain information regarding the cost of powder purchased from private firms, etc.

1. From 1893 until 1899, during which years practically all the brown powder ever supplied the Navy was obtained, 5,953,118 pounds of brown powder were purchased from private manufacturers, which firms were either a part of the Dupont Powder Company, or, probably, had working agreements with this firm. The price of this powder fluctuated slightly, but the average price throughout these years was 32 cents per pound. The Government manufactured during these years no brown powder whatever.

2. In December, 1898, all outstanding orders for brown powder were canceled, and since then only smokeless powder has been manufactured for cannon. The amounts purchased are as follows:

1897. 300,000 pounds, at $1 per pound.
1898. 2,543,500 pounds, at 80 cents per pound.
1899. 350,000 pounds, at 80 cents per pound.
1900. 695,000 pounds, at 80 cents per pound.
1901. 1,401,000 pounds, at 74 cents per pound.
1902. 1,551,000 pounds, at 74 cents per pound.
1903. 2,268,000 pounds, at 74 cents per pound.
1904. 4,642,710 pounds, at 74 cents per pound.
1905. 4,492,000 pounds, at 74 cents per pound.
1906. 2,025,000 pounds, at 69 cents to 74 cents per pound.
1907. 2,375,000 pounds, at 67 cents to 69 cents per pound.

The above is obtained from the requisitions made in the Bureau of Ordnance during the calendar years given.

3. Up to date about 6,500,000 pounds of smokeless powder have been manufactured at the Government powder factory at Indian Head, Md. The accompanying correspondence gives in detail the cost of this powder during the latter years. Necessarily, the cost was much higher in the early stages of manufacture.

4. The price paid for the first 200,000 pounds of smokeless powder, purchased in June, 1897, was $1 per pound, plus the alcohol. In October, 1897, at the instance of the Department, this price was reduced to 80 cents per pound, which price continued until the beginning of the year 1901, when it was again reduced to 70 cents per pound, plus the alcohol. This reduction was made in view of estimates as to the cost of manufacture at the Government Powder Factory. This price of 70 cents per pound, alcohol furnished by the Government, which meant an actual cost of about 74 cents per pound, held until the joint Army and Navy board on smokeless powder, convened by the Secretaries of War and of the Navy in September, 1906, recommended the price of 69 cents per pound, manufacturers to furnish their own alcohol. For powder purchased by the Army and Navy in excess of 4,000,000 pounds a year the price was to have been 65 cents per pound. In October, 1907, acting upon the recommendation of the joint Army and Navy board on smokeless powder, the Secretaries of War and of the Navy again reduced the price to 67 cents per pound. The manufacturers now claim that this reduction is excessive, and it is not likely that it can be further reduced, at the present stage of manufacture, without undue fairness to the powder companies.

5. There are being forwarded copies of certain correspondence upon this subject, which it is requested be returned to the Navy Department, Bureau of Ordnance, when you have no further use for them. Also, information can be obtained on pages 255 and 256 of the "Hearings" before the House Committee on Naval Appropriations of 1907; on pages 41 to 43, and page 81 (Appendix C) "Hearings" of 1908; and in the "Hearings" of 1909. Mr. J. A. Haskell, vice-president of the Dupont Powder Companies, was before the Subcommittee of the House Committee on Appropriations on January 24, 1907, and his testimony can be found in the "Hearings" for that date.

6. Referring to the second paragraph: The establishment of the Government Powder Factory was recommended by the Department in its Annual Report of 1898, and an appropriation for its establishment was made the same year. Since it has been completed it has run to the full extent of its capacity, working twenty-four hours a day, and has produced about 6,500,000 pounds of powder. In addition to this work the laboratory, which forms a part of the factory, has conducted all stability tests and chemical examinations of the samples selected from the lots of private manufacturers in the natural course of inspections.

7. Referring to the last paragraph of your letter: Congress passed, in the latter part of February, 1907, Public Resolution No. 15, directing the Secretary of Commerce and Labor to investigate and report to Congress concerning existing patents granted to officers and employees in certain cases. Full details of the information required under this resolution have been compiled and forwarded to the Department of Commerce and Labor. It is understood, however, that it has not yet been published, or at least not issued.

Respectfully, V. H. METCALF, Secretary.

Hon. JOHN W. GAINES,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

WILMINGTON, DEL., August 27, 1906.

AUSTIN M. KNIGHT, Commander, U. S. Navy,
President Joint Army and Navy Board on Smokeless Powder Specifications, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Complying with your request that we give you our reasons for opposing any reduction in the price now paid by the Government for smokeless powder, we submit the following discussion:

In opening this discussion we desire to say that, in our judgment, the price paid for the powder is far less important than its quality, and that at the present time, with the processes of manufacture and even the composition of the powder in a more or less experimental and uncertain condition, an effort to reduce the price is likely to be false economy. With the Army and Navy it should always be the aim to have the best possible powder regardless of the cost. The desire should be to give an adequate price and to expect a constant improvement in the article. In order to produce a superior article we must be allowed a reasonable and fair margin of profit so that we may be able to purchase the best materials, employ the best skilled labor, and be allowed to work and rework the material until the desired result is obtained. If we must stop short of that because of price, it is easy to determine what the natural result will be—either loss on our part or an inferior powder. We have spared no expense in our efforts to improve our product, and we should receive an adequate compensation.

At the beginning, when the price was fixed at $1 per pound, the manufacturers had little knowledge of the subject and their plants were not suited to economical production. Before experience had shown us how to make a profit, the Government reduced the price to 80 cents a pound, and again to 70 cents, while we were making powder at a loss or with no profit. It is only within the last three years that a profit has been made. It would be a great injustice to the companies who have continued under these circumstances to produce a good powder, and who have spared no expense to improve it, to insist now that we must submit to another reduction, under more rigid specifications, before we have recouped the losses sustained during the earlier periods.

We are to-day selling the Government a much better powder than we sell the general trade where we have active competition. We are paid by the Government for a superior powder to that used by the commercial trade only 70 cents per pound, while the trade is paying 80 to 85 cents.

The Government has a system of inspection that grows daily more rigid, to which inspection we do not object, but which tends to increase the cost of production. The bureaus have just adopted new specifications which are more exacting, and to which they have added new and untried tests, which will probably add to the number of rejections. These specifications undertake to control each step of the processes to be used, to specify raw materials, number of washings, their duration, etc., and in the end we are still held responsible for the results.

In arriving at the cost of powder manufactured by the Government its experts lose sight of many items of expense which the Government pays through other channels, as salaries of officers, technical men, bookkeepers, clerks, traveling expenses, etc. The Government charges some of these items to other accounts and overlooks them in estimating the cost of manufacture of powder. Upon examination of our books we find that the following result would be obtained by taking what we are informed is the cost of powder at Indianhead on the manufacture of 1,002,000 pounds:

We find that during the past year of our operations the ratio of rejections to the amount of powder manufactured and delivered to the Government was 5.23 per cent. If from the manufacture of powder at Indianhead there be deducted the same percentage for rejections, the result would be that instead of delivering 1,002,000 pounds of powder Indianhead would produce 949,000 pounds of acceptable powder and the cost per pound would be increased from 47.45 cents (their cost of powder manufactured exclusive of alcohol) to 49.98 cents, and their cost of 54.63 cents (including alcohol) would be increased to 57.63 cents. If to this there be added the amounts paid by our company which have not been taken into consideration by the Government in their estimate of cost—mill superintendence, 1.96 cents per pound of powder manufactured; administrative cost, 2.98 cents per pound of powder manufactured; taxes, 0.12 cent per pound of powder manufactured; interest on investment, 7.16 cents per pound of powder manufactured—then the total cost would be 62.20 cents, exclusive of alcohol, or 60.85, including alcohol. This showing clearly demonstrates the fact that the only profit that we could obtain in the manufacture of powder at 70 cents per pound (and alcohol furnished by us) would be brought about by a more economical expenditure of labor in factory operations, because it is beyond dispute that the Government is paying approximately the same prices for cotton, acids, and other raw materials as we are.

Progress in the manufacture of powder sometimes causes the abandonment of whole plants, as was the case when the change from brown prismatic to pyrocellulose powder was made. This company had, at large expense, equipped two plants for the Government's use during the Spanish war, which were utilized for a short time to manufacture the powder. Experience in that war taught our Government officials that they did not want to continue the use of brown prismatic powder. The change to smokeless powder was made, and the plants became useless. The Government is at the present time considering and making extensive experiments with a new powder, which, if adopted for the service, will in a large measure destroy the value of all the present smokeless-powder plants. When these facts are considered, it should be easy to perceive the injustice which would be done us by any reduction in the price now paid.

In considering the price of powder the board should keep in mind the amount of the contracts to be given. In our judgment the price might well be on a sliding scale. If the plants are to run on a single-shift basis, then it naturally costs more to make the powder. If the Government should again be in position to give orders for a sufficient amount of powder to run the plants continuously, night and day, as in the past, it might then be a better time to bring up the question of a reduction in price; but consider the present circumstances.

During 1904 and 1905 the Government gave us sufficient orders to warrant operating our plants night and day. In order that we might be in a position to do this, a very large expenditure of money was necessary in increasing our power plants, building additional powder dry houses, magazines, and providing costly machinery. We were, furthermore, led to hope that even larger orders for powder were in prospect, because the necessity was recognized for a large surplus of powder to be on hand in case of emergency. At this same time a joint Army and Navy board, appointed for the purpose, conferred with us in regard to our ability to make a large extension of our plants so as to be ready for emergency in case of war. While we were engaged in making the plans called for by this board we were informed that our output would have to be reduced at once to less than 40 per cent of what we were making on the double-shift basis. We have been operating for the last eight months on this limited output at greatly increased expense, and the costly extensions to our plants are rendered unnecessary and useless.

We would further call the board's attention to the fact that the policy of this company has always been, regardless of expense, to improve the powder by adopting every suggestion made by the Government. For instance, in the Government's efforts to standardize the process of manufacture of powder we have been called upon, at large expense, to change our plants to insure a uniform process of manufacture. In this connection we have recognized the great importance of pure water in the manufacture of powder, and although the water supplies of two different plants had been used for upward of five years with satisfactory results, we realized that improvements in the product would result from corresponding improvements in the water supply, and we have recently engaged, of our own volition, to expend several hundred thousand dollars in order to obtain additional and better supplies of water. This expenditure will result in an improvement in the powder and a corresponding benefit to the Government.

A very important item in the cost is the rejection of powder by the Government. It may be argued that we should not produce a powder that would not meet the requirements. The art of powder making has not yet reached the point where rejections are not to be expected. Furthermore, add to this the fact that the Government is constantly changing the specifications, insisting upon making additional tests, some of which are purely empirical in their nature, so that their influence and result can not be foreseen. The chances of rejection are thus vastly increased, and should be a large item in the fixing of the price of powder.

The manufacture of powder is a hazardous business, far beyond the conception of inexperienced men. The danger of fire and explosion, which may destroy valuable plants, is great, and greater still is the cost of life.

We may have touched on many things in this letter which you will consider irrelevant in fixing a just selling price for powder. We believe that all these factors have an important bearing on the subject, and each must be given its due weight.

To conclude our arguments, we may note—

First. The necessity of your having the very best powder which can be made. Your ships and your men demand it. This can not be had if you put the price too low.

Second. The painstaking and careful attention which we have given to the improvement of the powder, the money which we have risked in our experiments to develop it, and the capital which we are risking to-day in our efforts to produce for you a new and better powder are all worthy of compensation, and the Government should consider its own interests by encouraging us.

Third. During the experimental stage of the manufacture of smokeless powder, which continued until the last three years, we realized little or no profit. It is discouraging to think that such a condition may continue. Progress in the production of powder is the most expensive item to be considered, for it means constant expenditure of money, which rarely develops value, and when it does produce something the result means entire abandonment of old methods. To illustrate, you are to-day experimenting with a powder which has already cost us several hundred thousand dollars. If the experiment is a failure, the money invested is lost. On the other hand, if it succeeds, our present plants are, in a large measure, rendered valueless. We recognize the importance and value of the initial steps taken by the Government in developing the present powder, and the work done in the Government laboratories. It is a fact, however, that the manufacture would not have reached the present standard had it not been for the very large expenditure of money made by us in experiments and in designing and perfecting the necessary machinery. We have freely given to the Government the benefit of these experiences for use at its own plants. We are not desirous of taking to ourselves an undue credit for this development, but we believe that the bureaus will agree with us that the art of manufacture would not have reached the present improved condition had we not undertaken the work, for the reason that Congress has always failed to appropriate sufficient funds to enable the Indianhead plant to do it.

Fourth. We are selling to the Government to-day a better powder, made under rigid inspection and subject to rejection, for a less price than we are paid by the commercial trade, which takes powder made without specifications or inspection, and in which we have constant, wide-awake, active competition. This in itself is sufficient proof that the Government is buying its powder at a fair and just price.

Fifth. The Government, by its own experience at Indianhead, is well aware of the cost of making powder. If to this cost there be added a fair margin to correspond to the items which we have enumerated and to the losses which we must allow for, we feel sure that it will be shown that the present price is not unreasonable, but is a just and fair price, made necessary by the expensive methods and requirements of manufacture and rigid inspection and tests to which the powder is subjected.

This company has a record for the past one hundred years of always holding its best intellect, its money, and its plants wholly at the service of the Government in all times of need and of treating the Government fairly and honestly in all its dealings, and we do not deem it necessary that we should give additional proof now of our willingness to do the same in the future.

Yours, very truly,

E. I. DUPONT COMPANY.

Summary of expenditures for the production of powder for the past year at Indianhead, Md.

Amount actually expended during the year	$454,790.64
Machinery written off	13,829.10
To the last item we should add, in order to bring the item of "Machinery depreciation" up to 10 per cent, as was done last year	10,991.83
Fire losses, one-seventh of the total	6,952.46
Various items, including a share of office and laboratory force, watchmen, railroad, and other repairs not counted in to the cost of powder in invoicing it	13,812.66
5 per cent depreciation on buildings	31,180.65
Total	531,557.34
Dividing by 1,047,063, product for the year, the cost per pound is	.5077
Deduct the cost of alcohol expended per pound	.0694
Cost of the powder without alcohol per pound	.4383

In comparing this with the cost during the past fiscal year, which was 47.7 cents, we find that it has been cheapened 3.6 cents; this is accounted for to the extent of 2.4 cents per pound by the fact that the cost of cotton per pound of powder in 1905–6 was 7.21 cents, and in 1906–7, 4.82 cents, the reduction being due to the use of the cheaper Tennessee fiber. The remaining 1.2 cents is accounted for in the fact that the fixed charges, amounting to some $77,000, plus a considerable share of the labor, are not increased with the increased output.

2. The cotton account of last year included the use of 10,609 pounds of cotton from the torpedo station at .0885 cents per pound; 171,900 pounds of Salomon at .0925, and 610,977 pounds of Tennessee at .055, making an average price of .06356 per pound. The present price of Tennessee fiber is .055, and we are using this material to the exclusion of all others. On a yield of 1.37 the cost of powder will be still lower this year by six-tenths of 1 cent per pound. This lowers the cost of manufacture a trifle over 3 cents per pound on account of cotton alone from the schedule of cost upon which the present price of powder was based last year.

3. The expenditure for alcohol per pound of powder amounted to about 3.5 cents, making the total cost 47.33 cents.

4. We find that we have invested here in plant, powder in dry houses, raw material, repair parts in store, etc., nearly $1,500,000. The interest on this and a suitable working cash capital, plus taxes and salaries of administrative officers, would easily add about 10 cents per pound.

NAVAL PROVING GROUND,
Indianhead, Md., August 2, 1906.

SIR: By direction of the Bureau of Ordnance:

1. I have to submit the following estimate of the probable cost of smokeless powder at private works:

2. The cost of manufacturing 1,000,000 pounds of powder at the Indianhead works during the fiscal year recently closed has been 47.4 cents per pound, exclusive of alcohol. Every item due to its manufacture is included in this cost. All raw materials, chemicals, laboratory expenses, heat, light, power, care of grounds, buildings, etc., have been reckoned; also a charge for loss by fire based upon the mean fire loss for the last six years.

3. Included in this is an allowance of 5 per cent for a depreciation on buildings and improvements. Another allowance of 10 per cent depreciation on the machinery of the entire plant is also included.

4. In comparing the cost of powder at this plant with private manufactures, it would be fair to assume generally that private purchasers obtain their material at least 10 per cent less than the Government does. It has been hinted to me that the Tennessee Fiber Company sells its material to private manufacturers at 4½ cents per pound; we pay 5½ cents per pound. A paper manufacturer told me several years ago, when we were paying 6 cents, he was paying considerably less for this cotton. The same thing is probably true of acid. But on known data the following amounts should be subtracted from the cost at this place:

Labor, 28.5 per cent of $105,000	$29,925
We grant 26.5 holidays more than private firms, and we work only eight hours to their ten, or perhaps eleven. But taking ten hours as their day, with the holidays, they save 28.5 per cent on labor.
Depreciation on buildings and improvements, 5 per cent per annum	14,760
	44,685
Deducting this from	474,000
Leaves	429,315

Or, say, 42.9 cents per pound to the private manufacturer.

5. The total rejections of powder amount to 1.7 per cent during the history of its manufacture. These rejections have not affected Indianhead, and should not other makers. However, adding 1.7 per cent to their cost we have a total of 43.6 cents. If the powder can be reworked or used for other purposes, this item should not be considered.

6. It may be urged that there is a business hazard attached to the manufacture of this material—that is, that we may be making a different powder some day that will render much or all of the plant useless. Such an argument should have no weight, since we have already been using this powder for seven years or more, and in the account of cost given above 10 per cent of the machinery is expended each year off the books, which would provide for a total elimination of the plant in ten years. Attention is called to the powder "Cordite," which, in spite of its manifest disadvantages, has continued in use some fifteen years without any immediate prospect of some other powder being substituted for it.

7. On the basis of 1,000,000 pounds of powder manufactured per annum, it will be seen that a price of 70 cents per pound yields a profit of $264,000, and this considers every possible charge except the pay of the officers connected with the financial administration of the enterprise.

8. Judging from the cost of the Indianhead plant, the total investment will amount to about $650,000. On this basis the stockholders should receive a dividend of over 40 per cent on the capital invested if the powder is sold at 70 cents. If it were sold at 55 cents per pound this would yield 17.5 per cent profit on the capital invested, and in case the orders were cut down during any one year to one-half, the profit should still be satisfactory.

Respectfully,

JOS. STRAUSS,
Lieutenant-Commander, United States Navy,
Inspector of Ordnance in Charge.

Commander A. M. KNIGHT, United States Navy,
President Joint Army and Navy Board on Smokeless Powder Specifications, Bureau of Ordnance, Navy Department,
Washington, D. C.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting the tables to which he has referred. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the necessary number of words in order to gain recognition to seek some information from the chairman of the committee. I notice in the pending paragraph——

Mr. FOSS. Before the gentleman asks that question, will the gentleman yield me a little time?

Mr. STAFFORD. Certainly.

Mr. FOSS. I want to state to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] that we have expended about $800,000 on the powder factory down here at Indianhead, and when Admiral Mason was before the committee we asked him about the subject of the powder trust, so to speak, and he said:

I will be very glad to give the committee any information that I can. I am not prepared offhand to go into particulars, but all I can say is that we are not in the hands of a powder monopoly in any way. And I should say, to the contrary, that the powder people are in our hands, because we make the price, we prescribe the specifications, and we have inspectors and subinspectors to watch the processes and to make it just exactly as we say.

Mr. DAWSON asked:

Was there a joint Army and Navy board to consider this whole powder question?

Admiral MASON. Yes.

Mr. DAWSON. Where will their report be found?

Admiral MASON. I think it is a public document.

Mr. THOMAS asked Admiral Mason:

Is there a powder trust?

Admiral MASON. As far as the Navy Department is concerned, no; we have control over it.

Then Mr. ROBERTS asked:

I would like to ask if we are getting as good powder from the private manufactories as from Indianhead?

Admiral MASON. Decidedly, yes.

Then Mr. MUDD asked:

Admiral, if they make powder just as good and just as cheaply, what is the particular reason for maintaining a Government establishment? Do you claim it tends to prevent monopoly?

Admiral MASON. By having the Government plant we have control of the situation. We know exactly how much that powder costs us, and when these people come in with exorbitant prices we say, "You can not get such prices, and if you do not come down within reason, we will go to Congress and ask them to give us a plant in which we can make all of the powder, although we do not like to do that, because we want to keep two or three outsiders going in case of accident to our plant."

Now, that is what Admiral Mason, Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, stated in his hearing. The joint board of the Army and the Navy examined into this whole question as to the cost of making powder by the Government, and they fixed the price of powder paid to the Dupont Company, and they reduced it some 3 cents.

Mr. PADGETT. Reduced it from 74 cents to 67.

Mr. FOSS. They have reduced it, extending over several years, considerably more than that; but during the last year they have reduced it 3 cents a pound.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The present price is now fixed by this board?

Mr. FOSS. By the joint board.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It fixes it at 67 cents?

Mr. FOSS. At 67 cents.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Does the Government buy of any other company except the Dupont?

Mr. FOSS. I am not sure as to that.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the gentleman state whether there is any other company ready to sell powder except the Dupont?

Mr. FOSS. I think there are other companies. I am informed that there are a number of other companies, but whether the Dupont Company gets all the orders or not I do not understand.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the gentleman, with the help of his committee, kindly say what the records show as to the cost of manufacturing this Government powder?

Mr. PADGETT. I have it here; it is 47⅓ cents.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Is the cost stated in the report?

Mr. PADGETT. I have it here. The price fixed by the joint Army and Navy board is 67 cents, the cost to the Government of manufacturing the powder at Indianhead is 47⅛ cents. That is stated on page 123 of the hearings. Admiral Mason says, speaking of this 47⅛ cents:

We do not charge for the deterioration of the plant. The price of 67 cents is made up by counting the deterioration of the plant, the interest on the value of the plant, and also allowing a certain amount for superintendence.

That is included in the cost.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is in the 67 cents which we pay?

Mr. PADGETT. It is not included in the cost of 47⅛ cents.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Can the gentleman state how the 47⅛ cents is made up?

Mr. PADGETT. That represents the cost of manufacture, including all things except interest on the outlay for the purchase and maintenance of the plant, the salary of Government officials who superintend the manufacture in the plant, and for deterioration of plant.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Can the gentleman tell now what is the capacity of the Government plant?

Mr. PADGETT. I do not know; maybe 2,000,000 pounds a year.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. How much do we manufacture?

Mr. PADGETT. About 1,200,000 pounds a year.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I understood the chairman of the committee to state that the manufacture was something over 1,000,000 pounds.

Mr. PADGETT. It is stated here by Admiral Mason at 1,047,063 pounds.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. There is nothing to show what is the capacity.

Mr. PADGETT. Here is a question asked by Mr. LOUDENSLAGER:

How much did you manufacture last year at the proving grounds?
Admiral MASON. I have not the exact figures, although I will put them in, but I should say about a million two hundred thousand pounds. The exact figures are 1,047,063 pounds.
The CHAIRMAN. Also include in your answer the amount that you purchased.
Admiral MASON. About 2,000,000 pounds.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Another point I wish to ask as to this 2,000,000 pounds——

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, these gentlemen have occupied my time; I ask unanimous consent now to proceed for five minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That request is absolutely unnecessary, but if it is considered necessary to make it, I shall be compelled to object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I object. Now move to strike out the last word.

Mr. STAFFORD. My last motion was to strike out as many words as were necessary to gain recognition. Now I renew that motion to strike out as many words as will be necessary to gain further recognition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman moves to strike out the paragraph.

Mr. STAFFORD. The purpose, Mr. Chairman, of rising is to ascertain from the chairman of the committee whether at the Government plant we manufacture any specially prepared powder which is not advertised for and manufactured by private establishments?

Mr. FOSS. All this powder is specially prepared, specially manufactured powder, and in dealing with these private concerns the Government lays down its own specifications and says how it shall be manufactured.

Mr. STAFFORD. The point of my inquiry is directed to the fact as to whether the Government provides a character of powder not manufactured and supplied by private establishments?

Mr. FOSS. The Government manufactures smokeless powder.

Mr. YOUNG. For experimental purposes also.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is that smokeless powder manufactured by private establishments?

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. And it is covered in the specifications?

Mr. FOSS. Yes; also black powder, brown powder, and several kinds of powder.

Mr. STAFFORD. So, as I understand, there is no powder containing special ingredients that is manufactured exclusively at the Government plant.

Mr. FOSS. No; I do not think there is.

Mr. STAFFORD. Now, I want to ask the chairman whether, as long as he has been chairman of the committee, any of the officers before the committee have suggested that there was need of having the ingredients of the powder withheld from the public and from public advertisements because they should not be disclosed?

Mr. FOSS. No; I do not recall any.

Mr. STAFFORD. The reason of my inquiry was that in the Army appropriation bill that was introduced in the House a provision was carried leaving it to the discretion of the Department heads that when the character of the ordnance contained such ingredients that the interest of the public service would be injured by publicly divulging them, then the Chief of Ordnance would be authorized to purchase such articles in such manner as he might deem most economical and efficient. That provision was stricken out on a point of order, but has been reinserted in the Senate. My purpose is to ascertain from the chairman of the committee, as the same conditions must present themselves both to the Navy and to the Army, whether there was any such recommendation ever presented to the Naval Committee, asking that proposals be not always advertised, and leaving it to the discretion of the Department in some cases to purchase the article in such manner as they might deem most economical and efficient, without advertisement?

Mr. FOSS. The Department has never, to my knowledge, asked for any such provision.

Mr. YOUNG. If the gentleman will permit me a moment——

Mr. STAFFORD. I shall be glad to.

Mr. YOUNG. I do not know what is done in the Navy, but I do know that in the Army plant the Government is constantly experimenting with new ingredients.

Mr. FOSS. Oh, that is true in the Navy also.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman who has just made that suggestion is a very efficient member of the Committee on Military Affairs, and he is well acquainted with the paragraph which was recommended to the House in the Army appropriation bill, and I wish to ask him why it was necessary to make that exception, so as to vest in the Department heads the right to purchase without proposal or public advertisement?

Mr. YOUNG. That is meant to apply——

Mr. STAFFORD (continuing). The same condition would apply as well to the Navy, I believe the gentleman will admit, as to the Army.

Mr. YOUNG. It would if they are doing the same kind of work, about which I am not informed. I know of specific instances where the Government has believed that certain foreign nations were trying to place spies in the Government works to learn the ingredients that they were using in certain experiments. When the Government went into the public market and bought those ingredients by advertisement, while a foreign agent would not know the exact proportions of the mixture, he would know the ingredients which were being used and would be given a cue to ascertain exactly what the compound was, and it was to meet conditions of that kind that the Chief of Ordnance desired this provision placed in the bill, and, I think, very wisely.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman will agree that the same condition is present in the Navy as in the Army.

Mr. YOUNG. I will not agree to that, because I do not know whether the Navy is carrying on the same kind of experiments that are being carried on under General Crozier's supervision or not.

Mr. STAFFORD. They should be carrying them on.

Mr. YOUNG. I think they should.

Mr. WILSON of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last four words. If I understand the statements that have been made here, we have a powder-manufacturing plant that cost us about $300,000; that we manufacture a million pounds of powder there annually; that we require 2,000,000 pounds additional, which we go into the market and purchase; that the 1,000,000 pounds which we manufacture costs us a fraction over 47 cents a pound, while that which we purchase costs 67 cents per pound.

That is a saving on that which we manufacture in our own plant of approximately 20 cents a pound, or $200,000 that we save on the million pounds that we manufacture. Two hundred thousand dollars, it occurs to me, will pay for considerable management, considerable administration, besides paying the interest on the investment of $300,000. But we use 3,000,000 pounds, and if we utilize our plant in the manufacture of 3,000,000 instead of 1,000,000 pounds, there would be a saving of something in the neighborhood of $600,000.

One of two things should be done by us. We should either compel the manufacturers of powder from whom we purchase the 2,000,000-pound supply to furnish it at a lower rate than they are now furnishing it, or we should provide equipment for our own plant sufficient for us to manufacture the entire amount we need. Six hundred thousand dollars is an enormous amount of money to pay over and above what we should pay for powder for our Navy.

Mr. FOSS. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask that the Clerk may read.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I want to ask the gentleman if this smokeless powder is all the powder we use?

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Do we not use the brown powder?

Mr. FOSS. We do not use the brown powder or the black powder any more.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this paragraph is exhausted, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Purchase and manufacture of smokeless powder, $650,000.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment to this section.

The Clerk read as follows:

On line 25, after the word "dollars," insert as follows:
"Provided, That no part of this money shall be used in the payment for powder at a price to exceed 50 cents per pound."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do not know whether the Chairman cares to hear me on the point of order, but it seems to me plain that this is a limitation on the appropriation, and it has been so ruled many times.

Mr. KEIFER. I would like to ask the gentleman from Nebraska how he knows that this is a limitation on the appropriation?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is a limitation on the use of the appropriation.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman think it would be fair to say that no part of this money can be used unless the powder can be purchased at a price fixed in the amendment, when as a matter of fact no one here knows what the powder can be manufactured for? The mere fact that the Committee on Naval Affairs states what the cost of powder is in the Government plant does not furnish any criterion.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will answer the gentleman's question. I do not know what it costs, but I have been endeavoring to find out. The printed hearings show that in a plant comparatively new and small we are now manufacturing powder at a cost of 47½ cents per pound, and we are running that plant only to a fraction of its capacity.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman state what the cost consists of?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am not in possession of the material facts to state that.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Nebraska will recognize the fact that the Government's plant has not capacity enough to manufacture all the powder necessary for the naval needs, and if this price was less than what it costs to manufacture, he would be hampering the entire naval service. He is taking upon himself the full responsibility without having the data, and he admits that he has not the data to determine the actual cost. I insist, Mr. Chairman, on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that this is a limitation on the appropriation, under the rulings heretofore made. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, it is true that we have not before us a careful analysis of the cost of manufacturing powder, but such evidence as we have proves that when the Government plant was established it resulted in an immediate reduction of the cost which the Government was paying for powder in the market, until now the cost has been reduced to 67 cents per pound. It also shows that, counting all the items that Government officials feel that they should count, the cost to the Government of manufacturing powder at the Government factory is only 47½ cents per pound. It is fair to assume that this Government powder factory is not operating at its total capacity. It has been stated that the capacity was something like 2,000,000 pounds, and it is only operated to produce 1,000,000 pounds per year at the present time.

Now, we have got the factory; there is no additional charge to be made for interest on the investment, no additional charge to be made for depreciation or for superintendence. We have nothing to lose, and it is fair to say that if the Government notifies the powder trust—and I assume that there is a trust, because it is not denied that there is one—when the Government says to that trust that it will not pay more than 50 cents a pound, I believe the powder trust will sell to the Government at that price.

But if the powder trust declines to sell powder to the Government at that price, the Government still has two factories in which it can manufacture its powder—one a factory costing $300,000, manufacturing powder for the use of the Army, the other a factory costing $800,000, already manufacturing a million pounds a year, for the Navy. I think there will be no way of reducing the cost of the powder to the lowest reasonable and possible figure except when the Government takes affirmative and positive action to bring it about. We can not expect the powder trust voluntarily to make a reduction, and unless the gentlemen can bring in here from the large fund of information that ought to be at their disposal some evidence that the cost of powder is in excess of 47½ cents, this Government has no right to pay over 50 cents a pound for the powder it buys.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. MADDEN. I think it would be very unwise to adopt an amendment such as that which is proposed. I think everyone will agree that we should buy powder at the lowest possible price. I think we ought to be able to get the information upon which to ascertain what it does cost the Government to manufacture powder. That we have no such information I think nobody will deny. The proper way to ascertain what it costs to make the powder is to get the details of money spent in the construction of the plant, in its operation, in the purchase of material, and in every other detail of the work connected with the manufacture of powder. There is no other way to ascertain this, and it is unfair to state that it costs 47 cents a pound to manufacture powder, if we only include in that the cost of materials purchased and the labor paid, but without relation to the payment of the fixed force of men who are in the management of this powder factory.

Mr. YOUNG. I would like to ask my friend if it is not a fact, in determining the labor cost, that the cost for the one month's time when the men employed in the manufacture of this powder are given a leave of absence is not charged up to the cost of the powder.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not know just exactly what is charged, but I do know that nobody else here seems to know.

Mr. YOUNG. I have been informed that that was the fact by naval authorities.

Mr. MADDEN. But, whatever is charged, it produces the result which shows that 47 cents per pound is what it costs.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the gentleman permit me to read a paragraph in line with what he says?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Here is the reply of Admiral Mason in the hearings before the committee:

We did not purchase any out of this appropriation. It cost the Government really about 46 or 48 cents a pound or something like that, but, of course, we did not charge in any expenses; that is, my salary or the salary of the commanding officer on the proving ground, or that of the chemist, and so forth, as they are all paid by the Government outside, whereas the smokeless powder companies have to pay for superintendents, and so forth. The additional expenses to companies are insurance, interest on investment, rejection, losses, taxes on property.

Now, the gentleman from Illinois can see that those are very small items compared to hundreds of thousands of dollars that would be paid.

Mr. MADDEN. I realize that, but I believe we ought to be sufficiently just not to undertake to fix the price until we know what it costs. In dealing with the proposition we should deal with it fairly, and after we have secured all the information that is obtainable upon which we can base a fair judgment. I have no use for the powder trust; I believe it ought to be abolished if it can be. I believe that the Government of the United States ought to buy its powder at the least price at which it can be bought, but I believe that in dealing with a business question we ought to first ascertain all the facts. To ascertain the facts send for the men who know the facts, invite them to tell you about what it costs in every detail, and then when we have secured this information we are in a position to say what we ought to pay.

Mr. ELLIS of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes.

Mr. ELLIS of Missouri. How does the gentleman construe this statement of Admiral Mason that it costs the Government really about 46 to 48 cents per pound?

Mr. MADDEN. I construe it to mean that it just includes the cost of the material which enters into the product and the common labor, it does not take into account the men who are on annual salaries, it does not take into account investments the Government has made, it does not take into account anything except the actual work of making the material from day to day.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say just a word upon that question. The gentleman from Nebraska ought to have read a little further along in the hearing of Admiral Mason, and he would have found these words. Mr. THOMAS says:

You give the price as 67 cents when you have to buy it, while you say you manufacture it for 45 or 46 cents.

Admiral MASON. We do not charge for the deterioration of the plant. The price of 67 cents is made up by counting the deterioration of the plant, the interest on the value of the plant, and also allowing a certain amount for superintendence.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, right at that point, if the gentleman will yield——

Mr. FOSS. Just one moment until I get through.

Mr. THOMAS. But really there would be no saving?

Admiral MASON. No saving at all.

Mr. SHERLEY. Now, if the gentleman will yield I would like to ask him this question. Does not the gentleman know that a plant at which powder is manufactured is of a very cheap, temporary character, due to the very great risk of the destruction of the plant in the manufacture of powder, and that the cost of the plant, if counted in, would not add to the cost of the powder hardly 1 cent, let alone 10 cents a pound, as suggested.

Mr. FOSS. How much does the gentleman think this powder plant cost?

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, that depends upon the capacity; but I state to the gentleman, as a proposition that must be within the knowledge of the chairman of this committee, if he has investigated the subject, that a plant in which powder is manufactured is of a very cheap character.

Mr. FOSS. The Government has expended $800,000, at least, on this plant.

Mr. SHERLEY. I am not speaking of the Government plant. I am speaking of the character of powder plants, and the testimony to that effect that was given before the committee on fortifications, and while on my feet I want to ask the gentleman another question. The Government has been manufacturing powder now for some years. Does not the gentleman think it is high time we should get some accurate information on the subject as to what it costs, so we will not have annually the defense that was made by the gentleman from Illinois, that until we do know what it costs we should not put a limitation upon the extortions of the powder trust?

Mr. FOSS. Well, I will state to the gentleman that the joint board of the Army and Navy meets every year and makes investigation into the cost of the manufacture of powder and they fix the price of powder, and it is so stated here in the report during the last year, and as a result of the investigation and report and conclusion which the board came to they reduced the price of powder down to 67 cents.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. From where?

Mr. SHERLEY. I understand that is the fact, but I am simply asking the gentleman a question on this point. Ought not we to know what it is costing the Government to make powder, and will not that be the best evidence as to what we ought to pay private companies?

Mr. FOSS. Yes; and if the gentleman will take the trouble to look up and investigate these reports and look into the minutia, he can find out. There is no question; it is open to every Member of Congress who will take the time and trouble to do it.

Mr. SHERLEY. It should not be necessary for a Member of Congress to take either the time or the trouble. The Department ought to furnish to Congress a detailed statement showing what it costs and every item thereof.

Mr. FOSS. They will furnish it.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman says they will. I would like to have it done, and then we will be able to deal with this subject, and not have the argument made by the gentleman from Illinois that because certain items had not been counted in we have no figures on which to proceed.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I move to close debate——

Mr. DRISCOLL. I would like to ask the gentleman whether the Government is able to make any more powder than it is now making?

Mr. FOSS. We make about one-third of all the powder we consume.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. How much?

Mr. FOSS. We make 1,047,000 pounds and we purchase 2,000,000 pounds, and the price at which we purchase is fixed by this board every year.

Mr. DRISCOLL. The question is, Has the Government reached the limit of its capacity or can it manufacture a larger amount than it is manufacturing?

Mr. FOSS. Not unless we enlarge the plant by the expenditure of several hundred thousand dollars upon it. Then, of course, it could manufacture all the powder, but the question is whether it is advisable for the Government to manufacture all the powder it may need. In time of war it is a mighty good thing to have some private concerns that can manufacture powder as well as the Government.

Mr. DRISCOLL. These private concerns would not go out of business if the Government were not buying powder from them right along, would they?

Mr. FOSS. They would go out of manufacturing the particular kind of powder asked for in Government specifications. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to close debate on this subject.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I want to ask the gentleman a question before he does that.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSS. I will.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does the gentleman say that the buildings of the Government powder plant cost $800,000?

Mr. FOSS. I did not say the buildings. I said the plant itself cost that, taking into consideration everything.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. The buildings of a powder plant are the cheapest buildings on the face of the earth.

Mr. FOSS. I agree with the gentleman that they are, but I am speaking of the whole plant itself.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That may be different.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. How much real estate is there?

Mr. FOSS. I do not know.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Can the gentleman tell approximately? Was it $400,000?

Mr. FOSS. I think it was less than $100,000.

Mr. MUDD. It was not over $40,000 or $50,000.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. I will ask another question. Does not the gentleman think the Government ought to make all of its own powder?

Mr. FOSS. No; I do not think it ought to make all of it, but I think in the situation in which we are to-day, by which we can manufacture a third of it, in case the private manufacturers should become exorbitant in their charges, we are in a position where we could by appropriation increase the plant. I think, being in the position in which we are, we practically have got control of the situation by fixing the price that we pay these private manufacturers each year, and I do not think in the end it would be an economical measure for the Government to manufacture all its own powder.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] yield to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK]?

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The gentleman's chief objection to fixing the limit of price of powder at 50 cents a pound seems to be that the Government of the United States might not be able to buy of private manufacturers in case of war. I would like to ask the gentleman this question: There is no danger of war during the coming year, and, in his opinion, would it be safe——

Mr. FOSS. War occurred on the other side yesterday. I am afraid we may have war——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If the gentleman is afraid of war, would it not be advisable to establish a powder plant on a larger scale?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] has expired.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I move that he have two minutes in which to answer this question.

Mr. FOSS. Then I move to close debate after that.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois may proceed for two minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The only objection the gentleman states to fixing the limit at 50 cents a pound is that it might drive the trust powder factory out of business and leave the Government dependent in time of war upon its own resources. Now, in view of the fact that Congress successfully established the limit of the price of armor plate, and the armor concerns conceded that price, would not the gentleman be willing to take the chance for one year of establishing this price at 50 cents a pound, and then in case the Government was not able to buy it at that price in the open market, it could use its own plant for one year and manufacture its powder at 47½ cents a pound? Is there any objection to that experiment?

Mr. FOSS. I do not recall that the Government has ever fixed the price of armor.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Oh, yes.

Mr. FOSS. The Congress of the United States? I know that we tried it here one year at $300 a ton, and we did not get any armor.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The United States Congress fixed the limit on the price of armor and it was accepted.

Mr. FOSS. I have not learned of that. It may be the fact.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It was the fact.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Does not the gentleman know that when he and myself first came here the cost of armor was about $450 a ton, and by various performances here in the House and in the Senate we beat it down nearly one-half?

Mr. FOSS. We beat it down by means of a provision which I drew up.

Mr. Chairman, I move to close debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] moves that the debate on the pending amendment be now closed.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I call for a division.

The committee divided, and there were, ayes 44, noes 21.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I make the point of order that there is no quorum present, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee makes the point of no quorum. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and sixteen present. The ayes are 44, the noes 21; the ayes have it, and the motion is carried.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the Chair mean to state that there was a quorum present when I called for a quorum, and stated that there was no quorum present?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can only ascertain the presence of a quorum by counting. The Chair has counted and a quorum is present. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. HIGGINS having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message, in writing, from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. LATTA, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On April 11, 1908:

H. R. 4780. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to make certain disposition of obsolete Springfield rifles, caliber .45, bayonets, and bayonet scabbards for same; and

H. R. 18689. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish two condemned brass or bronze cannon and cannon balls to the city of Winchester, Va.

On April 13, 1908:

H. R. 18754. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Machine tools, navy-yard, Mare Island, Cal., $50,000.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I regret that after ten years' fighting on this subject that the committee comes in here without the proper evidence or all the evidence that should be had on the proper price the Government should pay for powder. It is a very important matter, yet Members of this House, who are earnest and honest, who are absolutely just and want to do the right thing, are denied the information that they should have upon which to base their action here to-day by cutting off debate. I say seriously that I very much regret this action. What it costs the Government to make powder, with and without the salaries paid the Navy officers and members of the Navy who manage the making of this powder—we should have that information. Then we should have exactly what it costs the du Ponts and other private concerns to make this powder. They, of course, pay not only their labor, but their scientific men who furnish the brains to make this powder. How much longer are we to wait, in the name of heaven, before we get down to the rock bottom of this matter, that we may do equal and exact justice to the Government and to these private powder makers?

We have been talking about it, from my certain knowledge, for more than ten years, and we are still in the dark about it. To me it is the most interesting study, and I have, from time to time, read some on the subject, and I tried to do so early in this session, but I have not had the time, for many reasons, to thoroughly investigate it; but we will get some information we can use in the future in the RECORD to-morrow from the letters that I shall publish.

It is a very interesting subject to consider as to whether or not the Government should make all or a part only of its powder, its armor plate, and other war machinery. I think we should, and I am satisfied it is the practice in foreign countries for the government to make at least a part of its munitions of war and to establish factories for that purpose and at the same time encourage a healthy life in private manufacturers, so that we may have both the public and the private concerns to compete with each other in time of peace and war and both concerns to draw on in time of war.

That is the way foreign countries manage, at least a number of them. The Government works its men eight hours a day, the private concerns from nine to ten and maybe more. If in working eight hours a day the Government can make powder at 40 cents, say, the private concern, working their hands longer hours, can certainly make more powder per day per hand than the Government. That is a point to consider, with the other fact that the Government's officers in charge of the powder factory, the members of the Navy, are paid a salary and would be paid a salary if they were not working at the Government factory. Their salary is not included, we are told here to-day, in estimating this cost, but in the private concerns of course everything is included from top to bottom. These matters ought to be considered and a fixed rule of calculation made by which Congress can act now and hereafter in an intelligent and just way, both to the Government and private concerns. The matter is too serious to be treated in an off-hand, callous way, in a kind of a hop-skip-and-a-jump way, in ten or fifteen minutes, as we have done to-day.

I think Congress, with the present lights before me, should enlarge this Government plant so that if the private concern should be destroyed or go over to the enemy for any reason, in time of war, we would have the Government plant on hand big enough to supply our wants. We need not run it at its full capacity in time of peace, but let us be able to do so when we please. It is useless to tell me that this powder trust is kept alive by making $2,000,000 worth of powder per year for the Government, when we are well informed that it has a monopoly of the trade in powder and supplies the whole United States, with a small portion, perhaps, supplied by other concerns. If this powder trust is an unlawful monopoly, I want the Supreme Court of the United States to say so, and let it then be made to obey the law, just like any private individual. If it is not guilty, let the court say so. Give it a clean bill of health, and then we will be done discussing that question, a matter that has been before Congress for so many years. Let the law be enforced, and let the truth come out; let justice be done to it and the public; its officers can not ask more, they are entitled to no more.

I regret and I condemn the action of the committee in shutting off debate here on this great question while Members are clamoring for the facts, and I want to say to the gentleman who made the motion that, as long as I am in Congress, I want it distinctly understood that no such proceedings as that will deter me from doing my duty. It will take something more than powder to close my mouth on this great question [applause], or any other question, whether the powder comes from a leather-mouth gun or a brass-mouth cannon. Mr. Chairman, I am for the right thing, and when I seek for light that I may do justice to the Government that my oath demands, and to outsiders that my sense of justice prompts, the doors should not be slammed in our face in any such way. I have thus felt throughout my career in Congress, and shall continue to so feel and to thus speak whether I continue in Congress or not. This kind of procedure in this House is degrading it and justly so in the estimation of the people.

The Clerk read as follows:

For Naval Gun Factory, Washington, D. C.: New and improved machinery for existing shops, $150,000.

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 13, insert after line 10:

"For an addition to the iron, brass, and steel foundry, the total cost not to exceed $300,000, $100,000."

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that. It is not germane to that section or to that paragraph. This provision is for a naval gun factory. That could properly come under the head of "Yards and docks," farther on in the bill.

Mr. TALBOTT. I understand that the chairman of the committee makes the point of order that it is not germane at this point.

Mr. PERKINS. I make the point of order that it is new legislation.

Mr. TALBOTT. As I understand the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin, the point of order is made that it is not in order at this place.

Mr. FOSS. Not at this part of the bill. I make the point of order that it is not germane to this part of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Illinois indicate where it will be germane?

Mr. FOSS. It would be in order, if at all, on page 32, under the head of "Navy-yard, Washington, D. C."

Mr. TALBOTT. Yes.

Mr. PERKINS. Of course, Mr. Chairman, I do not object to this discussion; but I make the point of order to the provision altogether that it is new legislation.

Mr. TALBOTT. I desire to say to the gentleman from New York that I think this amendment is in the same language as that of an amendment which in the session before the last one was held to be in order.

Mr. PERKINS. If that is so, I presume the Chairman will overrule me, but I hope he will not.

Mr. TALBOTT. I agree with the chairman of the commitee that it is not in order at this part of the bill. When we reach the Washington Navy-Yard, on page 32, the gentleman can offer his amendment and it will be germane to that part of the bill. I am perfectly willing to have the point of order sustained that it is not applicable to this portion of the bill.

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me this amendment is germane to this part of the bill. You can not have a gun factory unless you have something in which to mold the form of the gun. It seems to me to be a part of the gun factory. I think the amendment is germane. I have no objection to withdrawing the amendment if it can be put in later at page 32.

Mr. FOSS. The gentleman had better do that.

Mr. CARY. All right; I will withdraw it until we get to page 32.

Mr. TALBOTT. The gentleman withdraws it with the understanding that he can renew it at page 32.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, there is objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi objects. The Chair sustains the point of order that the amendment is not germane to this portion of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Torpedoes, and converting torpedo boats: For converting twenty torpedo boats from boats using 3.35 meter, to boats using 5-meter torpedoes, and for the purchase and manufacture of torpedoes, $650,000.

Mr. PERKINS. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman in charge of the bill to explain how much of this $650,000 is intended to be used for changing these torpedo boats.

Mr. FOSS. One hundred and fifty thousand dollars of this appropriation is for that purpose, and the rest goes toward the purchase and manufacture of torpedoes.

Mr. PERKINS. One hundred and fifty thousand dollars is for the changes?

Mr. FOSS. Yes; that is all.

Mr. PERKINS. I would like to ask the gentleman whether, if the Congress had been a little more deliberate in ordering the purchase of these torpedo boats, and the Department had not purchased them until a desirable form was reached, greater economy would not have resulted?

Mr. FOSS. This is due entirely to the change in the style of torpedoes, the increase in torpedo range. The range of torpedoes until this year has been between 1,000 to 2,000 yards, but it is now between 3,000 and 4,000 yards, or even more than that.

Mr. PERKINS. How many years ago were these boats purchased?

Mr. FOSS. These are the older boats, bought ten years ago, I think.

Mr. PERKINS. Is it not possible, as to these torpedo boats, as well as the submarine boats, that the Department sometimes goes ahead too fast and buys material at a large price that in a very few years becomes worthless?

Mr. FOSS. No. Of course there are improvements and changes going on all the time in the manufacture of torpedo boats and all kinds of boats in the Navy, and as the improvements and changes are made things do become obsolete and useless, unquestionably. Still those are changes which can not be reckoned upon in advance.

Mr. PERKINS. At the time these torpedo boats were purchased, had there been a sufficient test so that they were of actual value at that time?

Mr. FOSS. Oh, yes; these are service torpedo boats. Mr. Chairman, I call for the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Coal and transportation: Purchase of coal and other fuel for steamers' and ships' use, and other equipment purposes, including expenses of transportation, storage, and handling the same, and for the general maintenance of naval coaling depots and coaling plants, $5,000,000.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 19, line 11, after the word "dollars," insert "Provided, That no part of the appropriation herein authorized shall be paid to foreign ships for carrying or transporting coal."

Mr. FOSS. To that I make a point of order.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I will ask the gentleman from Illinois to reserve the point of order.

Mr. FOSS. I will reserve it for five minutes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I listened with a great deal of interest the other day to the chairman of the committee when he was telling of the benefits that had been derived by sending the Atlantic fleet around to the Pacific Ocean, and I listened with a great deal of interest to the gentleman from California [Mr. KNOWLAND], but it seems to me that both gentlemen forgot to mention the most striking thing in connection with that voyage, and that was that the nation had to employ foreign vessels to carry their coal.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I will state to the gentleman that I did mention that.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Out on the Pacific Ocean to-day we are welcoming that fleet, and we are welcoming it with pride and enthusiasm. We are proud of the fact that it is the greatest battle-ship fleet ever in the Pacific Ocean, but at the same time we have been humiliated by the fact that this Government of ours, in order to enable that fleet to make the trip, was compelled to employ foreign vessels to carry the coal; and while we have been welcoming that fleet, we can not but ask ourselves in the midst of our enthusiasm and pride, of what use after all would be this magnificent fleet except for show and parade? Of what real value is that fleet in case of necessity? For a battle-ship fleet without coal is as helpless as one without ammunition or guns, and there are no American vessels on the Pacific coast to carry coal for this fleet.

This fleet is to continue its way around the globe, and the very day they leave the Pacific coast they are not only helpless, but become a menace to the peace of this country. If ever war was to be declared, and the vessels left the Pacific coast, that moment all of these foreign vessels engaged in carrying coal would desert the fleet, and they could neither proceed nor return. When the fleet has visited the South American countries, and the people had seen these facts, is it any wonder that most any of the little South American governments indulge in the mildly exciting pastime of serving ultimatums upon this country?

As the fleet proceeds on its way around the globe it advertises to the world our national weakness and our national disgrace. I am proud to say that over in the other end of this Capitol patriotism has risen above politics and party, and a few days ago a bill intended to remedy, in a great measure, this fatal weakness, this national shame of ours, passed that body without a dissenting vote. [Applause.] I trust that the Members of this House will be equally patriotic when the time comes to vote on the ocean-mail bill that will furnish transports for the Army and auxiliaries for the Navy. I submit this question to-day to the House, What is the use of continuing the inexcusable folly of spending millions of dollars to build up a Navy when we we have no ships to carry the coal for it, no auxiliaries to support it, and no seamen with which to man it? Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Navy-yard, New York, N. Y.: For one clerk, at $1,400; one time clerk, $1,017.25; one yard pilot, $2,000; two masters of tugs, at $1,500 each; two writers, at $1,800; one foreman laborer, at $4.50 per diem; one mail messenger, at $2 per diem, including Sundays; two messengers, at $2.25 per diem each; one draftsman, at $5 per diem; one quarterman, at $3 per diem; one superintendent of teams, or quarterman, at $4 per diem, including Sundays; one messenger to commandant, at $2.25 per diem, including Sundays; one messenger, yards and docks, at $2.25 per diem; one stenographer and typewriter, at $3.26 per diem; one electrician, at $1,400; one bookkeeper, or accountant, at $1,200; one master of tugs, $1,500; in all, $23,196.89.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 24, strike out all of line 11 and down to and including the word "cents," on line 12, and in lieu thereof insert the following: "one superintendent of teams or quarterman including Sundays, $1,606.08."

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Chairman, an examination of this appropriation bill demonstrates that the Committee on Naval Affairs have fixed the salaries of master mechanics in the different navy-yards employed in the Bureau of Yards and Docks. The master mechanics in the other bureaus are paid out of the maintenance and increase of the Navy accounts. There is employed at the navy-yard at New York forty-eight master mechanics, or quartermen, in charge of different work. They are paid, as I said a moment ago, from the maintenance and increase in the Navy accounts. Of these men, forty-six have had an increase in pay since January 1 last. Only two have not been increased. This man has been receiving the pay provided for in this bill for the past ten years, and his salary would have been increased January 1 on the recommendation of the commandant of the yard but for the fact that his pay is fixed by law. In offering this amendment I am simply carrying out the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy, and have inserted the exact amount provided for in his recommendation. I hope the committee will agree to it.

Mr. DRISCOLL. What is the increase?

Mr. CALDER. One hundred and forty-six dollars a year.

Mr. FOSS. I hope this amendment will be voted down. I ask for a vote.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment be again reported.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. CALDER) there were—ayes 15, noes 30.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Navy-yard, Washington, D. C.: Quay wall, to complete, $25,000; storage bins for perishable material, $6,000; machinery for power-plant extension, $12,000; electric-light plant extension $5,000; in all, $48,000.

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 32, after line 8, insert:

"For an addition to the iron, brass, and steel foundry, the total cost not to exceed $300,000, $100,000."

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order as to that.

Mr. CARY. Will the gentleman reserve the point of order?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Yes.

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, I understand this same amendment was offered about a year ago, in the last Congress, and that a point of order against it was not sustained. It passed the Committee of the Whole House, but was defeated when the bill was reported to the House. This is not a new matter. It is only to extend the foundry. The Secretary of the Navy, on page 249 of the Book of Estimates, recommends that this addition be made to the foundry, and there has been no appropriation provided in the bill for it. For that reason I offer this amendment. I hope the point of order will not be sustained. I think the amendment is germane and that it ought to be inserted in the bill. I have good reasons for offering it. Quite a lot of work has been sent away from this foundry to be finished, or, in other words, to be completed, in outside private concerns. If we had the equipment to handle it all in the navy-yard, as the Secretary says, we might be able to save $50,000 a year to the Government. Admiral Leutze, superintendent of the foundry, says that this is absolutely necessary, and it would save at least $50,000 a year, thereby paying for itself within eight years.

I might say for the information of the House that in a recent hearing before the Naval Committee Admiral Mason, Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance of the Navy Department, explained that the present foundry is antiquated and entirely inadequate in size and unsuitable as a foundry for such an institution as the Naval Gun Factory. He regards it as a menace to the health of the employees and to the officers who live in the yard. In his opinion, the annual loss to the Government by not having better facilities in this regard would soon equal the amount needed properly to provide for this portion of the gun factory. He said, also, that the increased product of this factory would materially aid in the output of armament and result in a saving of both time and money.

Another gentleman who made a statement of like character was S. T. Nelson, a steel expert who was employed by Paul Morton when the latter filled the office of Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. Chairman, I desire to go on record, also, as favoring the building of war ships in our navy-yards. It is a fact that can not be gainsaid that our Government-built vessels are among the best of all our vessels now in commission, and that in many respects they are superior. It has been fully demonstrated that the navy-yards can successfully compete in the building of these ships. The first-class battle ship Connecticut was built at the New York Navy-Yard, and is a splendid illustration of this fact. True, she cost a small amount more than the contract-built ships, but it is generally acknowledged that in point of construction and equipment she is 25 per cent better than her sister ship, the Louisiana, that was built by contract. As an offset to the increased cost of her construction the Government has expended upon her 25 per cent less for repairs since going into commission, and she was the first ship in our Navy to be built in contract time.

It is an interesting circumstance to which I desire to call the attention of the House that the battle ship New Hampshire, which was built by the New York Shipbuilding Company at Camden, N. J., and which had her preliminary acceptance by the Government exactly one month ago to-day, has not yet been finally accepted by the Department. After her preliminary acceptance she was sent to the Brooklyn Navy-Yard, where work upon her still continues, and no one, except the officers of the yard, knows when she will be finally commissioned. What is the New Hampshire doing at the Brooklyn Navy-Yard? In what condition was she turned over to the Government by her builders? I can answer this question by saying that she was supposed to be in condition to receive her guns and to be sent immediately to sea. Apparently this was not the case. I should like to inquire also, if additional work is being done upon the New Hampshire, who is paying the cost? Does the Government deduct what it is spending upon this ship from the amount paid to the builders to construct her? If not, does not this furnish an additional argument in favor of building all our ships, wherever possible, at the navy-yards; for I am told that a ship is never put into commission until the final touches in her construction have been placed upon her at the New York yard.

The three great maritime powers of Europe furnish us with an instructive object lesson in the matter of government-built ships. A recent report issued by the Naval Intelligence Office shows that during the last ten years Great Britain built twenty battle ships in her navy-yards as against fifteen by contract. France divided equally her battle ships during that period between her navy-yards and the contractors, but twelve of her eighteen armored cruisers were built in the navy-yards. Germany alone of the three powers built the majority of her battle ships by contract.

It would be the height of folly for the Government not to build some of our ships at our navy-yards. To continue the policy of giving the contracts to private bidders would result in the discharge of the skilled staff of workmen and the placing of the shipbuilding of the country wholly in the hands of the shipbuilding trust.

I wish to say, also, Mr. Chairman, that I am in hearty sympathy with my distinguished friend from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] in his efforts to secure an authorization at this session of Congress for four battle ships. It is understood that the President will shortly send a special message to Congress urging an increase in the number of battle ships reported by the committee from two to four. Naval experts are agreed that four battle ships of 20,000 tons each, carrying twelve 12-inch guns each, would be a practical match for the entire fleet of sixteen battle ships now engaged in practice work on the Pacific coast. All the great European powers, as well as Japan, are bending all their energies to the rapid construction of vessels of this class, and we can not afford to disregard their example. I am not in favor of using our Navy for aggressive purposes, but we do need it for defensive purposes, and that nation that is best able to defend itself is the one that will be last called upon for defense. I believe also that the American people favor a large Navy and that they will not begrudge the money that is intelligently spent in that direction.

Mr. Chairman, I now desire to pass as briefly as possible to another subject of great public interest: During the first week of the session I introduced a bill having for its purpose governmental control of the telegraph. Later I introduced another bill requiring telegraph companies to show on every message delivered by them the exact time at which it was accepted for transmission, as well as the exact time of its receipt at the point of destination. This is what the Government has been doing for many years on letters, and thus it can instantly be seen how many hours or days a letter has been in transit. The telegraph companies ought to observe like methods; for, under the system now in force, the person who receives a message has no knowledge whatever of the time consumed in transmitting and delivering it.

It was a matter of common notoriety during the recent strike of the telegraph operators that both the Western Union and the Postal companies received pay at the usual tariff rates for thousands of telegrams that were sent to their destination by mail, such operations involving a delay of twenty-four and in many cases forty-eight hours, where, under ordinary circumstances, the telegrams ought to have been delivered within a few hours. This was a palpable fraud upon the public—the acceptance of money under false pretenses—and I believe that both companies could have been made to pay heavy damages had their action been called to the attention of the courts. Their purpose, of course, was obvious. It was intended to convince the public that, notwithstanding the strike, they were perfectly competent to handle the usual volume of business and thus to encourage the belief that the strike was a matter of no great moment to them, but merely a temporary embarrassment.

The bill requiring telegrams to show on their face the hour of acceptance and receipt at point of destination is now before the House Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. I earnestly hope that before the close of this session the committee will favorably report it and the House be given an opportunity to vote upon it, for there is no public agency or great public utility that comes closer to the people than the electric telegraph, and whatever makes for its improvement makes also for the general good. This is my principal reason for introducing a bill to place the telegraph under Government control. Once it becomes a part of the machinery of Government, strikes will be a thing of the past. Consequently no such interruptions to business as occurred during the late strike of the telegraph operators, which continued for a period of three months, would occur again.

During the early days of that strike—for the first fortnight, I might say—the service of both the Western Union and the Postal companies were so badly crippled that telegrams were taken subject to delay, and these delays were frequently a day and even two days, where, as I have pointed out, dispatches were sent by mail. So embarrassing was the strike to those lines of business that are closely adjusted to the telegraph that a practical commercial paralysis existed, and for days the Chicago Board of Trade, to take a single instance within my own knowledge, vainly petitioned both companies for a speedy settlement with their operators in order that normal conditions might be restored and the immense volume of telegrams from that great exchange permitted to flow naturally again through the regular channels.

For it is not necessary to explain that practically all communications between boards of trade, chambers of commerce, cotton exchanges, and stock exchanges are sent by telegraph and are so related to this agency that a delay of ten or fifteen minutes often entails losses of thousands of dollars. Nor was this the only bad feature of the strike. Important dispatches of a purely social character, "death" messages, and the like shared the same fate to the great annoyance of the general public.

Now, that the telegraphers have demonstrated their strength (notwithstanding the strike proved a failure, owing to the precipitancy of the operators and an inefficient management), it is only a question of time before other strikes will occur in which the public, as usual, will be the main sufferer. This would not be the case if the Government operated the telegraph, for the simple reason that the operators would receive better pay and better treatment, and in return for this would give the Government a more cheerful and efficient service.

This phase of the question alone is a powerful argument for a Government telegraph, but there is the additional argument that the telegraph is a logical part of the postal service, and of the two by far the more important, inasmuch as the business of the country is not adjusted to the mails, but to the telegraph. If anyone doubts it, let him imagine for a moment what would happen if telegraphic communication between all points should be absolutely suspended for the brief period of even one week. This result, which is easily conceivable, would work such injury to commerce as could follow only an acute panic of many months' duration. And it will come with absolute certainty as soon as the operators can weld themselves into a compact organization embracing all members of the craft and under a wiser and more enlightened leadership.

Now, let us turn to some of the other advantages of a Government telegraph. In the mere matter of office rental there would be a saving of perhaps a million five hundred thousand dollars a year, inasmuch as the telegraph, being a part of the postal system, would be operated from the Federal buildings in which the post-offices are located. The greatest advantage, however, would be its freedom from bonded indebtedness and stock issues upon which the telegraph companies now pay dividends. Take, for example, the Western Union, which pays a 5 per cent dividend on one hundred millions of stock and 4½ per cent upon thirty-eight millions of bonds. It must earn for this purpose nearly $7,000,000 a year in excess of its sinking-fund requirements.

But this is not all. If it be estimated that the Western Union is paying an office rental of $1,500,000 a year in excess of what the Government would pay, it will be seen that a Government-controlled telegraph would save at least $8,000,000 a year that the Western Union Company must now earn over and above operating expenses and cost, also of maintenance and repair. And this vast sum, which is a practical tax upon the people, would be saved to them. To this sum also should be added the annual tax upon all their properties, imposed by many of the States, to say nothing of the cost of light and heat in their vast chain of offices, from Maine to California and from the Great Lakes to the Gulf, from all of which the Government would be exempt. In these circumstances the Government could reduce the telegraph tolls at least one-half between all points and pay its employees 20 if not 30 per cent in excess of what they are now receiving, and give at the same time a greatly improved service.

A Government-controlled telegraph would have, moreover, this advantage: It would be operated with entire secrecy, and the "leaks," now so common, would disappear. Operators and clerks would be subject to severe penalties in every proven breach of confidence.

With improved methods of transmission and with proper economy in constructing its lines the Government could duplicate the Western Union plant for a sum not exceeding $15,000,000. I know one system of rapid telegraphy that would require the minimum of wire service and which might be constructed for much less than the sum I have mentioned. This system is known as the "telepost," the invention of Mr. Patrick Delany, an electrical engineer of distinction, who served a long apprenticeship as an operator. By this system 1,000 words a minute can be sent over any circuit of reasonable length, say, from New York to Chicago, at a minimum price of 25 cents for 50 words.

A single wire operating between these cites would carry from 8 a. m. till midnight nearly 1,000,000 words. If the average telegram contains 25 words, including address and signature, it will be seen that one telepost wire would carry, within the limits of a commercial and a newspaper day, 40,000 messages. It is a safe assertion that the entire volume of business between New York and Chicago will not exceed, if it equals, these figures. To handle it would require twenty wires, duplexed, or forty if worked singly.

By the adoption of some such system of rapid telegraphy it will be seen that comparatively few wires would carry all the business between the large cities. To cover all towns and villages where post-offices are established would, of course, require greater expansion of wire service, but under any circumstances the plant would be less than one-fifth the size of the Western Union. The enormous saving thus effected, both in cost of construction and of subsequent maintenance, will be plain to any gentleman upon this floor. With no dividends to pay, with a tremendous saving in rental, fuel, and repairs, my contention that the tolls can be materially decreased and the employees better paid seems to be well supported. More than this, there will be, as I have pointed out, a greater efficiency of service and practically absolute secrecy.

So far I have confined myself to broad generalizations. Let me now cite one instance where a great industry, out of many that I could mention, would be signally benefited by a Government telegraph. I refer to the newspaper business, a business that educates our people to a proper conception of good citizenship and carries to the most obscure hamlet of our country the happenings of the day at home and abroad. Not only is the daily newspaper a welcome visitor in every household, but it has become a necessity to every intelligent person who desires to keep in touch with the world's doings. In this business hundreds of millions of dollars are invested, and anything that reduces its expenses or adds to its efficiency as a public educator ought to be encouraged, for in this way not alone the newspaper, but its readers will be benefited.

There are many newspapers in cities of 10,000 to 75,000 inhabitants that receive the service of the press associations, but which can not afford, or at least will not incur, the expense of supplementing these dispatches with a special service limited solely to matters of local interest or to the State in which they are published. I must admit, in all fairness, that the telegraph tolls for news dispatches are fairly reasonable—quite as reasonable as companies paying dividends on enormous quantities of watered stock can make. But a Government telegraph, operating a rapid automatic system, such as the telepost, could reduce rates to so low a cost that newspapers, even in cities of the third and fourth class, could afford a special telegraphic service from Washington, which is the source of more interest to the general public than all other cities combined.

It may be advanced as an argument against a Government telegraph that it would add to the already large number of Federal employees an additional force of many thousand operators and clerks, and that all these people might be a menace to popular rights when controlled by a strong and corrupt Administration. Without discussing the absurdity of so remote a contingency as a powerful and corrupt Administration, it can only be said that under our present system of Federal appointments (outside of those requiring confirmation by the Senate), the telegraph employees, like those in the postal service and other branches of the Government, would be subject to the operations of the civil-service rules, and that they would represent every phase of political thought and every section of our common country. Such people could not be controlled, except in a purely administrative way, by any President or party. They would quickly be absorbed in the great army of Government workers and would be as powerless for harm as other men and women filling like places.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Chairman, I apprehend the Chair has the decision before him. I can not just now put my hand on the decision upon this amendment when offered to the bill last year, but I know that this same question was ruled on last year and the ruling was in favor of its admission. I recollect very well that we had a vote on it and it carried in the Committee of the Whole House, but was lost in the House. It seems to me the amendment is clearly in order.

Mr. TALBOTT. Mr. Chairman, I did not think this portion of the bill would be reached so early and I have not had time to examine, but the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SOUTHARD] last year offered two or three amendments having for their object the same as the gentleman's amendment now has. One or two of them were declared out of order, but finally the point of order was overruled as to the facts. We took a vote in the committee and the amendment was agreed to. Afterwards a vote was had in the House upon that amendment and it was defeated by one or two votes. I think the point of order, with the precedents before the Chair, ought to be overruled and that this amendment ought to be adopted on its merits.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. Last year three separate amendments were offered appertaining to the brass foundry, two of which were ruled out of order, and one of which was ruled in order. The present occupant of the Chair has examined with care all of the proceedings of the committee last year, the amendments which were offered and the rulings which were made. Without going into the subject any further the Chair sustains the point of order in conformity with the decision of last year.

Mr. CARY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. RUSSELL of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I regret very much, but I shall have to object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas objects.

The Clerk read as follows:

Navy-yard, Charleston, S. C.: Sewer system, extension, $5,000; heating system, extensions, $10,000; completing power plant, $70,000; slips for torpedo boats; $50,000; in all, navy-yard, Charleston, S. C., $135,000.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the words dollars, line 12, page 33, insert the following paragraph:

"Navy-yard, Key West, Fla.: For yards and docks building, $18,000; for foundry, $60,000; grading and paving, $15,000; quarters for commandant, $15,000; central power plant, $25,000; administration building, $45,000; for torpedo depot at Fleming Key, $100,000; dispensary, $15,000; latrines, $5,000; tools and appliances for yards and docks, $3,000; in all, navy-yard, Key West, Fla., $361,000."

[Mr. SPARKMAN addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not called upon to rule upon that question at present, because that is not the form of the amendment. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] insist upon the point of order?

Mr. FOSS. I do, Mr. Chairman; and in view of the recent decision of the Chairman on the question of a foundry at the navy-yard here at Washington, and understanding, as I do, that this amendment carries a provision in it for a foundry, I think it is clearly subject to the point of order.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I do not understand it is a new foundry, but to add to what foundry is already there.

Mr. FOSS. As I heard it read, I understood it carried with it a provision for a new building.

Mr. SPARKMAN. If the gentleman will pardon me a moment, I will read something——

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I shall insist, however, upon the point of order, so far as that is concerned. I appreciate the interest which the gentleman has in the building up of the Key West Naval Station. It is in his district and in his State, and he is certainly to be commended in his desire to build it up; but if we allowed all of the estimates which are sent here by the naval officers stationed at these naval stations and navy-yards we would be appropriating here this year $45,000,000. Now, the committee has gone over this thing very carefully and made provision where they thought the greatest necessities exist, and for that reason I must say that, if the point of order should be overruled, I shall hope that the committee will vote down the amendment.

The gentleman, however, I want to say, has been most zealous in season and out of season, and has impressed the committee with the importance of Key West, so far as speech is able to do so; but in view of the situation, as I have said, we must necessarily cut down these estimates, otherwise the naval appropriation bill would amount to more than $200,000,000 instead of a little over $100,000,000. It seems to the committee that there is no other course to take.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. An amendment offered to an appropriation bill carrying an appropriation for an additional building which has been constructed within the limit of cost is usually sustained as carrying on a work in progress. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida provides on its face for a number of new buildings. There seems to be no authorization of law for the construction of those buildings. There is nothing to show in the amendment that the provisions are for additions to any building now existing. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. SPARKMAN. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman. Do I understand the Chair to rule against the entire amendment because of some items in the amendment, while others are not open to objection?

The CHAIRMAN. Well, the Chair did not rule on all the items specifically, because it is not necessary. There were sufficient items in the face of the amendment to satisfy the Chair that it was subject to the point of order.

Mr. SPARKMAN. If the Chair rules against some of the items, while others were not open to objection, I would ask to strike out the objectionable items, and insist on the others.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not inclined to hunt trouble in that way. The Chair rules upon amendments as they are presented.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I would like to ask unanimous consent to return to this section after a bit, in order that I may offer an amendment which will not be open to objection.

Mr. FOSS. I shall have to object to unanimous consent, inasmuch as the other side of this Chamber has frequently exercised that privilege.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I hope there will be no objection to extending my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSS. Do I understand that this is a request for unanimous consent to extend remarks in the RECORD? In view of the fact that gentlemen on the other side have objected to the extension of remarks I shall not object, if with that the gentleman will include the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CARY], who desired to extend his remarks——

Mr. KELIHER. Include me.

Mr. FOSS (continuing). And the gentleman from California [Mr. MCKINLAY]——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman from Illinois to ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SPARKMAN], the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. CARY], the gentleman from California [Mr. MCKINLAY], and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. KELIHER], who have spoken in the committee, have leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD?

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and permission is granted. [Applause.]

The Clerk read, as follows

Naval Station, New Orleans, La.: Drainage system, to continue, $5,000; central heating plant, extension, $10,000; underground conduit system, $5,000; improvements to machine shop, building No. 4, $6,000; sewer system, extensions, $5,000; in all, navy-yard, New Orleans, $31,000.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "dollars," in line 25, page 33, insert the following paragraph:

"Navy-yard, Key West, Fla.: For foundry, $60,000."

Mr. FOSS. I make the point of order against that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Will the gentleman withhold it, and let me read something to the committee?

Mr. FOSS. You can extend that in the RECORD.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I think, perhaps, you would not then have an objection.

Mr. FOSS. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Navy-yard, Puget Sound, Washington: Electric-light plant, extensions, $5,000; water system, extensions, $12,000; heating system, extensions, $6,000; stone and concrete dry dock, to continue (to cost $2,000,000), $100,000; sewer system, extensions, $3,000; telephone system, extensions, $3,000; railroad and equipment, extensions, $10,000; central power plant, extensions, $140,000; hard-wood lumber shed, $20,000; water-closet for ships in dock, $12,000; oil house, $30,000; dry kiln, $6,000; underground conduit system, $15,000; electric elevator and fittings, building No. 59, $8,000; foundry for all departments (to cost $175,000), $50,000; in all, navy-yard, Puget Sound, Washington, $420,000.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

Page 24, line 16, strike out the words "hundred thousand" and insert the word "million."

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, during the discussion on Saturday last the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GREGG] made a statement as to why the Atlantic fleet was not to remain on the Pacific Ocean. He said there was no need to have it remain there. He said its withdrawing showed that there was no danger of war with Japan or any other country upon the Pacific. Now, the real reason why the fleet is not to be kept upon the Pacific Ocean is because they have not a dry dock upon that ocean where the ships can be docked. To-day, with 8,000 miles of coast line upon the Pacific, we have just one dock that a battle ship can enter. This amendment proposes to appropriate $1,000,000 instead of $100,000. It does not increase the amount for the dry dock, but it does increase the appropriation for this session. The reason why that $1,000,000 is asked for now instead of $100,000 is this: The Secretary of the Navy says that if this much is made available, that if the bids for the construction of a dry dock are not satisfactory, the Government is in a position to build the dock itself.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes, sir.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does the Secretary of the Navy claim that it is necessary to make the entire amount of $1,000,000 available in order to enable the Government to begin the construction of the dock in the event that it can not contract for it?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I will not say that it is absolutely necessary, but the Secretary of the Navy said they wanted $1,000,000 out of the $2,000,000, which the dock is to cost, made immediately available.

Mr. TAWNEY. And the Secretary of the Navy and the gentleman from Washington know that however much we appropriate now the Secretary of the Navy can go on with the construction of the dry dock under the authorization within the limit of cost fixed.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I know that that is true if you do it by contract.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is true also if the Government is doing the work.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. How much work could you do in a year for a hundred thousand dollars?

Mr. TAWNEY. How much work will they be ready to do before the next appropriation is available?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. They ought to be able to do at least half a million dollars' worth of work.

Mr. TAWNEY. It will take them a year to complete the plans.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. They have been figuring on the plans for over two years, and they ought to have them ready, and if we do not expend more than a hundred thousand dollars a year it will be twenty years before that dock is completed; but the Secretary of the Navy has said that if Congress will allow him this money he will complete that dock inside of three years. Now, when the battle-ship fleet is over on the Pacific, they tell us that they can not keep it there because we have no dry docks, and when the battle-ship fleet comes back to the Atlantic, then they say we do not need dry docks because we have no battle ships there.

Every Member of this House who has given the matter any attention knows that the dock at Bremerton is needed worse than any other improvement in the entire country connected with the Navy Department, and as this amendment does not increase the amount asked, but simply makes it available, so that contractors will be compelled to give at least reasonable bids, a thing that the Navy Department claims they did not do before, I think the House ought to grant this million dollars, so that the Government can build the dock itself if the bids are unsatisfactory. The House may remember that the bids before were so high that the Navy Department could not construct a dock for the amount that had been appropriated.

Mr. ADAIR. Did the Secretary of the Navy appear before the committee and ask that this appropriation be made now, or does the Secretary of the Navy at this time think it ought to be done?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I know nothing about what he said before the committee, but two or three days ago in a conversation with the Secretary, he said the whole amount ought to be made available for the reasons I have stated.

Mr. ADAIR. But the gentleman does not know whether the Secretary had asked before the committee to have this amount made available?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. No; I do not.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman must be aware of the fact that when the Navy Department come before the committee, asking for authorization for doing a certain amount of work, they generally estimate the amount they can expend within the year, or until the next appropriation will become available. While I do not know what the Secretary of the Navy has done, I imagine that the Committee on Naval Affairs has done exactly what every other committee would do, and has given the Department what they estimate they can expend in the next year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. FOSS. I should like to shed a little light on the situation right now.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. In whose time are you going to shed it? That is what I want to know. [Laughter.]

Mr. FOSS. I will do it in my own time if I am entitled to the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is entitled to be recognized, and will be recognized in opposition to the amendment of the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. FOSS. I wish to say in the first place that we have recommended in this bill exactly, dollar for dollar, what the Secretary recommended in his estimates.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. FOSS. Just a moment. Last year we appropriated $200,000 for this dock, and the year before we appropriated $100,000, when we first authorized it, so that, with the appropriation this year, they have gotten not only $100,000, but $400,000 in all for this dock, and it has not yet been contracted for.

Mr. TAWNEY. And that can be used during the coming year?

Mr. FOSS. That is available for this coming year. Now, I do not know where the gentleman from Washington got his information, but the Secretary of the Navy has never in any communication to the committee asked for one dollar more. That is all there is in that proposition.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The gentleman may recall that while we gave the Department the last time all they estimated for, they did not estimate for enough, and were unable to make a conract for the dock.

Mr. FOSS. The Secretary of the Navy knew that situation when he sent his estimates in to the committee.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I want to ask the gentleman whether there is any doubt, under the language of this bill, that the Secretary can enter into a contract for the full $2,000,000 for the cost of the dock?

Mr. FOSS. Undoubtedly he can. This is the same language that has been used time and time again in the matter of constructing dry docks.

Mr. TAWNEY. I suppose the original authorization gave the Secretary authority to construct this dry dock by contract.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think not. I think the original authorization is in the same language as this; that it was to cost $1,250,000, and it is a question in my mind whether this would authorize the Secretary to go on.

Mr. FOSS. It is the same language that we have used to authorize every dry dock that we have built.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Then I suppose it will be all right.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. How much did the gentleman from Illinois say was available?

Mr. FOSS. With this, $400,000.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 34, line 20, after the word "extensions," insert "to cost $280,000."

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, they have appropriated $140,000, but I find in the hearings that Admiral Hollyday said that the power-plant extension he estimated would cost $280,000. I would like to ask the chairman of the committee whether this is to complete it or just to start it.

Mr. FOSS. To continue it and make the necessary extensions within the fiscal year.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I did not quite hear the gentleman.

Mr. FOSS. These power plants are extended more or less every year according as the necessities of the yard may require. This is to permit of the extension within the coming fiscal year. We have cut the estimate in two.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Then this is not to complete it?

Mr. FOSS. No; not to complete it.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman's amendment would limit it so that it could never cost beyond $280,000.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw the amendment and offer another.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I now send the following amendment to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 35, line 3, after the word "dollars," insert "administration building, $316,000."

Mr. FOSS. I make a point of order on that.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will not the gentleman reserve it? I have not occupied very much time.

Mr. FOSS. I will reserve the point of order for five minutes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, it has been urged by those who are familiar with naval construction in naval yards of the country that there ought to be a consolidation of these buildings, and that economy ought to be practiced in these yards. A most astonishing and startling statement was read here yesterday by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. LILLEY].

Now, the Navy Department has said that the best place to commence this system that they are trying to inaugurate is in the navy-yard at Bremerton.

Admiral Hollyday said:

I would like to explain that; that is the keystone to the consolidation. At present the various department offices are located in shops, and they are scattered over the yard, and to carry out the consolidation, if you put up one building—an administration building—you would put all the offices in there, and release that other space for shop purposes—the blueprint rooms, drafting rooms, and so on—and it would save messenger service and bring all the business together; and that is the keystone, as I have said, to consolidating the plants. The Secretary is very much in favor of the consolidation. After looking over the thing, he said: "I think Bremerton is an ideal place to start, and if we can not do it anywhere else I would like to do as much as possible at Bremerton, and I have cut out everything that I could at other places.

It seems to me, on the recommendation of the Admiral, it is time to commence to consolidate the buildings and commence the system of economy in our yards, and this ought to begin at Bremerton, where the Secretary of the Navy says is the best place to economize, and run the yards on a business basis. This is not my statement—it comes from the Admiral and the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Certainly.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Does the gentleman believe that after we have made all the preparation for the consolidation we will be able to abolish any yard anywhere, under any circumstances, at any time?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I do not know, but if the yards are in the condition that the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. LILLEY] said they were the other day, there are several that ought to be abolished. But whether we do or not, we think this consolidation ought to take place at Bremerton.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I am rather skeptical about the abolition of any yard, and I would not be in favor of making much of an appropriation to get ready for that event with the very poor and uncertain prospects that are to-day before us.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The object of this appropriation would not be to abolish any yards, but it would be to make it so that you can operate this yard economically.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, just a word. I want to say in reply to what the gentleman said, that it is possible to consolidate the working parts of these bureaus in the different yards without putting up an administration building in every Government navy-yard to cost $350,000. That is not necessary to consolidation by any means. So far as the Puget Sound Navy-Yard is concerned, I may say it has been better treated than any navy-yard in this bill, and the gentleman ought not to object at all to the consideration that the committee has given it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order on the amendment and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I simply desire to call the attention of the committee to the Puget Sound Navy-Yard for just a moment or two. I have had occasion heretofore to call the attention of the committee to the good location of this yard and to the advantages that are found there, and while I agree that the committee has treated this yard well, and agree with the chairman that it is treated better than any other yard in the bill, I will also say that it is the best yard in the United States, and therefore deserves the best treatment. [Applause and laughter.] All the battle ships now going to the Pacific can anchor in its harbor without crowding and in perfect safety. They can sail in by their own steam, day or night, and if necessary can enter the dock by their own steam. Now, I want to put in the RECORD the testimony of Admiral Hollyday with reference to this yard. I am glad to say there never has yet been a word of criticism uttered on the floor of this House with reference to the Puget Sound Navy-Yard. Every Member of the House, every member of the Department, and every gentleman interested in this matter who has ever visited there, unites in the opinion that in its location and with the facilities with which vessels can reach it, and all that sort of thing, its location could not be better. Admiral Hollyday has added his testimony with reference to the yard, and I desire to put that in the RECORD. I read from the hearings:

Mr. THOMAS. We have visited most of these other navy-yards, but this navy-yard at Puget Sound I do not know anything about.

Admiral HOLLYDAY. To begin with, Puget Sound is a yard that the Government has never lost a dollar on. We have gotten more for our money there than we have anywhere else, and I do not think anybody criticises that yard. Everybody that goes there says its location is a fine one, and everybody seems to be in favor of it. It is certainly a fine yard.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman does not mean the committee to understand that work is done in Puget Sound yards much cheaper than it is on the Atlantic coast?

Mr. JONES of Washington. Possibly not any cheaper, but you get more for every dollar you spend there than anywhere else.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is it not a fact that advocates of the Pacific coast have always asked for a 4 per cent differential for battle ships?

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is in favor of the building of battle ships, not in the dockage and taking care of them.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the gentleman mean for an instant to contend that if that differential is justified in the building that there is not a differential in repairing?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think not.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman means to say to the committee that the work can be done as cheaply at the Puget Sound navy-yard as on the Atlantic coast?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think possibly work can not be done as cheaply, but the main reason for the differential is that we do not get the material across the continent as cheaply, and, furthermore, I will say that that has nothing to do with this matter.

Mr. SHERLEY. No; except that when the gentleman is praising his yard over the rest of the country and trying to have a little more generous treatment than heretofore, he ought to be frank with the committee and state all the facts.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I am stating the facts and giving you the unbiased opinion of Admiral Hollyday, and if you will let us build there I think——

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, if we were to let you do it, there would not be any more yards left.

Mr. JONES of Washington. No; and we would be a good deal better off in the country, I am inclined to think. I continue reading:

There is no question of water there; there is plenty of water and it is well located. It will have to have additional quay walls. The water front will have to be improved, and if we get the money to carry on this consolidation scheme we will build a foundry and a pattern shop and storehouses. We will improve the efficiency of the yard in that way * * *.

Mr. LILLEY. They want more buildings. It is the best place for a navy-yard on that coast. Probably we will get work done cheaper next year than we have been able to get it for a good many years in the past, and there will be a good many contractors and workmen looking for work, and I think we ought to go right on and spend all the money at Puget Sound and direct all our energies there and make that a first-class yard.

Admiral HOLLYDAY. That is a place you can put your money without making any mistake.

Mr. LILLEY. Do you not think we had better spend all the money at Puget Sound rather than at any other place on the coast and bring the navy-yard at Puget Sound to a high state of perfection, just as if the steel folks, if you please, were going to start a new plant? Instead of doing a little bit each year at some place, they would put all their money and energies in some place where they had a good location and where they could get the best results.

Admiral HOLLYDAY. You will have to do it.

Mr. Chairman, we should have a great navy-yard on the Pacific coast, the greatest in the United States, and it should be the Puget Sound yard. Build it up as rapidly as possible. Not a dollar will be wasted, and the larger the appropriations the better value will be returned and the more economy in its development.

Mr. Chairman, I now withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Naval station, Olongapo, P. I.: Toward the improvement and development of the naval station, Olongapo, P. I., $100,000. The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to expend, without limitation as to quantities and unit prices, the various amounts appropriated by the act approved April 27, 1904, entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1905, and for other purposes," for the naval station, Olongapo, P. I., for the respective improvements therein named.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I offer this amendment for the purpose of eliciting some information from the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs. It is my understanding that a joint Army and Navy board has decided that Cavite rather than Olongapo is the proper place for this naval station in the Phippine Islands, and I want to ask my friend, the chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee, if it be the purpose of his committee to have two naval stations on the island of Luzon, one at Olongapo and the other at Cavite. I also want to ask the gentleman if he will not explain what "various amounts" these are mentioned in this section to be expended at Olongapo, whether they are amounts that have for any reason been turned back into the Treasury, or if unexpended and still available, why they have not been expended?

I would like to have the gentleman answer in my time.

Mr. FOSS. I will say to the gentleman from Virginia that part of this is a reappropriation. When Mr. Moody was Secretary of the Navy he came before the committee and urged an appropriation of $100,000, but the appropriation was so worded that they have not been able to use it, as, for instance, here is the wording of part of the appropriation: "For building 1,750 feet of quay wall at $1.44 per foot." Now, Secretary Moody made that recommendation and it went into the bill and became a law. They have not been able to use that because the Comptroller has held that they can not spend the money unless they spend exactly $1.44 per foot for the building of the quay wall.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. That was at Olongapo.

Mr. FOSS. That was at Olongapo, and then this further appropriation of $100,000 was simply toward the improvement and development of the station. That is to say, we will have to remain in Olongapo at present anyway, whether we do permanently or not. We have a dry dock there which has during the last year docked some fifty vessels. There is no place in Manila Bay for that dock.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. That is the Dewey?

Mr. FOSS. That is the Dewey. That is, there is no place there that has been settled upon. We have a small naval station at Cavite, which was an old Spanish naval station, which we have taken and used at a comparatively small expense. That station we are using to-day, but we can not get within 2 miles of that station——

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I understand that.

Mr. FOSS (continuing). With our large ships on account of the shoal water.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I understand that.

Mr. FOSS. And at the present time there is no place fixed or agreed upon anywhere in Manila Bay for that naval station. It is true that the last joint Army and Navy board recommended that the naval station be located somewhere in Manila Bay.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Is it the idea of the gentleman that the selection of a suitable place for a naval station in the Philippines is still an open question?

Mr. FOSS. Before that time there were several joint Army and Navy boards which recommended that the naval station be located at Olongapo.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I understand that.

Mr. FOSS. Three Secretaries of the Navy recommended that it be placed at Olongapo.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. But the gentleman has not answered my question; he is arguing the merits of the respective places, and I am asking the gentleman whether or not it is the purpose of the Committee on Naval Affairs to have two naval stations—one at Olongapo and one at Cavite?

Mr. FOSS. I am not saying what will be the ultimate purpose or ultimate policy; I am saying simply that we have made an appropriation in this bill for Olongapo for the coming fiscal year, and only so much as we believed to be necessary. We make a new appropriation of $100,000 and a reappropriation of $100,000, making in all $200,000. Now, whether we stay at Olongapo or whether we go eventually to Manila Bay this thing is certain, we must provide for the needs during the coming fiscal year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw that amendment, and I desire to offer another.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn, and the gentleman from Virginia offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 35, lines 7 and 8, strike out the words "one hundred thousand dollars."

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Now, Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment because the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs has candidly and frankly admitted that he was not prepared to say what the policy and purpose of the Government was in the Philippine Islands as to a naval station. He is not prepared to say whether or not the station is to be at Olongapo, in Subic Bay, or whether it is to be at Cavite, in Manila Bay. The gentleman admits that recently a joint Army and Navy board has recommended that this naval station shall be at Cavite; but he says that sometime in the past another board recommended that it should be at Olongapo, and therefore, in view of these two conflicting and entirely inconsistent recommendations, he is not prepared to say what the policy of the Government will be as to a naval station in the Philippine Islands.

Now, it must be apparent to the chairman of the committee, and to every Member of this House, that we do not need two great and vastly expensive naval stations on one island in the Philippine Archipelago located within 60 miles of each other, and it does seem to me, until Congress has definitely and finally decided where the naval station shall be, we ought not to go on year after year and Congress after Congress appropriating vast sums, first for one and then for the other of these places, and ofttimes for both of them. Such a course as this is wholly inexcusable and well-nigh idiotic. Now, on page 42 of this bill, seven pages further on, there are to be found still other appropriations for the station at Olongapo, and I doubt if anybody outside of the members of the Appropriations Committee and the Committee on Naval Affairs can tell how much money has been appropriated for a naval station at Olongapo and how much for one at Cavite within the past few years, notwithstanding that everybody admits that finally there is to be but one such station in the Philippines.

These appropriations have been carried in different appropriation bills—sometimes in the naval bill, sometimes in the fortifications bill, sometimes in the sundry civil bill, and sometimes in the general deficiency bill. These various appropriations have each been for considerable amounts—in the aggregate they have amounted to an immense sum. I am not the advocate of either Olongapo or Cavite. What I insist upon is that it is high time Congress is deciding where the Philippine naval station shall be located, high time that this throwing away of the public money be put an end to.

For one, I am opposed, in the face of the recommendations of the joint Army and Navy board, recently made—and which I understand are likely to be adopted as the permanent policy of the Government—to expending $200,000 for the improvement and development of a naval station at Olongapo.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I yield to just a question.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Now, I wanted to put two or three to the gentleman in succession.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I did not hear the gentleman.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I was disposed to put about two questions in succession if I could. In the first place, I wish to ask the gentleman if it is not his opinion that at some time, and as near as possible, our Government should yield up its occupancy of the islands?

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Should do what?

Mr. DRISCOLL. Should surrender the occupancy of the islands.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. The gentleman knows full well what my position on that subject is.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Then we will pass that. Is the gentleman of the notion, if we do surrender the occupancy of the islands, we should obtain any place over there for a naval and commercial station?

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I will say to the gentleman very frankly that if I knew it to be the definite, settled policy of this Government to relinquish control over the islands, only reserving a naval station, I would advocate the retention of Subic Bay rather than Manila Bay. I say this frankly, for Manila is the very heart of the Philippines, and the retention of Cavite means, of course, the retention of the whole of Manila Bay. The retention of Manila would be the retention of the capital of the Philippines.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Furthermore, does not the gentleman think that we ought to retain a station over there somewhere for a naval and coaling station?

Mr. JONES of Virginia. As I have said, I am inclined to think we ought to retain a naval and coaling station there, but, as the gentleman knows, I am unalterably in favor of relinquishing the islands and granting the Philippine people their independence. But, Mr. Chairman, recently a joint Army and Navy board has decided that this navy-yard shall be at Cavite, and yet we are asked to appropriate $200,000 to be expended on one at Olongapo.

The chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs is insisting that Congress appropriate large sums for a naval station at Olongapo, when the joint Army and Navy board has just decided that Cavite and not Olongapo is the place for the station. This, in my judgment, means the throwing away of this money; for, in my opinion, the naval station will eventually go to Cavite. The recommendations of this board will finally be adopted, notwithstanding that the Naval Committee would expend this money with a view to preventing such action.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Is the gentleman in favor of spending a large amount of money and establishing permanent improvements at Cavite in order that this Government may retain that place in case we surrender the balance of the islands?

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I certainly am not. I have frankly said to the gentleman that, if it be the purpose of our Government to relinquish control over the islands, whilst I should favor the retention of a naval and coaling station, I would not favor the retention of Manila Bay for that purpose. If the only choice lay between Subic Bay and Manila Bay, I would favor retaining the former, simply because the retention of Manila Bay is, in my judgment, utterly incompatible with the granting of independence to the Philippine people. We are now expending large sums of money at both places, and it is this to which I object. I would rather see money expended on neither than to see it expended on both.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Until that is done these appropriations are only for temporary repairs or improvements, to keep them up ordinarily well?

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I do not so understand, for the language of the section is: "Toward the improvement and development of a naval station." This, Mr. Chairman, is all I desire to say on the subject.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. May I ask the chairman of the committee how much was appropriated in the bill in 1904, to which reference is made in this section?

Mr. JONES of Virginia. One hundred thousand.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. It occurred to me that the propreity of appropriating $100,000 now might largely depend upon the amount that has already been appropriated for the same purpose.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. One hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. FOSS. One hundred thousand dollars.

Mr. ADAIR. How much has been spent?

Mr. FOSS. It has not been spent.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I have been on duty in the Philippine Islands and was in charge of the department of construction and repair at the Cavite Navy-Yard, and while there took occasion to visit and carefully inspect the station, or at that time proposed station at Subic Bay. The physical condition of the two stations are so radically different that I believe when the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES] understands what they are the light he is seeking will be sufficient.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I will say to the gentleman I have seen both.

Mr. HOBSON. At the station at Cavite it is necessary for vessels of even moderate draft to anchor far out from the shore, and only small gunboats can come up to the navy-yard. There is no dock, and the small vessels have to be hauled out on a marine railway. Cavite is now, and from its physical condition must always remain, only a third-class station. Similarly for the rest of the bay. There is no place for a first-class naval station. The proposition is to transfer the dry dock Dewey to Manila Bay and practically dredge out a hole large enough to hold the dry dock and take on the vessels.

At Subic Bay, on the other hand, there is a magnificent harbor, ideal in many respects, with Isle Grande at the entrance, making it possible of perfect defense. Deep water carries right up to the shore line. There is no question at all in the minds of the Army men or the Navy men or any other men who have made investigations that Subic Bay is the only place physically adapted for an important first-class naval station. The difference only arises——

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I want to ask the gentleman if this joint board has not reported that it would require 100,000 men to defend it from the land side?

Mr. HOBSON. I am coming to that.

Mr. LOUD. Is there not now a plan at Olongapo that it would require an immense amount of dredging, something over a million dollars? I saw an item there two years ago for an enormous amount of dredging at that point.

Mr. HOBSON. For properly expanding the station there will ultimately be additional dredging in the upper part of the bay.

Mr. LOUD. Could not the same amount be expended in Manila Bay and have the ships go up to the station at Cavite?

Mr. HOBSON. The dredging in Manila Bay would have to be much more extensive and would have to be continuous on account of filling.

As to the point raised by the gentleman from Virginia, the whole question between these two harbors is simply one of defense.

We can not hold Subic Bay ten days against an enemy landing in force and approaching from the rear; we can hold Manila Bay ninety days. That is the difference. We desire to gain the ninety days, with the hope of relief, by the arrival of the fleet. The fact is, the only way to hold the islands at all is to control the sea. The leverage of distance is all against us. We have no transports to take troops required, and we have no considerable number of troops if we had the transports. We can not permanently defend Manila Bay or Subic Bay or any other bay or any of these islands except by control of the sea. At this juncture we only temporarily control the sea. That control will soon pass from us when our fleet is withdrawn. An army from Asia could land and take Subic Bay from the rear without any substantial resistance and then proceed further and take Manila City and Manila Bay. But the line would be drawn in toward the city, and the force now there, on the shorter line, could hold out about ninety days. The transfer from Subic Bay to Manila Bay can thus only be regarded as temporary. We have hurriedly put up navy guns to protect Subic Bay, because Army guns designed were not available. We have prepared mines and other defenses, but the transfer is not a permanent one.

No man having the choice would choose Manila for a permanent basis. We must simply use Manila and Cavite as an auxiliary station for small boats, and provide Olongapo with great docks and shops to take care of large vessels.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Does the gentleman mean to say that is the recommendation of this joint board?

Mr. HOBSON. I am not saying what I am not authorized to say.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. The gentleman is saying what we are going to do. I want to know what his authority is, or whether it is his opinion.

Mr. HOBSON. I will, if you wish me, say that it is my opinion.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Does the gentleman set up his opinion as against the recommendation of the joint board?

Mr. HOBSON. I will say this: I will ask the gentleman from Virginia if he means to say the joint board recommends the complete and permanent abandonment of Subic Bay.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I understood that to be so.

Mr. HOBSON. Would the gentleman think that the Navy Department, represented as it is on the joint board, would come to the Naval Committee and ask for an appropriation for Subic Bay after such a decision?

Mr. JONES of Virginia. I understand that is the situation.

Mr. HOBSON. I simply submit it in this way. This amendment ought to fail. Subic Bay will be, and must be, ultimately our chief naval station. Whether we can defend it or not from the land, it is going to be the station. While we lack the permanent control of the sea it may not be wise to proceed on the ultimate programme, and it is doubtless a wise precaution to prepare as extensive a plant as practicable in Manila Bay, even to the dredging of a hole capable of taking the floating dock, yet we ought not to abandon the station we already have at Subic Bay, and the amendment ought to fail.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I am sure that the committee has listened with interest to the remarks of the gentleman from Alabama, because he is possessed of knowledge that is not possessed by the average Congressman; but to my mind the chief value of his speech lay not so much in that technical knowledge that he gave us the benefit of as it did in making clear that in voting for this appropriation we would be voting to make of Subic Bay a permanent naval base. There were those of us in the House who believed that that matter had been closed.

Certainly the fortifications committee had from the testimony brought before it reason to believe that Subic Bay was not to be made a naval base, but was to be abandoned as such. Certainly the action of this House as to whether the base should be at Cavite or at Subic Bay has clearly shown that it preferred Cavite. I for one am not willing to fortify two naval bases on the island of Luzon, nor am I so possessed with the fear of impending disaster either to the United States proper or to any of her possessions as to believe that we need to fortify with naval guns the land defenses of Subic Bay or to make that particular place into a naval base.

Mr. FOSS. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. FOSS. I should like to ask the gentleman if Subic Bay is not already fortified to some extent by the Army?

Mr. SHERLEY. It appears from what has come out unofficially, and not as the result of the action of Congress, that quite a little has been done there—how much I am unable to say, not being in the confidence of those who have the matter in charge.

Mr. FOSS. May I interrupt the gentleman again?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. FOSS. Did not the appropriation for fortifications last year, emanating from the gentleman's committee, carry an appropriation for the fortification of the Philippine Islands; and of that sum, was not a part used by the Army, not the Navy, for the fortification of Subic Bay?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will say that "the gentleman" was not a member of the subcommittee on fortifications at that time, and his knowledge was not as accurate of the previous bill as it is of this. It is true that certain moneys were recently expended for certain guns, looking not so much to the making of a naval base at Subic Bay as to their value in regard to the defenses of Manila and of Cavite, for now, after the Subic Bay project has been abandoned, we are told that the money expended there under a plan that looked to make of it a naval base has not been money wasted, because it has this advantage in regard to the defenses of Manila. But I will say that the testimony taken before the fortifications committee this year, not last year, was to the effect that Olongapo had been abandoned as a naval base, and that it was not contemplated to make a naval base there. Now, when this item came up for consideration through the questions of the gentleman from Virginia, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] gave the impression that this was simply an appropriation for a temporary purpose, made necessary on account of the dry dock being there, and yet within the last moment he has taken the view of the gentleman from Alabama that it is in line with the policy of making Subic Bay a naval base. At least the committee ought to know which is so—whether the appropriation is for temporary purposes or whether it is looking to the permanent establishment of a naval base there—and I ask the gentleman now to answer.

Mr. FOSS. In reply to the gentleman from Kentucky, I would say that I see no way out of the proposition other than simply to maintain the naval base at Subic Bay for the present, at least——

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman has answered the question, and I am indebted. I wanted that information. The gentleman can further reply in his own time.

Mr. FOSS. Now, if the gentleman——

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I must insist on having the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. SHERLEY. I permitted the gentleman to give his answer. I asked him a question, and he answered that in his judgment it was necessary to make of Subic Bay a naval base. Now, an honest confession is good for the soul. I am glad that this discussion has brought out the committee's real attitude. I shall not attempt to put my knowledge against that of the experts of the House, but I state to the committee, what is within the knowledge of all Members here, that the last authoritative statement made by those of the Army and Navy charged with determining this question was in favor of making Cavite the naval base and not of making Olongapo the naval base. I do not believe we ought to reverse the findings of that joint board. I do not believe this appropriation ought to be carried. I certainly do not believe that an appropriation of $100,000 ought to be carried for Olongapo and an appropriation of only $50,000 carried for Cavite. That does not look like they propose to have this simply a temporary provision. The gentleman from Alabama has told you something about the depth of water. Those of us who went into the harbor of Olongapo saw a great area of ground.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERLEY. As I say, in the harbor of Olongapo we were shown a great area of ground where we were told by the naval authorities, and it is of record, that many many thousands of feet of dredging would have to be done in order to make that a proper naval base. The gentleman himself declares that it is not capable of being defended half so well as Cavite. He states that it could be held ten days as against ninety days in favor of Cavite, and then he takes occasion, properly from his view point, to speak of the necessity of having a fleet that shall control the seas without regard to fortifications on shore. But that question is not the one now before the committee. It is for the committee to determine whether it wants to reverse the action of Congress and again bring into prominence the agitation in favor of Olongapo.

Mr. DRISCOLL. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. DRISCOLL. I think the gentleman—I am not sure about it—but I had the notion that the gentleman from Kentucky was in favor of our Government——

Mr. SHERLEY. Oh, I see the line of the gentleman's argument, and I answer him in this way: I am not a prophet nor the son of a prophet. I do not intend to say whether we will ever leave the Philippines or not, but I do know, in my humble judgment, that we are justified in following the view of those who have knowledge in regard to which is the better place for a naval base, and they have decided in favor of Cavite. I acquiesce in their judgment. I do not know that, even if we gave up the Philippines, it would be necessary, as has been assumed, that we should have a naval base there, and I do not know that we will ever give them up. I am not dealing with that question; I am following the view taken by the joint board, and I want the committee to follow that view, and not to give new life to this project.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Will the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. SHERLEY. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The gentleman from Kentucky is a member of the Committee on Appropriations and I understand is a member of the subcommittee that has charge of the fortification bill. The fortification bill reported a substantial appropriation for coast defense in the Philippine Islands, without specifying where the money should be expended, and then informed the House in Committee of the Whole House, that it had been settled that the naval base should be at Cavite. I believed that that matter had been finally settled. Now, if it is not settled, why did not the committee provide that the money should be expended for defense at Cavite? I am not in favor of this appropriation. I thought I was, but until this question is settled and we can expend the public money with some degree of intelligence, I am opposed to it.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman knows that in appropriations carried in the fortification bill it has been the policy of those in charge of this legislation to designate the sums, but not to indicate the particular points or the particular character of the fortification on which the appropriations were to be expended. In my own judgment the secrecy that necessitates that is of no value. I do not think it would be material if you wrote out in detail your whole programme, so far as informing anybody else, because the information they desire they obtain anyhow, and it simply results in presenting a bill to Congress that does not carry to Members the information that it should. But it was the clear understanding, stated on the floor, stated in the hearings, that Olongapo had been abandoned as a naval base, and that it was contemplated by all branches of the service that Cavite was to be the naval base on the island of Luzon. With that clear understanding, I do not believe that this House is warranted in appropriating this sum of money on the meager statement that it may be necessary for present needs, and for that reason I have made these remarks.

Mr. HOBSON. May I ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. HOBSON. Does the gentleman say that the appropriation of $100,000, enough to keep the equipment in good shape, is opposed by the general board?

Mr. SHERLEY. I can best answer the question by saying that from the gentleman's own remarks and from those made by the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs it is not simply a proposition looking to that for the current year, but a proposition looking to make a naval base at Subic Bay.

Mr. HOBSON. Does the gentleman regard the small appropriation made for Olongapo adequate to begin a great improvement like that of making it a naval base?

Mr. SHERLEY. I notice that the language permits it, and the gentleman has heard the old story of the camel and the tent. Now, I do not propose to let the whole camel inside the tent by letting in the head.

Mr. HOBSON. The gentleman has been to Cavite. I wish to ask him if he thinks it a reasonable proposition that that shoal water there is available for a great naval base under the circumstances.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. I have not the time or I would answer the gentleman.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] to something which occurred in the Committee on Appropriations when the subject of fortifications was up for Subic Bay. General Crozier was on the stand. I read:

Mr. SHERLEY. General, before leaving this matter, what has heretofore been expended, if you know, looking to the fortification of Subic Bay, which is now to be abandoned?

General CROZIER. I can tell you that, sir. There has been provided for Subic Bay, still intending to go there, two 10-inch guns on disappearing carriages, four 6-inch guns on disappearing carriages, and eight 15-pounders and mounts.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is the expense growing out of the ordnance only?

General CROZIER. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. You have no direct knowledge of the other expenses?

General CROZIER. No. It would be only a guess. It differs so much at different places, that I would not like to guess. It depends on the engineering difficulties that they encounter in each particular locality. The cost for the armament which has been provided for Subic Bay and is going there is $260,800, and in addition two guns which we already have on hand, made some time ago, but which have not had to be specially appropriated for.

Mr. SHERLEY. In the absence of further provision for the fortification of Subic Bay, of what value would these guns that have already been ordered to go there be?

General CROZIER. They would prevent the enemy from going there and occupying it as a naval base, as a comfortable rendezvous for naval vessels; and they would require, in order that Subic Bay might be used for such purposes as that, that a landing force with some kind of artillery, siege artillery, should get ashore there and get up on the surrounding heights and make that place untenable. It would require that much of an effort before Subic Bay could be used as a base.

Now, Subic Bay has been fortified to some extent, and is being fortified probably to as great an extent as is necessary. Whether we have Subic Bay as a naval base or not, it is the testimony of our naval authorities that Subic Bay must be fortified.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSS. I do.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman does not mean to convey the impression that fortifications now at Subic Bay or those that are to be put there under existing appropriations are all that were contemplated if Subic Bay had been a naval base?

Mr. FOSS. No; I am simply stating that fortifications have already been put there to some extent.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman will recall that I stated that fact, and the justification was that they would have some value in the defense of Cavite, and if the gentleman will read the hearings fully he will find that statement made.

Mr. FOSS. I did not understand the gentleman to say that any fortifications have been put up there.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman did so state.

Mr. FOSS. The situation in regard to Subic Bay is this. When Mr. Moody was Secretary of the Navy, he came before the Committee and urged the establishment of a naval base at Subic Bay. He did it upon the opinion of the naval officers, who had made a careful investigation into different locations for a naval base in the Philippine Islands, and it was the opinion of our naval authorities at that time that Subic Bay was the most suitable place in the Philippine Islands for the establishment of a naval base. Congress at that time made an appropriation of some $850,000 for the establishment of a naval base at Subic Bay. Five hundred thousand dollars went into a coaling plant and the rest went into improvements at the naval station. We have been using there some of the equipment or buildings of the old Spanish naval station.

The Spaniards had been in the Philippine Islands for hundreds of years, and, in looking around for the most suitable place for a naval station, they had fixed upon Subic Bay. So we took what was left of the old naval station and have been getting on there in a very small way. We have made comparatively few appropriations for Subic Bay. In all they have amounted to about $2,750,000, but of that $1,250,000 has gone for a floating dry dock, which could be moved away. Of that $500,000 has been for a coaling plant.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman state at this time how much was estimated to be the total sum to make Subic Bay a naval base?

Mr. FOSS. There have been various amounts estimated from time to time. It depends entirely on how large a base you want. The first estimate that was made, some years ago, amounted to $20,000,000. That was the maximum. The committee paid no attention to these estimates.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FOSS. I ask unanimous consent to continue for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOSS. Then another estimate was made of about $12,000,000 and submitted to the committee by the Navy board. Then Mr. Moody brought in an estimate of $8,000,000, at the time when he appeared before the committee urging the importance of this.

And then Admiral Dewey came along a little later and said:

Do not give us a great naval station there, but give us a little something.

He perhaps more than any man in the Navy recognized the great importance of Subic Bay. He expected to find the Spanish fleet there and he turned the prows of his ships into Subic Bay expecting they would be there, because he regarded, from the standpoint of naval strategy, that Subic Bay is the place for a naval station, and he believes it to-day as much as he ever believed it before. Now, we——

Mr. COCKS of New York. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. FOSS. I decline to be interrupted. Secretary Moody, as I said, appeared before the committee, and there were brought in these recommendations for the establishment of a naval base at Subic Bay. The joint Navy and Army board agreed to it unanimously. We have had three or four joint Army and Navy boards and they have all agreed upon that proposition. Four Secretaries of the Navy—Mr. Long, Mr. Moody, Mr. Morton, and Mr. Bonaparte—have recommended this station. Now comes along the joint Army and Naval board this year and tries to upset the whole proposition of the previous joint Army and Navy boards and the recommendations that have been made in previous years, and that comes before the committee practically after the bill has been drawn up. When the Secretary of the Navy was before the committee he did not know anything about this report of the joint Army and Navy board. Now, what is the report of the joint Army and Navy board? Let me read you just one paragraph, in which it states the whole situation. This is signed by George Dewey, Admiral of the Navy, senior member:

That as to the first named of these considerations—

Referring to the naval base—

JOINT BOARD,
Washington, January 31, 1908.

SIR: The joint board at its meeting of this date and at various meetings previously held took up the consideration of the question of the suitability of Subic Bay for a naval base, having regard to its capability for defense, by the United States forces which will be available, against attack from both the sea and land sides; and further, as to whether the naval base, with all its appurtenances, should not be located behind the fortifications of Manila Bay.

These questions were brought before the board by an order of the President, dated October 26, 1907.

After mature consideration of all features involved, the joint board unanimously adopted the following resolutions:

"I. That the proper defense of the Philippine Islands includes the fortification of the entrances of both Manila and Subic bays, such fortification being essential both to protect the armed forces of the United States and to prevent occupation by an enemy.

"II. That in order to sustain any policy of the United States in the Orient, a suitable naval base in the Philippines is essential; and that, in the selection of such a base, it is necessary to consider the adaptability of the site for purposes connected with the shelter, supply, and repair of a fleet and its capability of defense against attacks both from land and sea for such a period as may be necessary for the preparation and transfer of the battle fleet to Philippine waters from the most distant station at which it may be found at the outbreak of hostilities, probably the Atlantic coast of the United States.

"III. That, as to the first named of these considerations, Subic Bay is the most suitable port in the Philippines; as to the second, the Army has determined that the conditions surrounding Subic Bay are such that no land fortifications of any kind can be erected covering the bay which will enable the Army to hold it, with any such land force as Congress is at all liable to authorize for permanent maintenance in the Philippine Islands, against a serious land attack.

"IV. That the alternative is to locate the naval base in Manila Bay.

"V. That in the event of threatened hostilities involving the Philippine Islands before the establishment of a naval base in Manila Bay, all the military resources of the United States available in those islands should be devoted to the protection of the temporary naval base, wherever it may be."

Very respectfully,

GEORGE DEWEY,
Admiral of the Navy, Senior Member.

The honorable the SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

Now, what are you going to do? I may say, ever since the naval authorities established our naval station at Subic Bay for some reason or other the Army has been opposed to it. They say they can not defend the naval base. Is there necessity for defense of it? Is there a navy-yard in our own country which is defended behind? Is this true of New York? Are there any fortifications behind it? If you regard the Filipinos as peaceful people and our base on peaceful territory, what is the necessity for the defense? Shall we defend against the Filipinos?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. FOSS. I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FOSS. Who shall we defend it against; an invading force? Then they must get into the Philippine Islands some way behind this naval base and come up over the mountains. Where will they come from? Japan, China, or where? How will they get there if we have command of the sea; and this whole question of the protection and fortification of the Philippine Islands depends ultimately and fundamentally upon one proposition and that is, Who is to command the sea? Now, gentlemen, that is the situation. They say "go to Manila Bay." Will the joint Army and Navy board please point out any location in Manila Bay? Where is there a place in Manila Bay anywhere near the shore where we can locate this great floating dry dock which is now in Subic Bay and which takes 50 or 60 feet of water to locate it in. Take our station at Cavite. There was an old Spanish station on which we have spent perhaps $50,000 a year in repairs, not more than that to maintain it there, and yet you can not get within 2 miles of Cavite with a big battle ship; and not only that, but if you will look into the records of the Navy Department down here you will find it will cost at least $5,000,000 to dredge sufficiently deep to get a battle ship up to Cavite station. And when you go to Cavite station, what have you got? Only a few acres of land—21 in all—whereas at Olongapo you have a great naval reservation of 15 square miles or over.

At Cavite you have got only just a little narrow strip of land, and low land at that, to which you can not bring vessels to be repaired, except light vessels; and not only that, by reason of the fact that the entrance to Manila Bay is some 8 miles wide, whenever there is a storm there, a typhoon or monsoon, it sweeps in there and destroys the shipping unless it is behind a breakwater, and you can moor no dry dock there in any suitable place at the present time that would not be taken away from its moorings in one of those storms.

And so, as I say, if the Army and Navy board want the naval station at Manila Bay they must first point out the location. They must first find a place to put the dry dock. They have not done it yet, and until they do it we must appropriate in this bill for the maintenance of the naval base as it is to-day. Why? Because we have got to do business during the next year. Now, recommendations were made by the Secretary of the Navy for how much for Olongapo? Five hundred and fifty-five thousand dollars. Did the committee grant it? No. What did they grant? One hundred thousand dollars. And, in addition, a reappropriation of another appropriation that was made in Secretary Moody's time which had become unavailable by reason of the language of the appropriation, and they made that appropriation in such language as would make it available. So we have got $200,000 in this bill, a little more than a third less than what the Secretary of the Navy recommended, and that is the provision here. And I say to you it will take some time if we go to Manila Bay to find a suitable location, and it will take a longer time to dredge Manila Bay so that we can get our dry dock to the naval station; and it will take a longer time still before we will be ready to do the business, which we have been doing in a mild, economical way, at Subic Bay, where we have docked more than fifty vessels during the last year. Now, in view of that situation, what is this committee to do? Only one thing, and that is to provide for the needs and the necessities of coming years as we provided for them in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MANN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 20471—the naval appropriation bill—and had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CROCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 20310. An act relating to the liability of common carriers by railroad to their employees in certain cases.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 17983. An act for completing the pediment of the House wing of the Capitol.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 4780. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to make certain disposition of obsolete Springfield rifles, caliber .45, bayonets, and bayonet scabbards for same;

H. R. 18689. An act to authorize the Secretary of War to furnish two condemned brass or bronze cannon and cannon balls to the city of Winchester, Va.; and

H. R. 18754. An act granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the civil war and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. CALDER was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Frank E. Pierce, H. R. 12710, Sixtieth Congress, no adverse report having beeen made thereon.

Mr. KNOPF was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the case of Duncan C. Milner, H. R. 19891, Sixtieth Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted to—

Mr. PATTERSON, for an indefinite period, on account of death in family.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee, for two days, on account of sickness.

Mr. HAGGOTT, for a period of three weeks, in order to attend to important business matters.

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY BILL.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the concurrent resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. STERLING] asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the following concurrent resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House concurrent resolution No. 37.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in enrolling the bill H. R. 20310, relating to the liability of common carriers by railroads, to their employees in certain cases, the enrolling clerk be directed to correct said bill by inserting in section 3, after the word "railroad," in line 2, the words "under or by virtue of any of the provisions of this act," so that said section 3 will read as follows:

"SEC. 3. That in all actions hereafter brought against any such common carrier by railroad, under or by virtue of any of the provisions of this act, to recover damages for personal injuries to an employee, or where such injuries have resulted in his death, the fact that the employee may have been guilty of contributory negligence shall not bar a recovery, but the damages shall be diminished by the jury in proportion to the amount of negligence attributable to such employee: Provided, that no such employee who may be injured or killed shall be held to have been guilty of contributory negligence in any case where the violation by such common carrier of any statute enacted for the safety of employees contributed to the injury or death of such employee."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I will ask the gentleman from Illinois to yield a moment to me.

Mr. STERLING. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I want to explain for the benefit of this side of the House, briefly, why I do not object to unanimous consent in this particular case. This is a clerical error which was made in the employers' liability bill. The employers' liability bill is one of the pieces of legislation upon the minority programme; and, of course, I will not object to any rate of speed, however great, which makes a law of it and puts it on the statute book. I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

The question was taken, and the resolution was agreed to.

VETO MESSAGE OF THE PRESIDENT.

The Speaker laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read:

To the House of Representatives:

I return herewith, without my approval, House bill 15444, to extend the time for the construction of a dam across Rainy River.

This bill is returned for several reasons, some of which are general, others special. In this particular case permission to construct this dam was originally given, as being in Rainy Lake River, by the act of May 4, 1898 (30 Stat., 398), which limited the time for commencing the work to one year and for completing it to three years from that date. Further extensions of time were granted as follows: For commencement, three years, and for completion, five years from May 4, 1900, by the act of that date (31 Stat., 167); for construction until May 4, 1907, by the act of June 28, 1902 (32 Stat., 485); for completion until July 1, 1908, by the act of February 25, 1905 (33 Stat., 814). The act of 1905 substituted the Rainy River Improvement Company for the original permittee. All rights given by these acts will expire July 1, 1908, unless the dam is completed on or before that date. In other words, the permittees will then have enjoyed for more than ten years the exclusive privilege of constructing this work, and have apparently failed to take advantage of it, for this bill would extend the time for three years longer to some unnamed day in July, 1911.

I do not believe that natural resources should be granted and held in an undeveloped condition either for speculative or other reasons. So far as I am aware, there are no assurances that the grantees are in any better condition promptly and properly to utilize this opportunity than they were at the time of the original act, ten years ago.

In all permits of this character the duty of declaring a forfeiture, after notice and hearing, for failure to begin or complete construction within the time limited by the permit, or for other breach of conditions, should be definitely imposed upon the proper administrative officer (in this case the Secretary of War). There have been many unfortunate experiences resulting from conditional grants, which, though on their face apparently terminable for breach of condition, proved practically indeterminate because no one official was specifically given power to discover and declare the breach. The general statute regulating dams in navigable waters (act June 21, 1906, 34 Stat., 386), though representing an advance, yet leaves uncertain much that should be definitely expressed in each act permitting the construction of dams under this statute.

A definite time limit is one of these important omissions. The public must retain the control of the great waterways. It is essential that any permit to obstruct them for reasons and on conditions that seem good at the moment should be subject to revision when changed conditions demand. The right reserved by Congress to alter, amend, or repeal is based on this principle; but actual experience of what happens with indeterminate public-utility franchises proves that they are in the vast majority of cases practically perpetual. Each right should be issued to expire on a specified day without further legislative, administrative, or judicial action.

Every permit to construct a dam on a navigable stream should specifically recognize the right of the Government to fix a term for its duration and to impose such charge or charges as may be deemed necessary to protect the present and future interests of the United States in accordance with the act of June 21, 1906. There is sharp conflict of judgment as to whether this general act empowers the War Department to fix a charge and set a time limit. All grounds for such doubt should be removed henceforth by the insertion in every act granting such a permit of words adequate to show that a time limit and a charge to be paid to the Government are among the interests of the United States which should be protected through conditions and stipulations to be imposed either by the War Department, or, as I think would be preferable, by the Interior Department.

The provision for a charge is of vital importance. The navigability of every inland waterway, and of all connected or connectable inland waterways as a whole, should be improved for the purposes of interstate and foreign commerce upon a consistent unified plan by which each part should be made to help every other part. One means available for the improvement of navigation at a particular point on any river may be a dam creating a slack-water pool of sufficient depth. Such a dam may, in many cases, develop power of sufficient value to pay in whole or in part for the improvement of navigation at that point, and if there is any surplus it can be spent upon improvements at other points in accordance with the general plan. Since the Government can do by any proper agency what it can do directly it is in principle immaterial whether this income to construct needed improvements is derived from works constructed directly by the Government or by a corporation acting under Federal authority, since Federal authority is the one indispensable legal prerequisite for the work, though the charge to be paid to the Government for the power would of course differ in the two cases; indeed the charge would necessarily vary greatly, for where the improvement was both costly and of great benefit to the public, the charge would naturally be made low and the time limit long.

The income derivable from this source would materially aid in the complete improvement of our navigable waters, for which there is now such crying need. The Chief of Engineers of the Army reports that the bills pending at this session of Congress permit the construction of dams in navigable streams capable of developing over 1,300,000 horsepower. These rivers run every hour in the day and every day in the year. To develop this amount of power would, under average conditions, require about 25,000,000 tons of medium-quality coal every year. This natural wealth is the heritage of the people. I see no reason for giving it away, though there is every reason for not imposing conditions so burdensome as to prevent the utilization of the power. The authority to make, modify, or withhold grants manifestly implies both the power of inquiring into the grounds on which the grants are asked and the duty of administering the grants in the public interest.

We are now at the beginning of great development in water power. Its use through electrical transmission is entering more and more largely into every element of the daily life of the people. Already the evils of monopoly are becoming manifest; already the experience of the past shows the necessity of caution in making unrestricted grants of this great power.

The present policy pursued in making these grants is unwise in giving away the property of the people in the flowing waters to individuals or organizations practically unknown, and granting in perpetuity these valuable privileges in advance of the formulation of definite plans as to their use. In some cases the grantees apparently have little or no financial or other ability to utilize the gift, and have sought it merely because it could be had for the asking.

In place of the present haphazard policy of permanently alienating valuable public property we should substitute a definite policy along the following lines:

First. There should be a limited or carefully guarded grant in the nature of an option or opportunity afforded within reasonable time for development of plans and for execution of the project.

Second. Such a grant of concession should be accompanied in the act making the grant by a provision expressly making it the duty of the designated official to annul the grant if the work is not begun or plans are not carried out in accordance with the authority granted.

Third. It should also be the duty of some designated official to see to it that in approving the plans the maximum development of the navigation and power is assured, or at least that in making the plans these may not be so developed as ultimately to interfere with the better utilization of the water or complete development of the power.

Fourth. There should be a license fee or charge which, though small or nominal at the outset, can in the future be adjusted so as to secure a control in the interest of the public.

Fifth. Provision should be made for the termination of the grant or privilege at a definite time, leaving to future generations the power or authority to renew or extend the concession in accordance with the conditions which may prevail at that time.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 13, 1908.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the message and the bill be referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Reserving the right to object, I ask the gentleman to yield to me about three minutes.

Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. PAYNE. Of course that requires unanimous consent, which I suppose the gentleman asked for.

Mr. MANN. I can make a motion and then yield.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I reserved the right to object and the gentleman yielded to me.

Mr. Speaker, this is a veto message of a bill to permit a dam to be placed in a navigable stream. The President vetoes the bill upon the ground that the bill does not provide a time limit for the expiration of the very valuable privilege granted in the bill; and, secondly, because the bill does not reserve the right to the Government to fix a charge for the use of the power that is to be generated from the dam. The request is to permit the bill, with the message, to go to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. I shall not make objection, because I hope that that committee will consider the measure very carefully and will either insert in this particular bill or in a general law a provision safeguarding the rights of the people in the resources of the country in matters of this sort, and put an end to the present careless and wasteful giving away for nothing of these very valuable privileges, some of which are worth half a million and others a million dollars, which Congress has given to private firms and corporations without a cent of compensation to the public and without any limitation upon the life of the franchise.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection, and the message and the bill are referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

DENYING ANARCHIST PUBLICATIONS THE USE OF THE MAILS.

The Speaker also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads and ordered to be printed.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I herewith submit a letter from the Department of Justice which explains itself. Under this opinion, I hold that existing statutes give the President the power to prohibit the Postmaster-General from being used as an instrument in the commission of crime; that is, to prohibit the use of the mails for the advocacy of murder, arson, and treason; and I shall act upon such construction. Unquestionably, however, there should be further legislation by Congress in this matter. When compared with the suppression of anarchy, every other question sinks into insignificance. The anarchist is the enemy of humanity, the enemy of all mankind, and his is a deeper degree of criminality than any other. No immigrant is allowed to come to our shores if he is an anarchist; and no paper published here or abroad should be permitted circulation in this country if it propagates anarchistic opinions.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 9, 1908.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, pending that, I move that the House do now take a recess until the usual hour, 11.30 to-morrow morning.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York moves that the House take a recess until 11.30 to-morrow morning.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided, and there were—ayes, 140; nays, 87.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I respectfully demand tellers.

Mr. PAYNE. I make the point of order that the demand is dilatory, in view of the preponderating vote just taken.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will again rule that in the opinion of the Chair the point of order is well taken.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, one word upon the point of order, if the Chair will permit me.

Mr. PAYNE. I suppose the point of order is decided.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Just one sentence will make the Chair change his opinion. The proposition is to take a recess, and it is not yet 5 o'clock. I am opposing that; and the Chair has ruled out the proposition for taking tellers as dilatory, whereas by such a course of conduct the one I wish to defeat is dilatory.

If we should continue in session until 5 o'clock, which would be the result of my winning out after taking the vote by tellers, then we would expedite the public business. [Laughter and applause.] So that my motion goes exactly to the opposite.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Mississippi hold that the Chair could ask him, without violating his constitutional rights, whether the gentleman or any Member on his side would demand the yeas and nays after the tellers? [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I decline to have my statesmanship projected into the future by the suggestion of the Chair. [Laughter.] Mr. Speaker, I now demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 150, nays 95, answered "present" 8, not voting 134, as follows:

SENATE.

TUESDAY, April 14, 1908.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. EDWARD E. HALE.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on request of Mr. KEAN, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

SWISS EMBROIDERY AND LACE INDUSTRY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, transmitting, pursuant to law, the report of Special Agent W. A. Graham Clark on the Swiss embroidery and lace industry, together with additional reports from consular officers in other countries on the manufacture of embroidery and lace, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

ACTION OF NEW YORK CITY BANKS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of February 18, 1908, copies of all letters and telegrams received by the Secretary of the Treasury and the Treasurer of the United States relative to the refusal of the national banks in New York City to furnish currency for the needs of interior banks, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution to correct an error in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 20310) relating to the liability of common carriers by railroads to their employees in certain cases, by inserting in section 3, line 2, after the word "railroad," the words "under or by virtue of any of the provisions of this act," in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill H. R. 17983, an act for completing the pediment of the House wing of the Capitol, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

Mr. PILES. I report back favorably, without amendment, from the Committee on Commerce, the bill (S. 6539) to authorize the Copper River and Northwestern Railway Company to construct a bridge across Bering Lake, in the district of Alaska, and I submit a report (No. 515) thereon. On behalf of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. SCOTT. I ask that it may go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. PILES. From the Committee on Commerce, I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 6540) to authorize the Copper River Railway Company to construct two bridges across the Copper River, in the district of Alaska, and I submit a report (No. 516) thereon. On behalf of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. KEAN. Let the bill go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

PLEASANT M. CRAIGMILES, DECEASED.

Mr. FRAZIER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4770) for the relief of the legal representatives of Pleasant M. Craigmiles, deceased, reported the following resolution, which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 4770) for the relief of the legal representatives of Pleasant M. Craigmiles, deceased, now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887. And the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act, and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

FUNERAL EXPENSES OF THE LATE SENATOR WHYTE.

Mr. KEAN, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the following resolution, submitted yesterday by Mr. RAYNER, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay from the contingent fund of the Senate the expenses incurred for Senators and officers of the Senate in attending the funeral of the late Senator William Pinkney Whyte, of Maryland, on March 19, 1908, including floral offering furnished.

PUBLIC LANDS IN WYOMING.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I report back favorably, with amendments, from the Committee on Public Lands, the joint resolution (S. R. 66) providing for additional lands for Wyoming under the provisions of the Carey Act, and I submit a report (No. 505) thereon. I call the attention of my colleague to the joint resolution.

Mr. WARREN. The joint resolution is a short one, it concerns a local matter, and it is important that it should be passed at an early time. I ask for its present consideration.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Wyoming to the fact that the joint resolution which we passed February 22 has been reported favorably from the committee, amended in the House, including the lands called for in this joint resolution. I think, probably, the Senator's attention has not been called to it.

Mr. WARREN. My attention had been called to it, but it has not yet passed the House, nor has the Wyoming portion ever passed the Senate, and I desire that this joint resolution shall now pass the Senate to strengthen the matter the Senator has called my attention to as pending on the House side in the way of an amendment.

Mr. NELSON. I would call the Senator's attention to the fact that an amendment is necessary in the joint resolution because of the striking out of the preamble.

Mr. WARREN. The amendments are about to be read now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendments of the committee.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 1, strike out the words "to be subject to the terms of said acts" and insert in lieu—and subject to the terms of section 4 of an act of Congress entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1895, and for other purposes," approved August 18, 1894, and by amendments thereto.

Mr. BACON. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Wyoming that it is impossible for us to act intelligently upon this amendment unless we know something about the substantive proposition. I do not wish to unduly delay the proceeding, but if there is a report I would be glad to have it read. If not, I think the Senator, as it seems to be a matter which concerns a very large interest, should inform the Senate substantially what the purpose is.

Mr. WARREN. It is a matter that I assumed every Senator was duly acquainted with. It simply extends a law already existing so as to cover another million acres that may be reclaimed under provisions of the existing laws. The amendment is simply to conform the reservations and stipulations of the original act and the supplementary act. If the Senator wishes to have the joint resolution go over I do not wish to press it.

Mr. BACON. No; I do not wish it to go over, but the Senator says that he supposes all Senators are familiar with the matter. Senators who live in the public-land States are naturally more familiar with legislation in regard thereto than those of us who do not. At the same time it is our purpose and our wish to vote intelligently.

Mr. WARREN. May I say to the Senator in short——

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Will the Senator from Georgia allow me a moment?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the senior Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. BACON. I do.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I desire to say to the Senator from Georgia that, anticipating his inquiry and knowing that many Senators have not had their attention called to some of the parts of the various land acts, there is included in the report upon this particular joint resolution, which in itself is very short, a full synopsis of the act and the operations under it, together with a reprint of the law itself and the regulations of the General Land Office with relation thereto. I think the Senator will find that it is one of the most beneficial of all the acts we have ever passed.

Mr. BACON. I understand the Senator to say that the report is short.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. No; I say the joint resolution is very short. The report is very long, so as to inform the Senate generally of the operation of the law.

Mr. BACON. If other Senators understand it, I would not myself wish to stand in the way, but if other Senators have as little information on it as I have they are not in a position to vote upon it intelligently.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. We will be glad to give the Senator any detailed information on any particular feature.

Mr. BACON. I simply asked that the Senator's colleague should state the purpose, in brief, of the proposed legislation, in the absence of the reading of a long report.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I will take just a moment.

Some years ago, in order to initiate the irrigation of arid lands, a million acres of the public domain was placed at the disposal of each of the arid-land States under the conditions that if the State granted to individuals or corporations the right to build reservoirs and ditches to reclaim such lands, then there might be settlers by authority of the State, settling as homesteaders upon the public land, paying nothing to the United States, but settling with the States and with those who brought on the water for the reclamation of the land.

It then required legislation on the part of the several States. Such legislation was had. For some years the matter moved slowly, but later on the lands were taken up, and in some States the supply of lands has been exhausted. We have already provided additional lands for Idaho in a similar joint resolution. Wyoming has exhausted so much of the million acres that pending applications will not only exhaust the remainder, but call for a portion of this proposed additional million acres.

This million acres belongs to the United States, and remains as it is until the State as such shall apply for certain tracts, backed up with maps and full directions and full information as to the reclamation of the land, so that the land only goes from the United States through the States to settlers after the water has been taken on the land and distributed.

The joint resolution merely adds another million acres, as has been done for Idaho, and under the same terms that every arid-land State has enjoyed as to the original million acres.

Mr. BACON. I will simply ask this question of the Senator.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. WARREN. I yield. I am through.

Mr. BACON. The only effect of the joint resolution is to apply a different method by which settlers may get land. Am I correct in that?

Mr. WARREN. It is not different from what has preceded it.

Mr. BACON. I understand that.

Mr. WARREN. But it is to add another million acres to the bank account, if I may so call it, of the State to be drawn upon accordingly as settlers and reclaimers will present their claims.

Mr. BACON. But the land goes to the settlers and not to the State? That is the point I am after.

Mr. WARREN. Yes; eventually.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Committee on Public Lands.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 3, after the word "acts," to insert a comma, and also, after the word "acts," to strike out the words "to purchase."

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee striking out the preamble.

The amendment was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. TELLER introduced a bill (S. 6626) providing for the condemnation for any public purpose of lands owned or held by the United States, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also introduced the following bills, which were severally read twice by their titles and referred to the Committee on Pensions:

Mr. FLINT introduced a bill (S. 6632) to amend section 6 of an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. McCUMBER introduced a bill (S. 6633) granting an increase of pension to William W. Barton, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. STONE introduced a bill (S. 6634) authorizing the Court of Claims to hear and adjudicate the claims of Samuel Garland, deceased, against the Choctaw Nation, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. MONEY introduced a bill (S. 6635) for the relief of heirs of C. H. Hicks, deceased, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. DIXON introduced a bill (S. 6636) for the relief of Bull Snake and Old Coyote, Crow Indians, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DANIEL introduced a bill (S. 6637) granting a pension to Marcelina Jerusha Cox, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BACON introduced a bill (S. 6638) for the relief of the Lutheran Church of the Ascension, of Savannah, Ga., which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. TALIAFERRO introduced a bill (S. 6639) granting an increase of pension to Bartola Canova, which was read twice by its title and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. FOSTER introduced a bill (S. 6640) authorizing appropriations for South Pass of the Mississippi River, or surveys thereon, to be used in dredging said river above the pass to secure 35 feet and suitable width, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment providing that after June 30, 1908, all clerks and draftsmen and classified civil-service employees whose compensation is based on a monthly or yearly rate, employed at United States arsenals, shall be granted thirty working days' leave of absence in each year, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment providing that after June 30, 1908, all clerks and draftsmen and classified civil-service employees whose compensation is based on a monthly or yearly rate, employed at United States arsenals, shall be granted thirty working days' leave of absence in each year, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CULLOM submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $29,000 for the construction of a trunk sewer in the subdivision of North Columbia Heights, in the District of Columbia, intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SCOTT submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $50,000 to enable the Secretary of War to erect in the United States National Cemetery at Mexico City, Mexico, a suitable monument to the memory of the United States soldiers who fought in the war with Mexico, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $10,000 to aid in the erection and completion of a monument or memorial at Point Pleasant, W. Va., to commemorate the battle of the Revolution fought at that point between the Colonial troops and Indians October 10, 1774, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CRANE submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $7,500 to complete the grading of Girard street, South Brookland, from Fourteenth street to Brentwood road, and macadamize Girard street, South Brookland, from Twelfth street to Brentwood road, intended to be proposed by him to the District of Columbia appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. NELSON submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $15,000 for the erection of a building for use of the Weather Bureau and for all necessary labor, materials and expenses, plans and specifications, etc., at the Minnesota State Agricultural College and Experimental Station, at St. Anthony Park, Minn., intended to be proposed by him to the agricultural appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PERKINS submitted an amendment providing that the pay and allowances, except forage and mileage, which shall be governed by existing law, of all officers of the Navy and the Marine Corps shall be the same as the pay and allowances of officers of corresponding rank in the Army, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

SITES FOR PUBLIC BUILDINGS.

Mr. SCOTT submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill to increase the limit of cost of certain public buildings, to authorize the purchase of sites for public buildings, to authorize the erection and completion of public buildings, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and ordered to be printed.

AMENDMENT TO OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. McCREARY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 15372, known as the "omnibus claims bill," which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

REGULATION OF LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

Mr. BACON. I submit a substitute which is intended to be proposed by myself in behalf of the minority of the Judiciary Committee to the bill (S. 6576) to regulate the interstate-commerce shipments of intoxicating liquors, reported by the Judiciary Committee as a substitute for Senate bill 5151 and other bills to regulate interstate commerce in intoxicating liquors. As it relates to a matter of considerable interest, I ask that the proposed substitute may be printed in the RECORD without now being read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection it is so ordered.

The proposed substitute is as follows:

Substitute intended to be proposed by Mr. BACON, representing a minority of the Judiciary Committee, to the bill reported by the Judiciary Committee as a substitute for Senate bill 5151 and other bills to regulate interstate commerce in intoxicating liquors.

"Be it enacted, etc., That whenever any spirituous, vinous, malt, or intoxicating liquors of any kind shall, by being transported from one State or Territory or District into another State or Territory or District, or from a foreign country into any State or Territory or District, become a part of interstate or foreign commerce, said liquors are for all the purposes of this act hereby constituted a special class in such commerce subject to the regulatory powers of Congress, and are hereby declared to be, upon arrival at the place of consignment, within the borders of said State or Territory or District, and before delivery to the consignee or other person claiming any title or interest in the same, subject in all particulars and to the fullest extent to the police powers of such State or Territory or District, and shall not be exempt therefrom by reason of being introduced in original packages or otherwise: Provided, That nothing in this act shall authorize any interruption of or interference with, by any State or Territory or District or its authority, the transportation of such merchandise from without such State or Territory or District to the place of consignment within such State or Territory or District: And provided further, That it shall be unlawful for any railroad company, express company, or other common carrier, or other carrier engaged in foreign or interstate commerce to deliver or offer to deliver to any person any of such liquors at any other point than the point of consignment, or to unnecessarily and unduly arrest the transportation of such liquors at any other point than the point of consignment, with the intent either directly or indirectly to violate the provisions of this act.

"SEC. 2. That whenever any spirituous, vinous, malt, and intoxicating liquors of any kind shall be or become a part of foreign or interstate commerce, it shall be unlawful for any railroad company, express company, or other carrier, or any officer, employee, or agent thereof, engaged in or in connection with the transportation of such liquors of any kind from one State or Territory or District into another State or Territory or District, or from any foreign country into any State or Territory or District, when such liquors are consigned to any point within a State or Territory or District where by the law of said State or Territory or District the sale of such liquors is prohibited, or restricted, to collect, either directly or indirectly, on or before or after delivery from the consignor or consignee, or from any other person, the purchase price or any part thereof of such liquors; and it shall be unlawful for any railroad company, express company, or other carrier, officer, employee, or agent thereof, engaged as aforesaid, in any manner, directly or indirectly, to act as the agent of the consignor or consignee, or of the buyer or seller of such liquors, for the purpose in any manner or degree of buying or selling the same, saving only in the actual transportation and delivery of the same and to the extent as provided in this act, subject in all cases to the full exercise of the police powers of the State or Territory or District into which such liquors are transported.

"SEC. 3. That it shall be unlawful for any railroad company, express company, or other carrier, officer, employee, or agent thereof, engaged as aforesaid, to accept for transportation, or to transport from any State or Territory or District into any other State or Territory or District, or from any foreign country into any State or Territory or District, spirituous, vinous, malt, or intoxicating liquors consigned to any fictitious person or to any fictitious name, or without consignment to some person, or after having so accepted or transported any such liquors consigned to any fictitious person or fictitious name, or without consignment to any person, to deliver the same to any person whomsoever except in pursuance of the requirements of the police regulations as aforesaid of the State or Territory or District into which said liquors are thus transported.

"SEC. 4. That every railroad company, express company, or other carrier as aforesaid, or any officer, employee, or agent thereof, who shall knowingly violate the provisions of this act or any part thereof shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine of not less than $500 and not more than $5,000: Provided, That any officer, employee, or agent of such company or carrier who shall be convicted as aforesaid shall, in addition to the fine herein provided for, be liable, in the discretion of the court, to imprisonment for a term of not less than one nor more than two years.

"SEC. 5. That nothing in this act shall be construed to authorize a State, Territory, or District to control or otherwise interrupt or interfere with the transportation of liquors intended for shipment entirely through such State, Territory, or District and not intended for delivery therein.

"SEC. 6. That every package containing any spirituous, vinous, malt, or intoxicating liquors of any kind when delivered to any carrier for shipment from any State or Territory or District into another State or Territory or District, or from any foreign country into any State or Territory or District, shall be plainly and distinctly marked with the names of the consignor and consignee, with name and quantity of the liquors contained therein, and the name of the place of shipment and of the place of consignment. And all packages of such intoxicating liquors and the contents thereof which shall be delivered to any carrier for shipment from one State or Territory or District into another State or Territory or District without having thereon the marks as required by this act shall be forfeited to the United States; and when shipped from any foreign country into any State or Territory or District without having thereon the marks, as required by this act, shall, upon arrival within the jurisdiction of the United States, be forfeited to the United States; and all such packages and the contents thereof shall be proceeded against, seized, and forfeited by due course of law. And every person within the jurisdiction of the United States who shall deliver to a carrier any such liquor or package of liquors for shipment from any State or Territory or District into another State or Territory or District without having thereon the marks, as required by this act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and for such offense shall be punished by a fine of not less than $100 and not exceeding $1,000.

"SEC. 7. That all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed."

Mr. BACON. I also ask that the proposed substitute be printed and that it lie on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BACON. I desire to state in this connection, as there is no minority report in this matter, that the substitute which I present is substantially the same as Senate bill 5151, there being only some amendments which are deemed by the friends of it essential to being incorporated thereon.

REPORT OF INLAND WATERWAYS COMMISSION.

Mr. PILES (for Mr. NEWLANDS) submitted the following concurrent resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound at the Government Printing Office 10,000 copies of the preliminary report of the Inland Waterways Commission, with illustrations, of which 5,000 copies shall be for the House of Representatives, 2,500 copies for the Senate, and 2,500 copies for the use of the Commission.

NATIONAL BISON RANGE.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I should like to ask unanimous consent at this time for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 6159) to establish a permanent national bison range.

Mr. KEAN. Let us have the regular order, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded. Are there further concurrent or other resolutions?

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. M. C. LATTA, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed the following act:

On April 13, 1908:

S. 4260. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, and all acts amendatory thereof, and to enlarge the powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission," approved June 29, 1906.

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives:

House concurrent resolution 37.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in enrolling the bill (H. R. 20310) relating to the liability of common carriers by railroads to their employees in certain cases, the enrolling clerk be directed to correct said bill by inserting in section 3, after the word "railroad," in line 2, the words "under or by virtue of any of the provisions of this act," so that said section 3 will read as follows:

"SEC. 3. That in all actions hereafter brought against any such common carrier by railroad, under or by virtue of any of the provisions of this act, to recover damages for personal injuries to an employee, or where such injuries have resulted in his death, the fact that the employee may have been guilty of contributory negligence shall not bar a recovery, but the damages shall be diminished by the jury in proportion to the amount of negligence attributable to such employee: Provided, That no such employee who may be injured or killed shall be held to have been guilty of contributory negligence in any case where the violation by such common carrier of any statute enacted for the safety of employees contributed to the injury or death of such employee.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate agree to the concurrent resolution.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

Mr. McCUMBER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15653) to increase the pension of widows of deceased soldiers and sailors of the late civil war, the war with Mexico, the various Indian wars, etc., and to grant a pension to certain widows of the deceased soldiers and sailors of the late civil war, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recedes from its amendment to section 1 of the bill;

That the Senate recedes from its amendment on lines 14 and 15, page 2, of the bill;

That the Senate recedes from its amendment on line 20, page 2, after "six;"

That the Senate recedes from its amendment to the title of the bill;

That the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate in line 12, page 2 of the bill;

That the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate on lines 17, 18, and 19, page 2 of the bill; and agree to the same.

P. J. McCUMBER,
N. B. SCOTT,
JAS. P. TALIAFERRO,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

C. A. SULLOWAY,
H. C. LOUDENSLAGER,
CHAS. H. WEISSE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. McCUMBER. As the report itself does not signify clearly what disagreements have been disposed of between the two Houses, I wish to state briefly what they are.

The Sulloway bill as it passed the House extended the benefits of the law raising widows' pensions from $8 to $12 per month to all those who were married prior to June 27, 1890. The Senate amended that portion of the bill by extending the privileges to all of those who were or should be married prior to the date of the enactment of the bill into a law. The Senate conferees receded from that proposition and this agreement leaves the bill in its original shape, that its benefits shall apply only to those who were married prior to 1890.

It is but fair to say that without this receding on the part of the Senate conferees it would have been impossible, in my opinion, to have secured a bill. The Senate, by its vote and also the Senate Committee on Pensions and the Senate conferees, believe that fixing any date other than the date on which the law should go into effect as a period of demarcation between the marriage of those who should be entitled to the benefits of the act and those who should be excluded would be illogical. As a matter of fact, it is well know that perhaps four-fifths of the soldiers were not married until after the close of the war, and those marriage ceremonies have been continuing up to the present time. So we could fix absolutely no date that we could say would be a logical date unless we were to consider the war widows alone.

Undoubtedly the Senate and the House will have an opportunity to pass directly upon that question after this bill shall have become a law, as unquestionably a new bill will be introduced for the purpose of extending its benefits so that it will include all those who were married prior to the passage and the approval of the act.

The other important feature is this: The House extended the benefits of the bill to the widows of the Spanish war who are now entitled to receive pensions. It will be remembered that those widows of soldiers who served in the Spanish war entitled to receive pensions of at less than $12 per month, under the present law, are those only who were married during the war or prior to the war, and the death of whose husbands was due to service origin. The Senate conferees recede from the Senate amendment, cutting out the provisions of the bill which apply to those widows. The number is comparatively few.

Those were the only important disagreements.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. McCUMBER. With pleasure.

Mr. NELSON. Do I understand that the bill now makes a flat rate of $12 per month to all widows instead of $8, as before?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; it simply changes the amount from $8 to $12 to all widows who were married prior to June 27, 1890, and it also leaves out the clause under the old 1890 law, which required them to show that they were receiving an income of less than $250 a year.

Mr. NELSON. It repeals the property qualification.

Mr. McCUMBER. It repeals the property qualification.

Mr. NELSON. And makes a flat rate of $12 a month.

Mr. McCUMBER. It makes a flat rate of $12 a month.

The report was agreed to.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE SENATORS FROM FLORIDA.

Mr. TALIAFERRO. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on Saturday, May 2, immediately after the routine morning business, I shall ask the Senate to consider resolutions commemorative of the lives, character, and public services of my late colleagues, Hon. STEPHEN R. MALLORY and the Hon. WILLIAM JAMES BRYAN.

COMPANIES B, C, AND D, TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I ask that Senate bill 5729 may be laid before the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Ohio asks that the following bill be laid before the Senate:

The SECRETARY. Under Rule IX, the bill (S. 5729) to correct the records and authorize the reenlistment of certain noncommissioned officers and enlisted men belonging to Companies B, C, and D, of the Twenty-fifth United States Infantry, who were discharged without honor under Special Orders, No. 266, War Department, November 9, 1906, and the restoration to them of all rights of which they have been deprived on account thereof.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection the bill is before the Senate.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I have in my hand a clipping from a newspaper which indicates that there is a great deal of misinformation abroad in the land. This purports to be a dispatch from Washington announcing that I was to speak on the Brownsville matter, that my speech would occupy three days, and that it would be in the nature of a bitter attack upon the President of the United States and the Secretary of War.

This is the first time I was ever charged with making or contemplating a three days' speech. I indignantly deny that slander. Printed, as it is, it is a libel.

But more particularly, Mr. President, I desire to say that I have at no time had any purpose to attack the President or Secretary Taft in connection with this matter or in connection with any other matter. I have had no vengeance to seek and no occasion to seek any, I hope. In this whole matter I have simply sought to present to the Senate, in so far as I might be able to do so, the facts in regard to this unfortunate affair.

I hope also, Mr. President, that I need not make any apology to the Senate for having reduced the remarks that I desire to make to manuscript or for using that manuscript. I seldom make a speech in that way, but when I do it is, in my own mind at least, a compliment to the subject I am to discuss.

I want to present this matter in as concise a way as I can and in as intelligent a way as I can and within limitations that will enable all who may so desire to find out the views I entertain with respect to it; that is to say, that my remarks will not be so long but that all may read who may care to read them. For that reason I have taken the trouble which, as Senators know, I seldom do take, of putting my views on paper, and I intend to make use of that paper, but I hope I may be able to do so without unduly wearying my colleagues.

Mr. President, before discussing the proposed legislation I desire to review and analyze the testimony that has been taken before the Committee on Military Affairs.

The resolution under which the investigation was had precluded the committee from considering the question of the authority of the President to make the order under which the troops were discharged without honor, and confined the committee to an investigation of the facts and a report of the same to the Senate.

The committee observed this direction. While this direction probably does not preclude me from discussing the constitutional right and power of the President to make such an order, yet I have fully discussed that subject on other occasions and do not for that reason care to repeat that argument now. I shall confine myself, therefore, in what I have to say at this time, as the committee did, to the facts, and it will be my endeavor to show the effect of the facts that have been established by the testimony that has been taken.

Before entering upon this labor, it may not be amiss to remark, in view of the many misstatements that have been made, that the purpose of this investigation has not been to embarrass the President or anybody else; nor has it been to make any capital of any kind, political or otherwise, against anybody or for anybody.

On the contrary, it has been solely to establish, if possible, who did the shooting at Brownsville on the night of August 13–14, 1906, and, if it should turn out that the shooting was done by any of the discharged soldiers of the Twenty-fifth United States Infantry, to identify, if possible, the particular individuals who were guilty of participating in such shooting, and to identify, also, if possible, any accessories either before or after the affray, and to ascertain, also, whether or not in any event there has been any so-called "conspiracy of silence" on account of which the men, or any of them, have withheld any information of which they may be possessed in regard to such shooting affray; and this has been done with a view to giving effect in a practical way to the suggestions of the President himself, who, in his communications to Congress on this subject, has stated in substance that if at any time it should appear that any of the men discharged were free from guilt with respect to the matter they might be exempted from the operations of the order of discharge without honor and be restored to any rights they may have lost on account thereof.

With this purpose in view, about sixty of the men discharged were called as witnesses, among them, in so far as they could be reached with subpœnas, the noncommissioned officers of the three companies, the men who were on guard duty that night, and every soldier with respect to whom there was the slightest cause to think he might have any knowledge that would be of any importance in establishing the purposes of the investigation.

The witnesses so called embraced, in so far as the committee were able to judge, all those noncommissioned officers and soldiers of the battalion who were in a situation to know, and who of necessity would have known, something of the facts of such a raid if the raiders were soldiers of the garrison.

The investigation has one unusual feature, in view of the character of it, that merits a word of explanation, and that is the fact that the men who were charged with guilt were first heard by the committee in their own defense, and then, after they had so testified, witnesses were called to show their guilt.

This grew out of the fact that the President acted, in making his order for the discharge of the men without honor, upon testimony submitted to him by the inspecting officers of the Army.

This testimony consisted of unsworn statements made by citizens of Brownsville immediately after the shooting affray occurred and by such statements as these inspecting officers felt warranted in making, based on their investigations at Brownsville and later at El Reno, to which post the battalion was removed a few days after the shooting occurred and at which post the battalion was stationed when the men were discharged.

This testimony and these official reports of the inspecting officers were thought to be, as a result of the discussion that occurred in the Senate, insufficient to warrant the action that had been taken in discharging the men.

In consequence, the President directed Mr. Purdy, an assistant to the Attorney-General, and Major Blocksom to visit Brownsville and retake the testimony upon which his action had been based in the form of affidavits.

Attached to this testimony were a number of exhibits, such as bullets, that were said to have been cut out of the houses of Brownsville, into which they were fired on the night of the affray; exploded shells and a number of cartridges that were found in the streets at points where the shooting had occurred, and a bandolier which was picked up on the route over which the raiders passed.

In addition, some testimony was submitted of experts and ordnance officers supporting the conclusion that had been arrived at that soldiers of the Twenty-fifth United States Infantry had done the firing.

This testimony was reviewed and submitted to the President by the Secretary of War as conclusively establishing the guilt of the men.

The President transmitted this testimony to the Senate, together with the report to him of the Secretary of War, and announced in his message of transmittal that, in his opinion, the testimony showed beyond a reasonable doubt the guilt of the men.

When, therefore, the Senate ordered the investigation, it was to give the men an opportunity to meet the case that had so been made against them. For that reason they were called first, and after they had testified in such numbers that every member of the committee was satisfied that to call additional witnesses from the soldiers was unnecessary in order to get all information that could be secured from that source, the taking of further testimony by the soldiers was suspended.

Thereupon, in order to again convict the men of the crime with which they had been charged, the same witnesses who had twice before testified were recalled and examined and cross-examined at great length before the committee together with other additional witnesses. After this testimony had been taken a number of officers of the battalion and some of the men were recalled in rebuttal.

So it is that in a most important case, involving in its various phases the charge of raiding, and the shooting up of the town, the commission of murder, assaults with intent to kill, perjury, and conspiracy to withhold testimony to screen the guilty of crimes amounting to felonies, punished with imprisonment in the penitentiary, we have the unprecedented spectacle of the men charged being required to appear and prove their innocence, and then to be again, for a third time, subjected to the accusative testimony upon which the whole case against them does and must of necessity rest.

While it may be said that this does not alter the truth, yet it remains that it is a violation of the practice that has been observed since the beginning of the common law for the protection of those who were charged with crime, and a practice that has for the accused in all cases where crime is charged only that reasonable advantage of fully advising the accused before he enters upon his defense of what it is that he is accused and with what testimony in all its details it is sought to establish such accusation. I do not mention this to complain about it, for the record will disclose to any unbiased man who may study it that, notwithstanding this disadvantage, and notwithstanding the many other disadvantages to which these men were subjected, they have given their evidence with such straightforward frankness and with such manifest truthfulness that, in my opinion, nothing remains to show their complete vindication except only the discovery of the real culprits, which time will surely make unless the adage that "murder will out" has ceased to be a truth.

It is necessary to an intelligent discussion of the testimony to make a brief explanatory statement as to the general situation at Brownsville on the night of the affray.

The Government reservation known as "Fort Brown" is situated on the bank of the Rio Grande River immediately opposite Matamoros, Mexico, and within the limits of the town of Brownsville, the principal streets and parts of which are immediately north of the reservation.

The reservation is bounded on the northern side by a brick wall some 4 or 5 feet in height at the point where the principal part of the shooting affray is alleged to have commenced.

The garrison consisted of three companies—B, C, and D of the Twenty-fifth United States Infantry, colored.

These were quartered in barracks that stood in a line 100 feet south of the reservation wall, so that the rear of the barracks looked out northwardly toward the town.

The main gate or entrance to the reservation opened out into Elizabeth street, which was the principal street of Brownsville.

These companies occupied separate barracks. D Company barracks stood to the left of the road leading out of the reservation through the main entrance into Elizabeth street; B Company barracks stood immediately to the right of this road, and C Company barracks stood next on the right of B barracks.

The barracks fronted on a parade ground, on the opposite side of which were the quarters of the officers, occupied on the night of the affray by Maj. Charles W. Penrose, the commanding officer of the battalion and the post; Captain Lyon, commanding Company D; Captain Macklin, commanding Company C; Lieutenant Lawrason, commanding Company B, and Lieutenant Grier, acting quartermaster and commissary of the post.

Parallel with Elizabeth street and 120 feet eastwardly from the same, in the middle of the block, is an alley, 20 feet in width, known in the testimony as "Cowen alley."

The mouth of this alley approaches the fort at a point about opposite the space between the B Company and C Company barracks.

Along the wall outside the reservation was a road 30 feet in width, called the Garrison road.

Along the wall inside the reservation were the sinks, coal houses, and other outbuildings of the barracks.

The barracks were two-story buildings, with lower and upper porches in rear along their entire length.

Each of these barracks was about 165 feet in length and 40 feet in width. The upper porch was only 12 feet above the ground.

The charge against the soldiers is that a few minutes before midnight, August 13, 1906, a squad, estimated by the different witnesses all the way from five or six to twenty, in pursuance of a carefully planned and preconcerted conspiracy to shoot up the town, in some way secured their guns from the gun racks, opened fire on the town from the upper porch of B barracks, then rushed down to the ground, and to the wall separating the reservation from the town, jumped over the wall at a point opposite the Cowen alley, proceeded northwardly along that alley a distance of two or three squares, shooting into the houses, hotels, and saloons, and at citizens on the streets, with the result that they fired probably from two to three hundred shots, killed a bartender of the Tillman saloon by the name of Frank Natus, killed the horse of the lieutenant of police, Dominguez, wounding him in his left arm, and did other damages of one kind and another; that at the corner of the alley and Thirteenth street, where the Miller Hotel is situated, the squad divided, one portion of it going east on Thirteenth street to Washington street, the next street east of Elizabeth street, where they fired a number of shots into the house of a revenue deputy by the name of Starck; that after this, which was the last of the firing, they returned to the fort and joined their companies without being detected by their officers, who were at that time wide-awake and engaged in the formation of the companies.

Finally, under the stress of circumstances, it was further charged that, in the nature of things, it was impossible for such a squad of soldiers to plan and execute such a conspiracy without many, if not all, of the other members of the battalion having knowledge which, if disclosed, would identify the particular individuals who participated in the shooting, and that the inability of the inspection officers and others to secure any such information was to be attributed to a conspiracy of silence into which all having such knowledge, whether few or many, must have entered.

The gradual evolution of this last charge is interesting, suggestive, and instructive.

It had its inception, so far as the record discloses, in the following passage from the report of Major Blocksom, dated at Brownsville, August 29, 1906:

> The officers appeared to be trying to find the criminals, but it is certainly unfortunate for the reputation of the battalion that they have as yet hardly discovered a single clue to such a terrible preconcerted crime, committed by so many men.
> I believe the battalion had an excellent reputation up to the 13th of August, but the stain now upon it is the worst I have ever seen in the Army.
> Many of its old soldiers who had nothing to do with the raid must know something tangible as to identity of the criminals. If they do not disclose their knowledge, they should be made to suffer with others more guilty, as far as the law will permit. If satisfactory evidence concerning the identity of the criminals does not come from members of the battalion before a certain date to be fixed by the War Department, I recommend that all enlisted men of the three companies present on the night of August 13 be discharged the service and debarred from reenlistment in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps.

This suggestion, without the help of any further testimony, took definite form in the order of October 4, 1906, issued by the Assistant Secretary of War, directing General Garlington to make an investigation, in the following language:

> The President authorizes you to make known to those concerned the orders given by him in this case, namely: "If the guilty parties can not be discovered, the President approves the recommendation that the whole three companies implicated in this atrocious outrage should be dismissed, and the men forever debarred from reenlisting in the Army or Navy of the United States."
> And in this connection the President further authorizes you to make known to those concerned that unless such enlisted men of the Twenty-fifth Infantry as may have knowledge of the facts relating to the shooting, killing, and riotous conduct on the part of the men with the organizations serving at Fort Brown, Tex., on the night of the 13th of August, 1906, report to you such facts and all other circumstances within their knowledge which will assist in apprehending the guilty parties, orders will be immediately issued from the War Department discharging every man in Companies B, C, and D, of the Twenty-fifth Infantry, without honor, and forever debarring them from reenlisting in the Army or Navy of the United States, as well as from employment in any civil capacity under the Government.
> The time to be given to the enlisted men of Companies B, C, and D, Twenty-fifth Infantry, for consideration of this ultimatum will be determined by you. If, at the end of the time designated, the facts and circumstances of the occurrence in question have not been established sufficiently clear to indicate a reasonable certainty of securing a conviction of the guilty parties by evidence obtained from enlisted men of the first battalion, Twenty-fifth Infantry, you will report the condition by wire to The Military Secretary.

General Garlington made his investigation, therefore, with this thought before him, but made no further progress than to suggest in a vague sort of way that the men had "possibly" come to a common understanding that they would not give any information of which they might be possessed that would lead to the identification of any of the raiders.

On this point he said in his report that all the men denied guilt, or guilty knowledge, but that these denials—> indicated a possible general understanding among the enlisted men of this battalion of the position they would take in the premises—

And I call the attention of Senators particularly to this—> but I could find no evidence of such understanding.

No evidence that there was any conspiracy of silence. I emphasize that, because that, you will discover as we proceed, is an important part of this case in so far as there is any case left.

Upon this report, without an iota of additional testimony—in other words, upon the mere suggestion of General Garlington and others that an agreement to withhold testimony had been entered into among the men, of which General Garlington was careful to say he had found no evidence—the President ordered all the men discharged.

Of that which was only "possible," in the opinion of General Garlington, and of which he "could find no evidence," the President, without any additional testimony, became so thoroughly convinced by the time he felt it necessary to defend his action that in his message to the Senate of December 19, 1906, he said:

> A blacker crime never stained the annals of the Army. It has been supplemented by another, only less black, in the shape of a successful conspiracy of silence for the purpose of shielding those who took part in the original conspiracy of murder.

At another point in that same message he said:

> Yet some of the noncommissioned officers and many of the men of the three companies in question have banded together in a conspiracy to protect the assassins and would-be assassins who have disgraced their uniforms by the conduct above related. Many of these noncommissioned officers and men must have known, and all of them may have known, circumstances which would have led to the conviction of those engaged in the murderous assault. They have stolidly, and as one man, broken their oaths of enlistment and refused to help discover the criminals.

A charge as to which, by the latest official report laid before the President, it was said there was no testimony whatever. Although diligently searched for, the inspecting officers of the Army had been unable to find any testimony.

In his message to the Senate of January 14, 1907, after the Purdy testimony had been taken and the President felt called upon to further defend his action, he said:

> The testimony of the witnesses and the position of the bullet holes show that fifteen or twenty of the negro troops gathered inside the fort and that the first shots fired into the town were fired from within the fort—some of them, at least, from the upper galleries of the barracks.
> It is out of the question that the fifteen or twenty men engaged in the assault could have gathered behind the wall of the fort, begun firing, some of them on the porches of the barracks, gone out into the town, fired in the neighborhood of 200 shots in the town, then returned—the total time occupied from the time of the first shots to the time of their return being somewhere in the neighborhood of ten minutes—without many of their comrades knowing what they had done.
> Indeed, the fuller details as established by the additional evidence taken since I last communicated with the Senate make it likely that there were very few, if any, of the soldiers dismissed who could have been ignorant of what occurred. It is well-nigh impossible that any of the noncommissioned officers who were at the barracks should not have known what occurred.

This so-called "Purdy testimony" was given by the citizens of Brownsville, and was largely but a repetition of the testimony given previously, though not given under oath. It did not embrace any testimony of the soldiers, or of anybody, in regard to a withholding of knowledge by the soldiers, and there was no pretense on the part of anyone that any evidence had been discovered since General Garlington's report to indicate, much less establish, a conspiracy of silence, and at that time he officially reported that he could find no evidence whatever of any conspiracy of silence.

But whether justified or not, the men were finally charged with—

1. The organization of a conspiracy to shoot up the town.
2. That the squad which did the shooting necessarily had a number of accessories both before and after the fact.
3. That the first shots were fired from the upper gallery of B barracks.
4. That other shots were fired from within the reservation.
5. That the raiders then jumped over the wall and committed the outrages mentioned, returned to quarters, and joined their companies without the detection of any of them by their commissioned officers.
6. That of necessity such a conspiracy could not have been formed and executed without many, if not all, of the enlisted men, particularly the noncommissioned officers, having knowledge, which, if disclosed, would lead to the identity of the raiders, and that the refusal of the men to disclose such information was evidence of a conspiracy of silence to defeat the ends of justice.

EVIDENCE AGAINST THE SOLDIERS.

The testimony to support these charges consists of two classes—so-called "eyewitnesses," who testified to their personal observations, and circumstantial evidence, such as the finding of cartridges, exploded shells, and so forth, at the places where the firing was done.

We are told in the majority report that there were fifteen witnesses who saw the men who did the firing and recognized them as soldiers from the garrison. Most of these witnesses have testified four different times—

First, before the citizens' committee a day or two after the shooting occurred.

Second, before the grand jury of Cameron County, in which Brownsville is situated.

Third, before the Penrose court-martial, and finally before the Senate Committee on Military Affairs.

Their testimony so given is sufficiently contradictory to show that it is unreliable.

But, aside from the contradictions on account of the darkness of the night, many things that were testified to by these witnesses could not have possibly been observed by them.

There were no artificial lights in the Cowen alley and no light of any kind in the reservation, except at the main gate, 120 feet distant from the mouth of Cowen alley.

In all the immediate neighborhood of the points where, according to all the witnesses the first shots were fired, whether inside or outside the reservation, it was as dark as a very dark night could make it.

These witnesses testified that hearing the firing they went to their windows, looked out into this darkness, and at a distance ranging all the way from 30 up to 150 feet saw the firing party and recognized them as soldiers from the garrison by the color of their faces, by the uniforms they wore, and the guns they carried.

It is unnecessary to go over this evidence in a detailed way, for, conceding for the sake of argument that the witnesses undertook to testify truthfully, the flimsy and unreliable character of the whole of it is fairly indicated by the testimony of the four principal so-called "eyewitnesses."

Without their testimony there is no credible evidence whatever to support the charge that the first shots were fired from the barracks or from any place within the reservation or that there was any jumping over the wall by anybody.

Without the testimony of these four witnesses the testimony of the officers and the men of the battalion that the shooting commenced at some point outside the reservation stands practically uncontradicted.

These witnesses were George W. Rendall and his wife, Jose Martinez, and J. P. McDonel.

Rendall and his wife lived in the upper story of a building that stood on the corner of Elizabeth street and the Garrison road.

Their front windows looked out over the reservation. Rendall testified that he was awakened by the first shots that were fired; that he went to his window and looked out over the reservation to see what was occurring; that while he was looking to his right, in the direction of the barracks occupied by D Company, he heard a shot to his left which sounded as though it had been fired from some point in the reservation; that thereupon he turned his head to the left to look in the direction from which the sound came, and saw two other shots fired in succession; that they were fired from somewhere near the east end of B Company barracks, and that the piece from which these shots were fired, whether a gun or a revolver, seemed to be pointed upward, for the shots seemed to be fired into the air. He then saw and heard men moving toward the wall at a point in front of the mouth of Cowen alley, and saw and heard them jump over the wall at that point.

On further examination and cross-examination the witness stated that he was 72 years of age; that he was totally blind in one eye; that he had been for a generation [laughter], and that his sight from the other had been so far impaired that he had been compelled to wear glasses for many years.

Before the Penrose court-martial he testified that when he was awakened and got up and went to the window he put on his glasses and therewith saw what he narrated.

Before the Senate committee he said he desired to change that statement; that on reflection he had come to the conclusion that he did not wear his glasses while making the observations about which he testified, but he claimed that at night his sight was better without glasses than with them.

But passing by all these damaging features of his testimony and giving credence to what he says, the shots he saw fired were doubtless those fired by the sentinel, who testifies that after the first fusillade of shots he passed between B and C barracks to the front line, where, facing toward the parade ground, he held his piece in the air and fired upward three shots in succession, calling out after each shot, "Corporal of the guard—number two." That was the kind of signal which under such circumstances he was required to give.

Rendall was in a situation to have seen other shots, if any had been fired. He did not see any others.

His testimony that he saw a body of men after these shots move toward the wall and heard them jump over into the Garrison road is simply incredible, because the uncontradicted testimony of all the witnesses is that the night was one of such unusual darkness that without the aid of artificial light it would have been impossible for a man with good eyes to have seen what he described at a distance of 150 feet, which was approximately the distance at which he claims to have witnessed this occurrence, or at 100 feet or at 50 feet or with any degree of certainty at even 20 feet.

But on this point Mr. Rendall is contradicted by the witness McDonel, who lived in that immediate neighborhood and who testified that when the first shots were fired he ran out on to the street and to a point only a few feet from the mouth of the Cowen alley, and that he saw the men who did the firing pass into the alley and saw them engaged in firing into Cowen's house one square away.

He says these men did not come from over the wall, but from Elizabeth street, and that he was in a situation to have seen them if they had come over the wall, and that nobody did cross the wall.

Jose Martinez claims that he was sitting in the front part of a room occupied by him at the corner of the alley and the garrison road near where the firing commenced; that immediately—"instantaneously," to use his exact language—he put out his light and threw himself on the floor and remained there for probably thirty minutes, or even longer, until the firing had all ceased.

At one point in his testimony he claimed to have looked out at his back window, although his position on the floor made that impossible, and to have seen the raiders pass up the alley toward the Cowen house, and that he recognized them as soldiers, although he could not see their faces.

On all these points he flatly contradicted himself.

Mrs. Rendall saw nothing except some men passing through the reservation shortly after the firing commenced from the direction of D barracks toward the point in the reservation opposite the Cowen alley. She did not see them jump over the wall, nor hear them jump over the wall, nor pretend to see any firing within the reservation beyond a single flash which she could not locate. She did not even see the two shots about which her husband testified.

Other contradictory statements might be cited, but it is unnecessary to add to those already given. They are sufficient to show that these witnesses, on account of the darkness and the excitement, made only the most imperfect observation and were unable at the different times they testified to recall them with accuracy or in such a way as to clearly establish anything which they testified to, except only that somewhere in their locality the firing commenced by which they were aroused, and that almost immediately afterwards the call to arms was sounded, the different companies were formed, and they saw bodies of men moving in different directions within the reservation, all of which, in a general way, is entirely consistent with what did in fact happen.

That the testimony of these so-called "eyewitnesses," aside from the many contradictions by themselves and by one another, was entirely unreliable is shown by the testimony of all the officers and the many other witnesses who testified as to the darkness of the night and the impossibility of recognizing individuals at any distance without the help of artificial light.

Major Penrose testified that he could not distinguish one of his white officers from one of his colored enlisted men at a distance from him of 10 feet, and at that distance he could tell nothing about how anyone was dressed.

Every other officer of the battalion testified to the same general effect—giving instances of inability to make personal recognition at the distance of from 5 to 10 feet.

In addition to this testimony there is in the record the testimony of a number of officers of other companies, based on actual experiments, that the flashes of the guns from the firing of them would not make a light from which anyone could be recognized and that it is utterly impossible without the aid of artificial light to tell anything about a firing party at any distance in the dark.

There were two or three witnesses who claimed to have seen the raiders by the aid of artificial light.

The chief of these was Paulino Preciado, the editor of a newspaper published in the Spanish language, called "El Porvenir." His testimony on this point already before the committee was in flat contradiction of his testimony before the Cameron County grand jury and in flat contradiction of the statement he published in his paper immediately after the shooting.

Besides these contradictions, which were sufficient to cause Secretary Taft to discredit him, he had pending in the State Department at the time when he testified before the Senate committee a claim against the United States Government for $10,000 damages alleged to have been sustained by reason of a claim that he had been slightly wounded.

But he was further contradicted by the fact that one of the bullets fired into the saloon where he was passed through the window and lodged in a post in front of Crixell's saloon on the opposite side of the street, which was subsequently extracted and found to be not an Army bullet with a metallic case, but a lead bullet of different composition from those which the soldiers were furnished with.

In the whole evidence from beginning to end there is not a particle of testimony from any so-called eyewitness that is not either contradicted by the witness himself or by some other witness or which is not shown by uncontradicted testimony as to the effect of darkness on the vision to have been unreliable if not impossible.

If Senators would know how difficult it is to recognize anyone in the nighttime they have only to stand on the sidewalk anywhere here in Washington at night and undertake to recognize some one passing only so far distant from them as across the street. Unless they come under the rays of artificial light or in some other way are aided they will find it is impossible to tell whether a man is white or black or anything about how he is dressed.

Since this testimony has been on my mind to such an extent, almost every night as I pass along the streets I find myself experimenting in this way, looking to see at a distance if I can recognize whether a man whom I see moving is a white man or a colored man or how he is dressed. I ask every Senator here to experiment in that way. It is no trouble. It is rather interesting, and when you have thus experimented for yourself you will be able to set aside all this so-called testimony of "eyewitnesses," for there is not one of them who was in a situation where he could tell anything at all that was reliable, and the cross-examination of every one of them disclosed that there was nothing reliable about the testimony that he gave in that particular.

CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.

The most damaging testimony against the soldiers, when taken without explanation, was the finding in the alleys and streets where the firing occurred of exploded shells, clips, cartridges, etc.

It was the production of these shells and clips and cartridges by Mayor Combe and his report to Major Penrose that they had been picked up in the streets at points where the firing occurred that caused Major Penrose and his officers to think that their men must have done the firing.

These exploded shells show by their stamp that they were manufactured by the Union Metallic Cartridge Company, that they were Army shells, and that they were manufactured in the month of December, 1905.

The bullets cut out of the houses into which they were fired that night bear marks indicating that they might have been fired out of Springfield rifles, and upon analysis were found to have been the same kind of a bullet which the Union Metallic Cartridge Company was manufacturing in the month of December, 1905, and supplying to the Army.

But this testimony, in connection with other facts established, became testimony for the soldiers, instead of against them, as I shall undertake to show when I come to discuss this particular evidence as a part of the case made in favor of the men.

MOTIVE.

The case against the soldiers fails in another important particular. No adequate motive—in fact, no motive whatever—is shown for such an assault upon the town.

There is an attempt to show that they had a motive in the fact that they were debarred from drinking with the white people in the saloons of Brownsville; that one of their number—a man by the name of Newton—was brutally assaulted, knocked down with a revolver, and painfully injured without any sufficient justification or excuse, and that another soldier, by the name of Reed, when returning from Matamoros was pushed into the water by a customs officer on account of some trifling misbehavior.

The evidence shows that the soldiers frequented the saloons but very little, and that they never made any complaint to their officers or to anybody else on account of being debarred by some of the saloons of Brownsville from drinking at the same bar with white people.

On the contrary, the testimony shows positively that they did not make any such complaint.

Both Major Blocksom and General Garlington report that they did not hear any complaints on that account, and that the men, one and all, whom they interrogated, insisted that they did not harbor any resentment by reason of that fact.

The testimony further shows that a few of the saloons did not allow the soldiers to enter; that a few others provided separate bars for their accommodation; that quite a number of saloons, especially those kept by Mexicans, did not discriminate in any way, but gave to the soldiers the same accommodations they gave to the citizens.

The testimony shows that the Tillman saloon, where Frank Natus was the barkeeper, provided a separate bar and accommodated the soldiers in such a way that no one of them ever made the slightest objection on account of the treatment they received.

If the soldiers had shot up the town on account of discrimination against them by the saloons, it is reasonable to suppose they would have shot into saloons that did not allow them to enter, rather than into a saloon—for the Tillman saloon is the only one they did fire into—where they were provided with accommodations to which they had never taken any exception.

It would seem more reasonable to suppose that if the shooting of Natus had any reference to the treatment of the soldiers by the saloons, that he was killed by somebody who objected to the saloons accommodating the soldiers rather than by the soldiers who were accommodated. It seems to me that is a self-evident proposition.

But, however that may be, there is no excuse for saying that the soldiers had, as a motive for shooting up the town, discrimination against them by the saloons, except only as it is deduced as a conclusion that because they were debarred from some of them they were angry and revengeful toward the whole town, and this deduction seems absurd, in view of the fact that although the town was well supplied with saloons, yet they spared all except only one where they had been given accommodations that were at least reasonably satisfactory.

As another evidence that the soldiers were seeking revenge, Major Blocksom reported that the house of the deputy customs officer, Starck, which was fired into, stood next door to the house occupied by the deputy customs officer, Tate, who assaulted Private Newton, and that it was doubtless fired into by mistake, the soldiers thinking they were firing into Tate's house instead of into Starck's house.

There is no testimony to justify such a conclusion except only the fact that the major reasoned, or thought he did, that because Newton had been assaulted by Tate he and his companions desired to revenge Newton's wrongs by shooting into Tate's house in the hope they might kill him or some member of his family.

The fact did not interfere with the mental operations of the major in reaching this conclusion that there was not one scintilla of testimony to show that Newton or any other soldier of the battalion knew that Tate had a house, or on what street it stood, or at what point on any street it stood. Nor is there any testimony whatever to show that Newton knew who the man was who struck him except only as he was told subsequently by Captain Macklin, commander of his company, who undertook to investigate the matter, that he had learned that he had been knocked down by a United States customs officer by the name of Tate. There is no testimony to show that Captain Macklin, or anybody else connected with the battalion, had any knowledge whatever as to the location of Tate's residence or whether he had any residence.

But if the knocking down of Newton, with the revolver, by Tate was a sufficient motive to account for the shooting up of the town, and an attempt to shoot up the house of Tate, which was prevented only by a mistake of Starck's house for Tate's house, then there was an equally good and better founded reason for supposing that Starck's house was fired into not by soldiers, but by others who had a sufficient cause for firing into it, but who were sufficiently well acquainted with the location of Starck's house not to make any mistake in regard to it.

The testimony shows that Starck had during his service made more than 600 arrests of smugglers and other violators of the law and that some months before this shooting affray he had, in the discharge of his duty as a deputy customs officer, undertaken in the nighttime to arrest a smuggler who was landing on the Texas side at a point near Brownsville.

The smuggler undertook to escape. Starck commanded him to halt, but he kept up his flight. Starck pursued him in the darkness until coming close upon him the smuggler turned to resist, when Starck knocked him down and severely injured him by striking him over the head with his revolver in practically the same way Newton was felled. When Starck took the man in custody he discovered that the smuggler was an inhabitant of Brownsville by the name of Avillo, whom he knew well, and who, Starck says, was well acquainted with his premises; that he had worked for him at his house. Starck says this man whom he thus arrested was taken before the commissioner, where he was bound over to await the action of the grand jury; that he forfeited his bond and was a fugitive from justice at the time when this shooting affray occurred.

It is far more reasonable to suppose that the men who shot into Starck's house were men who were avenging the supposed wrongs of Avillo, and possibly of themselves, rather than soldiers from the garrison trying, by shooting into Starck's house by mistake, to avenge the wrongs of Newton.

This is confirmed by the fact that Newton is shown by the testimony to have been on guard duty the night of the affray, and to have been off post and asleep in the guardhouse when the shooting commenced.

It is hardly probable that his companions would have gone out to shoot up the town on his account without him accompanying them or without him having knowledge of their action and purpose, and it is extremely improbable that while they were engaged in such a work, if he had knowledge thereof, he would have been calmly and soundly sleeping while they were thus avenging his wrongs.

So far as the trouble with Private Reid is concerned, it was of too trivial a character to merit any attention. Reid himself did not make complaint of his treatment when he reported the occurrence to his captain, but, on the contrary, according to the testimony of Captain Macklin, laughingly remarked that he "got about what he deserved."

Moreover, the trouble with Reid occurred only the night before the affray. There was hardly time left after its occurrence for forming the "carefully preconcerted, well-planned conspiracy," to use the language of Major Penrose.

It may be safely concluded, therefore, that the trouble with Reid did not furnish any motive for what occurred.

DOMINGUEZ.

Neither is there any weight in the suggestion that the firing upon Dominguez, the lieutenant of police, shows a motive for the soldiers avenging themselves upon the peace officials of the municipality, for the testimony shows that during the entire time the soldiers were at Brownsville their conduct was exceptionally good; that there was but one arrest by the police, and that was for so trivial a matter that the soldier was released without any punishment.

There is no testimony whatever to show that the soldiers had been interfered with in the slightest degree by any of the police officials of the town.

On the contrary, the testimony of all the police officials is that there was no occasion for them to make any arrests or to interfere in any way with the soldiers, who appeared to have deported themselves with exceptionally good conduct.

It does appear, however, that Dominguez was an efficient officer of many years' service and very popular with the citizens of Brownsville, because of the faithful and efficient manner in which he had handled criminals in the discharge of his official duties.

It appears that during his long service he had made many arrests, and that in some instances he had found it necessary to resort to force in arresting and handling disorderly characters, and that in at least one instance he had found it necessary to take life.

If the suggestion is warranted that the raiders fired upon Dominguez for the purpose of avenging themselves upon him, it would seem far more natural and reasonable to suppose that he was fired upon by those who had cause, real or imaginary, for seeking revenge rather than by those who had no such cause. There is no word of testimony to show that any soldier of the battalion had ever so much as even heard of Dominguez, let alone that they had any cause to injure or molest him in any way.

In this connection there is much also in the testimony about a story being circulated among the people of Brownsville on the day of the assault that on the preceding evening a Mrs. Evans, who resided near the garrison, was assaulted by one of the soldiers, who seized her by the hair and threw her to the ground and then ran away.

THE MRS. EVANS STORY.

There is no sworn testimony in all the record to show that any such assault occurred, but an abundance of evidence to show that on account of the circulation of this kind of a story there was great excitement among the people of Brownsville on Monday, August 13, and that in consequence such an ugly spirit was manifested with respect to the soldiers that Mayor Combe felt it his duty to visit Major Penrose at the garrison about 5 o'clock that afternoon and warn him not to allow any of his soldiers to be in Brownsville that night, telling him in that connection if any of them should appear on the streets of Brownsville that night he would not be responsible for their lives, or words to that effect.

In consequence, Major Penrose issued an order canceling all passes and requiring all his men to return to quarters by 8 o'clock that evening and to remain in quarters during the night.

There is no testimony to show that any of the men knew why this order was issued, and no pretense of any testimony that any of the men resented it or expressed dissatisfaction on account of it in any way whatever.

The Evans incident, therefore, instead of furnishing a motive for the shooting up of the town by the soldiers, only furnishes a motive for shooting up the soldiers by the citizens.

That there was no motive appears from the further fact that all the soldiers who had any difficulty or trouble of any kind while in Brownsville belonged to C Company.

No one connected with either of the other companies had the slightest trouble of any nature.

The testimony, as I shall point out later, shows conclusively that C Company could not, in all probability, have participated in the shooting.

It is not likely that men from B and D Companies would have shot up the town for the purpose of avenging the wrongs of members of the other company; certainly not without members of C Company—those who were injured, or somebody in their behalf—joining in the raid.

It is from considerations and conclusions of the character named and suggested that it is impossible for me to find sufficient testimony in the record to warrant the finding that some of the men of the battalion "did the shooting."

And this is true, considering only that which may be called testimony against the soldiers.

TESTIMONY FOR THE SOLDIERS.

Coming now to the testimony in their favor, we have in the first place a presumption of innocence. This is not merely sentiment. It is an element of every case that possesses substance, and should have effect.

In the case of Coffin v. The United States (156 U. S., p. 454), Mr. Justice White, speaking for the court, cited authorities tracing a recognition of this presumption from Deuteronomy to the latest law writer on the subject. He cited with approval the following language employed by Lord Gillies in McKinley's case, decided in 1817:

> I conceive that this presumption is to be found in every code of law which has reason and religion and humanity for a foundation. It is a maxim which ought to be inscribed in indelible characters in the heart of every juryman; * * * to overturn this there must be legal evidence of guilt carrying home a degree of conviction short only of absolute certainty.

He further quotes with approval from Wills on Circumstantial Evidence, as follows:

> In the investigation and estimate of criminatory evidence there is an anticipated prima facie presumption in favor of the innocence of the party accused grounded in reason and justice not less than in humanity and recognized in the judicial practice of all civilized nations; which presumption must prevail until it be destroyed by such an overpowering amount of legal evidence of guilt as is calculated to produce the opposite belief.

Other authorities might be cited of the same general character without limit.

CHARACTER OF THE MEN.

In addition to this presumption there is in favor of the soldiers their character both as men and soldiers.

Not one of these three companies had a stain on its record. They were orderly, well behaved, well disciplined, and well drilled. They had never given their officers any trouble.

Such is the testimony of every officer, both of that regiment and of every other, who testified on the stand and who had knowledge of their character as soldiers and as men.

Major Penrose testified that they behaved themselves well before their discharge without honor and since then.

General Garlington testified that although the Government had every man under surveillance up to the time he testified, from the time of their discharge not one has been found guilty of any bad conduct, although turned out of the Army in disgrace.

Gen. Andrew S. Burt, who commanded the regiment for ten years, testified that they were all worthy to be believed on their oaths. He said:

I would believe them if I were sitting on a court-martial and they were called in their own defense.

He gave them the highest character both as men and as soldiers.

Captain Macklin testified that they were peaceable, orderly, well behaved; that they drank much less than white soldiers; that there was very little trouble on pay day, and comparatively few arrests.

Captain Lyon testified in an equally complimentary way.

Victoriano Fernandez, policeman, testified that his beat was on Elizabeth street, the principal street of the town; that it led directly from the fort; that he saw the soldiers every day passing to and fro, and that in all the time they were there he never saw one of them drunk or disorderly, and that he had no occasion to make any arrests.

This good character and good conduct and good discipline should greatly strengthen the presumption of innocence in their favor, for it is not likely that men of such character would engage in such an affray as that which occurred at Brownsville; certainly not unless they had some positive and adequate motive of an unusual and exasperating character, and that, the evidence clearly shows, they did not have.

TESTIMONY OF SOLDIERS.

In the next place, there is the testimony of the soldiers themselves as to their innocence.

In one form or another these men have all expressed themselves under oath, and in no case is there any contradiction whatever in the testimony of any one of them upon any essential point.

Every man, in giving his testimony, spoke from his personal knowledge, for each one of them knew whether or not he participated in the affray, and each one of them knew where he was when the affray commenced, while it was in progress, and when it was ended, and, without exception, each man has given a clear, straightforward account of himself in these particulars.

The statements so made by these men are believed by their officers, who testified that, with few exceptions, they are truthful and to be believed.

These officers knew these men better than anybody else. They were in a better situation than anybody else to determine what credence should be attached to their statements. All these officers are satisfied that these statements of their men as to where they were and that their statements that they were not among the raiders are truthful.

To refuse to believe them is to assert, as said in the minority report:

That as fine a body of soldiers and as truthful, according to all their officers, as can be found in the entire Army are conspirators, murderers, and perjurers, and all this upon the uncertain, unreliable, and contradictory statements of witnesses who did not pretend to give personal knowledge, but only conclusions based upon what was necessarily uncertain observations.

But these soldiers are confirmed, not only by the circumstances and probabilities, but also by facts of the weightiest character.

Within a few moments after the firing commenced the sentinel on guard gave the alarm required to be given under such circumstances by firing his piece in the air three times and calling out after each shot for the corporal of the guard.

Major Penrose, who had retired, but was yet awake, immediately ordered the sergeant of the guard to sound the call to arms. This call to arms and the firing instantly awakened the whole garrison. Excitement and more or less confusion followed. The formation of the companies was ordered. The sergeant in charge of the gun racks of Company C refused to open them until he had an order from a superior officer.

This led, after some minutes of delay, to an order from Major Penrose to break open the gun racks.

On account of this delay C Company was not formed until some minutes after the firing had ceased, but the other companies were formed immediately after the call to arms was sounded.

The roll was called in B Company. It was still in progress, but almost concluded, when the firing ceased. Every man of the company was present or accounted for.

D Company was quickly formed, and the men were verified by a personal inspection by Captain Lyon. Not a man was missing from the ranks who was not accounted for.

The officers of these companies testified that while such a thing was possible as that some of the men might have participated in the shooting and then returned and joined their companies without detection, yet they do not believe that any such thing occurred, or that it could have occurred without the men being detected.

Later that night, after Mayor Combe notified Major Penrose that the men were charged with doing the shooting, the men were again verified, and every man was satisfactorily accounted for.

The following morning, as soon as it was light enough to see and to make an inspection, the guns were carefully inspected, and the ammunition was verified, with the result that not a cartridge was missing and not a dirty gun was found. Every one was as bright and clean as it had been found two days before at their regular weekly inspection.

There is much testimony in the record as to whether or not in the nighttime, and without artificial light, the men could have cleaned their guns if they had used them on the raid so as to have them free from any indication of use.

The overwhelming weight of this testimony is that it is a difficult matter to clean these rifles; that it requires from fifteen to thirty minutes to clean them, and that it is absolutely impossible to clean them in the dark, or with the aid of artificial light, so they would pass such an inspection as they were subjected to by the officers of these companies the following morning.

This testimony as to the cleaning of these guns and the time required therefor was given not alone by the colored soldiers of the Twenty-fifth United States Infantry, but also by a large number of white soldiers who were called as witnesses.

It has been suggested that the men probably used surplus ammunition, but the testimony is uncontradicted that they had no surplus ammunition. All the ammunition in the possession of the men when they left Fort Niobrara was taken away from them, except only twenty rounds of ball cartridges for each man, and every man in the battalion had his twenty rounds when inspected the morning after the affray, and all the surplus ammunition with which each company was charged was found to be on hand in the storerooms in charge of the quartermaster-sergeants of the respective companies without the shortage of a single cartridge.

That is not the testimony of the black soldiers, but of the white officers, men who were graduates of West Point Military Academy, and men who stand as high in point of integrity as any men who could be called as witnesses.

The testimony further shows they had no opportunity to get surplus ammunition either at Fort Niobrara or at Fort Brown.

The testimony further shows that during the stay at Fort Brown the three companies of white soldiers of the Twenty-sixth United States Infantry were engaged in target practice and that generous supplies of their ammunition in some manner found their way into the hands of citizens of Brownsville. There is testimony to the effect that whole clips of Springfield cartridges could be seen in barrooms, standing on sideboards, where they were used for decorative purposes, and that when these companies of the Twenty-sixth United States Infantry left Brownsville they carelessly left ammunition behind them in the barracks, which was gathered up immediately after their departure by Mexicans and scavengers who visited the barracks for the purpose of supplying themselves with whatever had been cast away.

I have here a clip [exhibiting]. It is a facility for putting five cartridges together in a bunch. It is that little fastener or holder that is called the clip. I call attention to it now because I shall have to refer to it again presently.

In other words, the testimony shows that the citizens of Brownsville had opportunity to procure, and that they did have in their possession, an abundance of the kind of ammunition with which the soldiers had been supplied, and that the colored soldiers had no ammunition whatever and no opportunity to procure any except only that which had been distributed to them, every cartridge of which they had when inspected the morning after the shooting occurred.

The foregoing statements as to the ammunition should be modified as to C Company.

Each man of this company carried with him to Brownsville from Fort Niobrara twenty rounds of ball cartridges, but a few days after arrival at Brownsville Captain Macklin ordered that all the ball ammunition should be returned to the quartermaster-sergeant, and that the men should be supplied with guard cartridges, ten rounds to each man.

According to the testimony, when the shooting commenced, on the night of August 13, each man in this company had ten rounds of these cartridges, and not a man in this company had possession of a single ball cartridge. Every one had been taken from them only a few days before under this special order.

The testimony further shows that each of these companies had 650 rounds of guard cartridges—no more, no less.

This ammunition was issued to them at Fort Niobrara. These cartridges are, as their name indicates, intended for only guard purposes. They have only 15 grains of powder, whereas the ball ammunition has 42 grains of powder. They have a plain lead bullet, without any steel jacket such as the ball ammunition has.

The testimony further shows that, except only these 650 rounds for each of these three companies, there was no other ammunition of this kind issued to the battalion or procurable by the battalion at either Fort Niobrara or Fort Brown.

The testimony further shows that each of these three companies the morning after the firing not only accounted for every round of ball ammunition, but also for every round of this guard ammunition.

Each of the companies turned over to the Government at El Reno, where the soldiers were discharged without honor, exactly 650 rounds, except only D Company, which turned in only 645 rounds.

This shortage of one clip of guard ammunition was fully accounted for by Captain Lyon, the commanding officer of Company D.

No one pretends that there is any evidence that any bullets of this character were used that night. No trace of any such bullet has been found.

It follows necessarily that, so far at least as Company C is concerned, there is absolutely no evidence to show that they participated in the affray or to warrant the suspicion that they did, and yet it was this company toward which all suspicions of guilt were directed by Major Blocksom and all others down to the time when this fact with respect to its ammunition was established.

Suspicion was directed to this company because Newton, Reid, and Adair, the three men, each of whom had some kind of trouble at Brownsville, all belonged to this company, and because there was delay in the opening of the gun racks, in consequence of which at least two of them were broken open by order of Major Penrose.

Major Blocksom and others engaged in the investigation seemed to think that it was an evidence that these men were engaged in this conspiracy, which because of their care in organizing and executing it seems impossible to disclose, were, while so expert on the one hand, so absolutely stupid on the other that they would commence their operations by breaking open their gun racks and committing other acts that would betray their identity.

How anybody possessed of the slightest power to reason could find evidence of guilt in such performances surpasses ordinary comprehension. Only a man so blinded with prejudice and egotism as to be incapable of weighing conduct intelligently could be guilty of reaching conclusions so utterly absurd.

The testimony shows another important fact that is confirmatory of the innocence of the soldiers.

PISTOL SHOTS.

Ten revolvers for each company had been issued to the battalion at Fort Niobrara. There were no other revolvers or pistols of any kind, so far as the testimony discloses, in the possession of anybody connected with the battalion.

The testimony shows that none of these revolvers had ever been taken out of the chests in which they were when they were delivered to the different companies, except only one that was in the possession of one of the officers of the battalion.

All these revolvers, with this exception, were found after the firing to be in the chests where they belonged, covered with cosmoline that had been put on them at the arsenal, and not one of them showing any signs of having ever been used.

The significance of this testimony arises from the fact that Major Penrose and his officers and also Major Combe and a number of other witnesses all testified positively that the first shots fired that night were pistol shots.

Major Penrose and his officers and Mayor Combe were experts in the handling of arms and in distinguishing between pistols and high-power rifles.

Major Penrose said:

The first two shots I heard were undoubtedly pistol shots.

Captain Lyon says:

The first two shots were undoubtedly revolver shots, black powder.

Lieutenant Grier:

They were what I thought were two pistol shots.

George W. Rendall said, referring to these shots:

I think they were pistols; that was my impression at the time.

Mayor Combe said he first heard "what I thought to be four or five pistol shots."

He further said that he was impressed that they were pistol shots because they did not sound like the shots he heard later, which he recognized as high-power rifle shots.

In view of this testimony, it can not well be doubted that the firing was commenced that night by somebody other than the soldiers.

LOCATION OF FIRST SHOTS.

That this firing did not commence on the rear porches of the barracks or at any other point within the reservation is clearly shown by two witnesses who were in position to know, and unquestionably did know, more about the location of the first firing than anybody else.

One of these was private J. H. Howard, of Company D, the sentinel who was on post and who happened, when the firing commenced, to be passing over his beat immediately in rear of C and B barracks, about opposite the space between them, and practically opposite the mouth of Cowen alley.

The other witness was Matias G. Tamayo, a Mexican citizen of Brownsville, who was employed by the Government as the scavenger, and was with his night cart immediately in the rear of B barracks, near its kitchen, when the firing commenced.

Both testified in the most unqualified way that there was no firing from the barracks or from any other point within the reservation; that the first shots were fired from some place outside of the reservation, as nearly as they could locate them in the Garrison road, somewhere in the vicinity of the mouth of Cowen alley.

Both witnesses were exhaustively examined and cross-examined without shaking or affecting their testimony on this point in the slightest degree.

Both testified not only that there was no firing from any point within the reservation, but that no men or bodies of men were passing in the rear of the barracks before or at the time of this first firing, and that nobody was seen to be jumping over the wall from the reservation into the Garrison road outside, and both testified that if any such thing had happened they were in a situation to have seen it.

They describe intelligently and positively the character of this first firing and the location of it, and negative, absolutely, and unqualifiedly the claim that there was any firing from any other point except that which followed the first firing, and which occurred as the raiders passed up Cowen alley on the route they took.

The sentinel testifies that there were first two shots, and then after a few seconds a fusillade of five or six shots, and that thereupon he passed to the front line of the barracks opposite the parade ground, held his piece in the air and gave the alarm required under such circumstances by firing his piece three times and after each shot crying out "Corporal of the guard No. 2." His gun was the only one in the battalion found dirty from firing on inspection the following morning.

Major Penrose and a number of other witnesses testified that they heard first two shots, then a fusillade of shots, then three separate and distinct shots, which were undoubtedly the shots fired by the sentinel, whom Major Penrose found at the point where the sentinel testifies he stood when he gave the alarm.

There is nothing whatever in the record of the sentinel, Howard, to his discredit. His testimony is intelligent, frank, straightforward, and undoubtedly truthful, but while it may be insisted that because he was a soldier his statements should be discredited, there is no reason whatever for discrediting the testimony of Tamayo, the scavenger. He was a citizen of Brownsville; he had lived there all his life. Owing to the fact that they had been there so short a time he had practically no acquaintance with the soldiers. He testified that he had no interest in them of any kind whatever to affect his testimony either one way or another. His testimony was also intelligent, frank, and straightforward, and although he was examined and cross-examined in the most rigid and exhaustive manner, his evidence was not affected or disparaged in the slightest degree.

I come now to the

It consists of a number of bullets that were cut out of the houses into which they were fired at the time of the affray, and a lot of exploded shells, some clips and cartridges, and a bandolier that were picked up in the alleys and streets of Brownsville the next morning after the shooting.

All these are the same as those with which the negro soldiers were supplied. They are also precisely the same, however, with which the white soldiers were supplied who were relieved from duty at Fort Brown by the colored soldiers. The bullets have upon them the mark of four lands, indicating, as the testimony shows, that they were fired from either a Springfield rifle, or a Krag rifle, or a Krag carbine, or a Mauser rifle.

It is claimed, however, that they must have been fired from a Springfield rifle.

First, because the Springfield cartridge is too long and too large to fit into a Krag rifle, or Krag carbine, or a Mauser rifle, and that if the bullets that were found belonged to Springfield rifles, and that inasmuch as no one at Brownsville, so far as the testimony discloses, had a Springfield rifle, except only the negro soldiers, they must have done the firing.

Until this circumstantial evidence was presented to Major Penrose and his officers, they would not believe that any of their men had been engaged in the shooting, but this testimony seemed so conclusive that they changed their minds and expressed themselves as convinced that their men must have done the shooting.

It was this apparently conclusive testimony that fastened the conviction of guilt upon the soldiers in the minds of all who were engaged in the investigation of the affray, and which led the investigators to disbelieve the soldiers and to desist from investigating the question of the possible guilt of others.

As soon as this evidence was presented to Major Penrose and his officers they put their men under the strictest scrutiny and subjected them to the severest discipline and examinations, with a view to ascertaining who the guilty men were. They continued this course not only at Fort Brown, but subsequently at El Reno, down to the time when their men were discharged without honor, but, notwithstanding they made every kind of an effort, they failed to get any clue whatever to indicate what men, if any at all, were guilty.

Every man in the command continued to stoutly and unqualifiedly deny that he had participated in the affray, and also that he had any knowledge whatever as to who had done the shooting.

When General Garlington announced the President's ultimatum, that unless someone disclosed who the guilty parties were the whole battalion would be discharged without honor, it was thought that at least those oldest in the service, and therefore having the most to lose by such a discharge, would come forward with incriminating testimony; but when they continued to assert their innocence and lack of any knowledge whatever on the subject, their officers, who knew their pride in their record as soldiers and knew their trustworthiness and truthfulness and general reliability as men, began to doubt their guilt.

This wavering ripened into conviction when during the progress of the Penrose court-martial and the Senate investigation a number of important facts favorable to the soldiers were developed and established.

THE MICROSCOPIC INSPECTION.

No one fact had so much weight with these officers to change their minds as what is known in this record as the microscopic inspection that was made of the exploded shells above referred to.

When the results of this investigation were communicated to the Senate Committee on Military Affairs, made a part of the record of the investigation, and made known to the public, these officers carefully studied the various points and features and phases of the same with the result that, coupled with other testimony, they became thoroughly convinced that their men were absolutely innocent, one and all, of any participation in the shooting affray, and of withholding any information with regard thereto.

All testified fully as to this change of opinion in favor of their men, giving their reasons therefor.

This testimony, which was so conclusive to these officers, appears equally conclusive to my mind.

It is of the most important character and, in consequence, is entitled to the most careful attention.

My views with respect to this circumstantial evidence and this microscopic inspection and the conclusions deducible from the results of the same are fully and carefully expressed in the supplemental minority report signed by the Senator from Connecticut and myself.

I do not know how better to present what I have to say in regard thereto than by quoting the following from that report. It involves some repetition, but in view of its importance that is not objectionable.

THE SHELLS, CLIPS, ETC.

A lot of exploded cartridge shells, some clips and cartridges, and a bandolier were picked up in the alleys and streets of Brownsville the next morning after the shooting.

Until these were brought to the fort and shown to Major Penrose and the other officers of the battalion they would not, any of them, believe it possible that any of the men of the battalion had been engaged in the shooting; but when these were exhibited to them, and they were told that they were picked up at the points where the shooting occurred, they changed their minds and concluded that in view of such evidence their men must have done the shooting. From that moment they put their men under the strictest scrutiny and surveillance and made every effort possible to ascertain who the guilty men were, but all such efforts failed.

In the meanwhile the court-martial of Major Penrose was held at San Antonio and the investigation before the Senate committee commenced. The testimony so taken satisfied the officers, as we have already pointed out, that their men were not guilty, and they have so testified.

They testify that they were influenced to change their opinions and reach the conclusion that their men were not guilty by a number of facts developed, including, among others, the results of a microscopic examination that was made of the exploded shells that were picked up in the streets of Brownsville. In other words, the testimony by which they had been first led to believe that their men were guilty turned out, as a result of this investigation, to be conclusive proof to their minds that their men were not guilty. The part this testimony has thus played shows that it is sufficiently important to receive special consideration.

NUMBER OF SHELLS FOUND.

1. According to the weight of the testimony there were from 150 to 300 shots fired that night in Brownsville by the raiders, whoever they may have been. There should have been found, therefore, that many exploded shells. The testimony shows that careful search was made to find the shells and every other species of evidence that might tend to show that the soldiers were guilty, but with the result that, all told, only about 40 of these exploded shells were found. In other words, there were from 100 to 200 or 300 exploded shells, according to the theory of those who claim that the soldiers did the firing, scattered somewhere as a result of that firing in the alleys and the streets of Brownsville which have never been found. Nobody pretends that there was any difficulty on account of the nature of the ground or for any other reason about finding any exploded shells there may have been, or ought to have been, in the streets where the firing occurred. Seven of these empty shells were found at the mouth of the Cowen alley near the fort by Captain Macklin. Others were found in the alley and in Washington street at the point where the firing is said to have occurred. These shells so found, except those found by Captain Macklin, were turned over to the authorities and subsequently forwarded to the Senate for use as evidence. There were only 33 of them in all. There may possibly have been a few others picked up that were not turned over, but we have no account of them, and the testimony is of such character as to warrant the conclusion that there could have been but very few, if any, picked up in addition to the 33 mentioned. It is reasonable to conclude that the other shells that must have been exploded, if there were as many shots fired as the witnesses state, were not found to be such shells as the soldiers used, or there must have been some other good reason for not submitting them as evidence. Whatever the explanation may be, the fact remains, and it is a fact that in and of itself discredits the deductions drawn to the prejudices of the soldiers from the finding of the shells that have been submitted.

SHELLS AND CLIPS FOUND BY CAPTAIN MACKLIN.

It is testified by Captain Macklin, who was the officer of the day, that just at the break of dawn he made a careful search for any evidence that would show who had done the firing. In this behalf he searched, both inside the reservation wall and outside, to find shells and clips or other evidence that the soldiers had done the firing, as the citizens were at that time charging. He found no shell, no clip, no evidence of any kind inside the reservation wall, but outside the wall, across the street, in front of the garrison and at the mouth of Cowen alley, where, according to the testimony of the guard and the scavenger and other witnesses, the first shots were heard, he found seven shells and six clips in a circular area not more than 10 inches in diameter. The testimony is conclusive that if these shells had fallen from Springfield rifles as they were fired they would have been scattered over an area perhaps 10 feet in diameter. It is the opinion of all the witnesses who testified on that point that the shells found by Captain Macklin could not have fallen in the position in which he found them if they had fallen as they were fired. This fact, coupled with the further fact that with these seven shells there were found six clips, enough to hold thirty cartridges, further discredits the finding of the shells in the alleys and streets as evidence of the guilt of the soldiers.

MICROSCOPIC INVESTIGATION.

But while the investigation was in progress the War Department, on its own motion, caused all the rifles that were in the hands of the three companies at Brownsville that night to be forwarded to the Springfield Armory, and detailed two officers, who, under instructions from the War Department, caused to be fired out of each of these rifles two cartridges. The indentations on the heads of the exploded shells so fired were put under the microscope and compared with the indentations found on the heads of the thirty-three exploded shells picked up in the streets of Brownsville, which indentations were similarly magnified.

In order that Senators may have a better idea than I can convey by mere language, I have in my hand here an exploded shell to which I call attention. That is the head of the shell—where I am pointing. The center of that head is called the "primer." When the cartridge is inserted in the gun and the trigger is pulled a bolt shoots forward which carries what is called the "firing pin" until it strikes the primer, and that explodes the shell.

As I have already read, two cartridges were fired from each one of the guns of this battalion by the officers who were intrusted with the duty of making the experiment, and the indentations made upon the heads of the shells were then magnified, and you see by these exhibits in our record at pages 1313–1314 to what extent they were magnified. [Indicating.]

All firing pins are made by machinery and are supposed to be practically alike, yet it is found upon examination that no two firing pins will make the same kind of an indentation; that is, there does not seem to be anything in either manufacture or nature exactly like anything else, even when it is made with machinery.

All the heads of these exploded shells fired by these experts were put under the magnifying glass and magnified in that way. So were the heads of the shells picked up in the streets of Brownsville put under the magnifying glass, and then they were compared with each other with this result, that the indentations found on the thirty-three shells picked up in the streets of Brownsville were exactly like the indentations made upon the shells fired by these experts out of four certain rifles that had been sent to the Springfield Armory, which were found to have belonged to Company B.

All that is set forth in the official report of these experts. The experts transmitted them to the Secretary of War, with a report in which they said that the experiments showed conclusively that the thirty-three shells picked up in the streets of Brownsville had been fired out of these four certain rifles—eleven out of one, eight out of another, and so on. The numbers of the rifles were given, and that was transmitted to the committee as settling the whole matter.

But I was simple-minded enough when that came in to think I would like to know where those four rifles were that night, if I could find out. So I found out, from an examination of the property account of the company, that they were charged to four different soldiers, whose names were given. They were subpœnaed and brought before the committee, and they testified, and three of the rifles were accounted for as in the hands of men that night, not one of them showing any evidence of having been fired when examined the next morning.

But it was said by those who were disposed to criticise and not accept that as conclusive that these soldiers were interested and there might be unreliable testimony given. But it was not necessary to pursue that any further, for when we came to examine as to the fourth gun we found that gun was that night locked up in the arms chest of the storeroom of the company's quarters. I have told all this in the report, and I would rather read that.

Mr. SCOTT. And that gun had never been used.

Mr. FORAKER. No. I want to read that, and I want the attention of every Senator who will so honor me.

The thirty-three exploded shells were otherwise subjected to the most careful inspection by these experts. The result of this investigation was submitted to the committee in the form of an official report made by these officers to the Secretary of War. It is found at pages 1309–1325 of the record. Without being unduly tedious, the results were:

1. That there was such an exact identity between the indentations found on the heads of the thirty-three exploded shells picked up in the streets of Brownsville and the indentations found upon the exploded shells fired from four certain guns belonging to Company B of the Twenty-fifth Infantry that the officers reported that, beyond a reasonable doubt, the shells picked up in the streets of Brownsville had been fired out of those four guns.

2. The experts further reported that they found that three of the shells picked up in the streets of Brownsville had a double indentation, as though a first attempt to fire them had failed and they had then been put a second time in the piece and struck a second time with the hammer or firing pin before they were exploded.

3. They further officially reported that certain of the shells picked up in the streets of Brownsville, nine in number, bore marks indicating that they had been twice or oftener inserted in a rifle as though to be fired.

DOUBLE INDENTATIONS.

The officers of the Twenty-fifth Infantry and all the men who were examined on the point testified that when they first received their rifles, about the last of April, 1906, at Fort Niobrara, they were found to be so heavily oiled with cosmoline that the spring which shot the bolt forward with the firing pin to strike the head of the cartridge and explode it was impeded to such an extent that it was a matter of frequent occurrence that cartridges failed to explode at the first stroke, but that after, by the use of coal oil and in other ways, this cosmoline had been entirely removed, so that the spring worked freely, such a thing as a failure to explode practically never happened; and all testified that long before these troops left Fort Niobrara, where they used their rifles in target practice, they ceased to have any such difficulty and that during all the time they were in Brownsville no such difficulty could have been experienced if they had had occasion to use their rifles.

THE DOUBLE INSERTION.

As to the double insertion of cartridges, the officers and men all testified that while they were engaged in target practice at Fort Niobrara the call to cease firing very frequently was sounded after a cartridge had been inserted but before it was fired; that this was a matter of practically daily occurrence—

I should have said "hourly occurrence"— that always the soldier was required when the call to cease firing was sounded to at once remove from his gun any cartridge that might have been inserted but not yet fired, and that this cartridge so withdrawn was reinserted and fired when firing was resumed, and that in this way shells would show marks indicating that they had been inserted more than once in the firing piece. The officers and men all testified that except only on the target range at Fort Niobrara there was never in the history of these arms any such double insertion of cartridges or any occasion for such double insertion. It was the opinion of all the officers and men who testified on the subject that these double insertions never could have occurred except only on the target range at Fort Niobrara.

What these officers say shows how improbable it is that such a double insertion could have occurred in connection with the shooting affray at Brownsville, when it is remembered that when an attempt is made to fire a cartridge and the attempt fails the bolt must be drawn backward, with the result that the ejector throws the cartridge out of the chamber and to the distance of anywhere from 3 to 10 feet away from the gun. The idea that a raider would undertake in the darkness of such a night, and under such circumstances, to recover an ejected cartridge that had failed to explode in order that it might be reinserted in the piece is utterly untenable. The same is equally true as to those cartridges showing double indentations. There could not be any double indentation without pulling back the bolt after the first indentation, with the consequent expulsion of the cartridge from the chamber out into the darkness and to the distance of 3 to 10 feet away from the gun, then recovering and reinserting the cartridge. To suppose that on such an occasion, under such circumstances, any such thing would or could occur is an extreme improbability, if not an actual impossibility.

THE FOUR GUNS.

The four guns out of which the experts found that the shells picked up in Brownsville must have been fired were identified by their numbers. The testimony shows that on the night of the shooting three of these guns were assigned, respectively, to Thomas Taylor, Joseph L. Wilson, and Ernest English, privates of Company B. These men appeared and testified that they were in their quarters asleep when the firing commenced, that they heard the call to arms, rushed with their comrades to the gun racks, each getting some gun which he carried for that night and which he returned after the company was dismissed for the night to the gun racks, where they were locked up and kept until morning; that the following morning each one found his gun in the rack and that when submitted for inspection it was found to be perfectly clean and bright, showing no evidence whatever of having been fired during the night. All testify that in the excitement and confusion each soldier grabbed the first gun he could get, but that all guns were found in the racks, where they were verified after the firing was over. These witnesses were clear, straightforward, and unqualified in all their statements, and their testimony should be sufficient, in the absence of specific contradiction, to establish the fact that no one of their guns was used in the shooting affray.

They are confirmed by the testimony of their company commander, Lieutenant Lawrason, who testified, at pages 1579 and 1580, as follows:

"Q. Did you learn before your company was dismissed that night that it had been charged by Mayor Combe that the soldiers of the garrison had fired on the town?—A. Yes, sir. I was near the main gate into the town when Mayor Combe came up, and I heard part of the conversation with Major Penrose, in which Mayor Combe accused the soldiers of having done the shooting.

"Q. Until that time had you any thought of that kind with respect to the matter?—A. No, sir; I did not; I did not believe for an instant that the men had done it.

"Q. That was the first intimation you had that anybody made any such claim?—A. Yes, sir; it was.

"Q. And then it was after that that Major Penrose dismissed you and told you to make these examinations, was it?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. You took your company back, as I understand you, to the barracks and dismissed the company. Then what did you do in execution of the major's orders?—A. I saw the arms locked in the racks and later——

"Q. I will ask you, before you left the racks, whether or not you counted the guns after they were put into the racks?—A. Yes, sir; I counted them.

"Q. How many were there, or were they all there?—A. I don't remember the exact number, but I remember adding to the exact number the number of men on guard and the number of rifles that should be in the storehouse, and the first sergeant's rifle, and adding up seventy.

"Q. That is to say, you accounted for seventy rifles, did you?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Was that the full number that had been issued to that company?—A. That was all that we had—all the Springfield rifles we had.

"Q. And you remember, do you, positively that at that time you knew that you had in the gun racks the full number of rifles that should be there after deducting the other rifles that you accounted for as being elsewhere?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. If there had been three rifles missing from the racks, would you or not have detected it?—A. If there had been what?

"Q. If there had been three rifles missing, would you have detected it?—A. I believe I would have detected one short.

"Q. You would have detected one short. Now, do you remember Thomas Taylor of your company?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Do you remember seeing him that night?—A. I know that he was present that night, though I don't remember seeing his face in the ranks.

"Q. How do you know that he was present—I mean present with your company, and I suppose you mean that?—A. Yes, sir; because I know that he was carried on the rolls of the company at this time, and I checked up the whereabouts of every man in the company that night.

"Q. And you know that he answered to his name at the roll call, do you?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Or if not that, that you found him elsewhere?—A. Yes, sir; I know he was accounted for at that roll call.

"Q. You have told us of all who were absent from the ranks when the roll was called, and he was not one of them; so therefore it follows that he was in ranks, does it not?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Now, is that true also of Joseph L. Wilson?—A. Yes, sir; that is true of Joseph L. Wilson also.

"Q. Do you remember seeing him in ranks that night?—A. No, sir; I do not. He is on one end of the company, and I believe in the rear rank, or at any rate not directly in front of me in the company. He is smaller than most of the men in the company.

"Q. But if he had been absent when his name was called, you would have detected his absence, you would have observed it?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. You were paying particular attention, were you not, to the roll call?—A. Yes, sir; I was, because I believed that the barracks had been fired into, and I wanted to see if any man had possibly been wounded and left upstairs.

"Q. And you also stated that you knew the voice of every man so you could distinguish it and recognize it when he answered to his name?—A. Yes, sir; I believe I am familiar with every voice in the company.

"Q. Now, is what you have stated as to Thomas Taylor and Joseph L. Wilson also true as to Ernest English?—A. Yes, sir; I believe English was also present.

"Q. Do you remember seeing him that night?—A. No, sir; I can not positively state that I saw the face of any man in the ranks that night.

"Q. But you do remember distinctly that every man was in ranks answering to his name, except those whom you have given us the names of, who were away on the several duties you have mentioned?—A. Yes, sir."

THE FOURTH GUN.

But however it may be as to the testimony of these three men being sufficient to show that these three guns were not fired that night, the testimony is absolutely conclusive as to the fourth gun that it was not fired that night. This fourth gun, being 45683, was originally issued at Fort Niobrara to Sergeant Blaney. Shortly before the battalion left Fort Niobrara for Brownsville his term of enlistment expired, and he reenlisted and took the usual furlough of three months, to which he was entitled. Before starting on his furlough he turned in his gun to the quartermaster-sergeant, Walker McCurdy, who placed his name on a piece of paper and put it in the bore of the gun next to the chamber, and then placed it in the arm chest and locked it up. Sergeant Blaney did not return to the company until after it left Fort Brown. On the night of the shooting his gun, with others, was still in this arm chest. They were all placed there when the battalion left Fort Niobrara. On arrival at Fort Brown this arm chest was put in the storeroom, and for want of room other baggage was piled on top of the chest. On the night of the firing, and immediately after the company was dismissed for the night, Lieutenant Lawrason, the company commander, under orders from Major Penrose, proceeded to verify his rifles. He carefully counted the rifles in the gun racks and found there the exact number that belonged in the racks. He then went to the storeroom, taking with him the quartermaster-sergeant, who unlocked the room, that he might enter. After entering the room he told the quartermaster-sergeant that he wanted to verify the guns in his custody—those in the arm chest. The quartermaster-sergeant thereupon removed the baggage that had been piled on top of the arm chests, unscrewed the lids, opened up the guns, and Lieutenant Lawrason counted them, finding that every gun was there—not one missing. In this way he establishes that Blaney's gun was at the time of the firing in the arm chest, with the lid screwed down and baggage on top of the chest, and the door of the storeroom fastened under lock and key. In other words, it is conclusively shown that as to this one gun at least it was utterly impossible for it to have been fired in Brownsville or that it ever had been fired, except only on the target range at Fort Niobrara before the battalion left there.

Lieutenant Lawrason's testimony on this point is as follows:

"Q. That night, when the guns were put back in the racks, did you count them?—A. Yes, sir; I counted them as they were placed in the racks.

"Q. Were the rifles locked up?—A. They were, sir.

"Q. By whom?—A. By the noncommissioned officer in charge of quarters.

"Q. Who was that?—A. Sergt. George W. Jackson.

"Q. Is he a reliable man, or not?—A. I believe him to be a reliable man, sir.

"Q. And a truthful man?—A. I think so, sir.

"Q. He had been a sergeant in that company for a long time, had he not?—A. He had, for several years, I believe, sir. He was in the company when I joined it.

"Q. And a man of good record in every sense?—A. I believe he was, sir.

"Q. Now, you saw the gun racks locked by him; then what did you do next after you had put the rifles away and locked them up in that manner?—A. I then went down and inspected the rifles in the storehouse.

"Q. Who was in charge of the storehouse, or storeroom, whichever you call it?—A. Quartermaster-Sergeant Walker McCurdy.

"Q. Was he, also, an old sergeant?—A. Yes, sir; he was an old sergeant of Company B.

"Q. Was he or not a reliable and truthful man?—A. I always believed him to be such, sir.

"Q. He had been in the service many years, had he not?—A. Yes, sir; he had.

"Q. And had everybody's confidence as a good soldier and a faithful noncommissioned officer?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. He was the quartermaster-sergeant. As quartermaster-sergeant, what was his duty with respect to the surplus rifles and surplus ammunition? I mean surplus in the sense that it was not in the hands of the men?—A. He was accountable for it, and it was his business to keep it locked up.

"Q. You went to the storeroom after you locked up the rifles; who went with you to the storeroom?—A. The quartermaster-sergeant.

"Q. Sergeant McCurdy?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. What did you do, and what did you tell him, and in what condition did you find the room; was it locked or unlocked when you went to it?—A. It was locked and he opened it. He took out a bunch of keys, as I recollect it, and fumbled around and got the right key and unlocked the door. The storeroom was very small, and we could not put all of our quartermaster property in there, and there was some confusion in the way in which the stuff was piled. We had to remove a lot of company property.

"Q. I will come to that in a minute. What did you tell Sergeant McCurdy you wanted in the storeroom when you went there; did you tell him or not what you wanted to do until you got into the storeroom?—A. No, sir; when I get into the storeroom I told him that I wanted to see the rifles that he had in the storeroom.

"Q. That is, rifles that he had in his possession?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Did you know how many rifles he had in his possession at the time?—A. I did, by referring to the company property book which was kept there.

"Q. We will speak about that presently. Now, go on and state what you did and what he did when you told him.—A. He told me that the rifles were locked up in the arm chests. I told him to open them, and he opened one full arm chest that contained ten rifles, and also opened another that, I believe, contained two or three rifles and several old company shotguns.

"Q. Now, before you opened the arm chests, let me ask whether or not they were easy to get at, or whether there was anything on top of them?—A. No, sir; they were not easy to get at. As I recollect, we removed considerable property before we got the arm chests out and got room to unscrew the lids.

"Q. What kind of property was this?—A. Iron quartermaster bunks and, I believe, some iron uprights to hold mosquito bars—T-shaped things.

"Q. They had been piled on top of these arm chests, had they?—A. Yes, sir; and were standing against the wall, between us and the arm chests.

"Q. When had you last before that seen these arm chests, and where?—A. I had seen them at Fort Niobrara, Nebr., before shipment, and when they were unloaded from the wagons and placed in the storehouse at Fort Brown.

"Q. Where were these extra guns placed in these arm chests, whether at Fort Niobrara or Fort Brown, or where?—A. They were placed in the arm chests at Fort Niobrara.

"Q. Do you remember seeing the guns—rifles—put in the arm chests and the arm chests closed up for shipment at Fort Niobrara?—A. I do not believe I was present when the property was boxed up. It was boxed up some time before our departure, and Captain Shattuck was in command of the company at that time.

"Q. You have told us in what condition you found the chests as to other property being piled on top; this property was removed, was it, from the tops of the chests?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And then were the chests opened, or not?—A. They were opened under my supervision and the arms counted.

"Q. State in what condition you found the inside of those chests, as to the arms.—A. The arms were placed in the proper grooves for them, and they were battened down, or held down by cleats that fit in the boxes, to prevent their rattling around during shipment.

"Q. They had been fixed that way before they had left Niobrara?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And were they in that same condition when you opened them that night?—A. They were in the same condition, sir.

"Q. Did you count the rifles when they were opened up?—A. Yes, sir; I counted them.

"Q. I will ask you another question—whether or not, before these rifles were shipped from Fort Niobrara, they were coated with cosmoline oil or any other kind of oil?—A. I believe they were coated with cosmoline oil at the time I looked at them at Fort Brown.

"Q. When you looked at them was there any indication that they had been disturbed in any way whatever since they had been boxed up at Fort Niobrara?—A. No, sir; there was not; I did not take out all the rifles; I could count them without taking them out of the boxes; I picked up one or two from the top.

"Q. And you did count the rifles in both boxes?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And you remember that the requisite number of rifles were there, added to the other rifles that you found in the racks, and that you counted as away from there, to make up the number of seventy?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. There was not a rifle missing, was there?—A. No, sir."

On this point Quartermaster-Sergeant Walker McCurdy testified (p. 1658) as follows:

"Q. What book is that in front of you there? See if you recognize it.—A. This is the company's property book, sir.

"Q. The company property book of Company B?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Will you turn to that and see what gun Sergeant Blaney had assigned to him, according to that book, when these new Springfield rifles were issued?—A. [Examining book.] I think it was 45683.

"Q. 45683?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Now, it has been testified to, I believe, that Sergeant Blaney was absent on furlough. When did he go away on furlough?—A. It was about the same time I was made quartermaster-sergeant—about the 9th or 10th of June.

"Q. That is, you succeeded him when he went away on furlough?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Had he returned while you were yet at Brownsville? When did he return?—A. He returned at El Reno.

"Q. He was not with you at Fort Brown at all?—A. No, sir.

"Q. What was done with his gun when he left to go on furlough the 9th of June, or whatever date it was?—A. He took it up and packed it away.

"Q. He turned it in?—A. No, sir; he turned in his own rifle. He will tell you himself that when he returned there was a slip of paper put in the chamber to show whose rifle it was, to keep me from issuing it to anyone else.

"Q. Who put that in there?—A. I put it in there myself.

"Q. What was on that slip of paper?—A. 'William Blaney.'

"Q. Now, when he returned, were you still with the company?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. At El Reno?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And you were still quartermaster-sergeant?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And did you continue as quartermaster-sergeant?—A. Until I was discharged, sir.

"Q. Until you were discharged?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Now, what was done in the matter of providing Sergeant Blaney with a gun?—A. I gave him his same rifle back.

"Q. You gave him back that same rifle?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. What does the company book show there as to what ultimately became of it?—A. The company property book only shows here that it was checked off. At least it is struck out now, because it was checked off.

"Q. Look at the number of the gun and see whether there are some initials placed over the number?—A. No, sir; only 'O. K.' here, when it was turned in.

"Q. What is that written over the number [indicating on book]?—A. That is the captain's check mark.

"Q. That is 'C. C. K.?'—A. It is 'O. K.'

"Q. No; 'C. C. K.'—A. That is the captain's check mark, of Captain Kinney. He could tell you. He did that himself.

"Q. The gun was turned in. You were quartermaster-sergeant when the gun was turned in?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. State whether or not when the guns were turned in Captain Kinney was captain of the company.—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. And his name is C. C. Kinney?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. State whether or not he checked up every number.—A. He had that book, and he checked it up.

"Q. Can you tell us where that gun, No. 45683—is that the number?—A. 45683, I think it is, sir. [Examining book.] There is a check over it, but I think that is what it is, No. 45683.

"Senator WARNER. That is the number you gave?

"Senator FORAKER. Yes.

"By Senator FORAKER:

"Q. Well, it is the number that is there. State where that gun was on the night of the 13th of August, 1906.—A. It was in the arm chest, sir, in the company.

"Q. In the arm chest?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. Was the arm chest open or closed?—A. It was closed, sir.

"Q. Where was the arm chest?—A. It was in the storeroom.

"Q. How long had it been in that arm chest, and who had placed it there?—A. I placed it there at Fort Niobrara.

"Q. At Niobrara?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. It was one of the guns that were in your charge? It was one of a number in your charge at that time, was it?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. You have already testified that you packed up in arm chests all the guns you had charged to you?—A. All the surplus guns that were not in the hands of the men, sir.

"Q. You have a clear, positive, distinct recollection of that fact, have you?—A. Yes, sir.

"Q. You can not be mistaken about it?—A. No, sir.

"Q. It was No. 45688? That was the number?—A. Yes, sir."

If this gun was not fired that night in Brownsville, as the testimony conclusively shows it was not, then it follows that if the shells picked up in the streets of Brownsville were fired out of this gun they must have been fired at Fort Niobrara. The testimony shows this was both possible and probable.

Before this microscopic investigation was made or any such question was foreseen, it was established by uncontradicted testimony that Company B took with it to Brownsville as a part of its baggage a box containing from 1,600 to 2,000 exploded shells, with a proportionate number of clips, and that after arrival at Brownsville this box, opened, stood on the back porch of B barracks, where anyone passing might have access to it and remove shells and clips from it. The microscopic report says that the shells picked in the streets of Brownsville and put in evidence were, beyond a reasonable doubt, fired out of these four guns belonging to B Company. If so, then it also follows that they were fired, not in Brownsville, but at Fort Niobrara, and that they were found in the streets, not because they fell there when fired, but because they had been placed there by persons unknown, who had secured them from this box of shells standing on the back porch and easily accessible to anyone disposed to remove them therefrom. In other words, the microscopic inspection shows conclusively, not that the soldiers were guilty of the firing, but that the soldiers were free from such guilt.

Before I leave that subject let me again call attention to the fact that the next morning about the break of day, as he testified, Captain Macklin, who was the officer of the day, made a very careful search, having heard that the charge was that the soldiers had done the firing, both inside the reservation and outside, to find any evidence of such firing. Inside the reservation he could find no shell, no clip, no evidence of any kind to show that any firing had occurred. Outside the reservation, in the mouth of Cowen alley, where the sentinel and the scavenger testified that the first firing occurred, he found on a circular area, not more than 10 inches in diameter—think how small that is now—seven exploded shells and six of these clips. The testimony is that if those exploded shells had been fired that night by one standing near that point, they would have been ejected a distance anywhere from 3 to 10 feet from the gun, and they would have covered an area of 10 feet in diameter, rather than 10 inches in diameter. In other words, that, in connection with what is otherwise shown with respect to these exploded shells picked up in the streets of Brownsville, indicates that they had been placed there not as a result of firing done by soldiers, but as a result of firing done by somebody else who wanted to fix the responsibility for firing upon the soldiers.

Still other facts were developed and established by the testimony that might be cited as confirmatory of the innocence of the soldiers, but it is not necessary for present purposes to prolong the discussion of that character of evidence.

I want to pass to a consideration of the legislation that has been proposed, but before taking that up I desire to call attention to the

of this case, or rather its improbabilities.

To any mind at all familiar with human nature, and able to reason as to the probabilities of human action, there is testimony of the strongest character in favor of the soldiers in the striking improbability of the whole theory of their guilt.

Is it probable that men of the character the testimony shows these men to be would deliberately plan such a conspiracy? And if they had ability enough to plan and execute such a conspiracy, would they be stupid enough to enter upon its execution by breaking open their gun racks, as they did in Company C, and by firing from their rear porches as it is charged they did in Company B, or that they would be firing from within the reservation grounds, on which they would remain until by such firing and such operations they had aroused the whole town, and directed attention to themselves, thereby fixing their identity as soldiers; and that when they had thus fixed attention upon themselves, and not before, they would, in the presence of the aroused citizens jump over the wall of the reservation and start on their errand of outrage and murder?

Is it reasonable to suppose that if the raiders were soldiers they would have commenced firing anywhere in the vicinity of the reservation? It must be remembered that it is the theory of those who believe in their guilt that operations were commenced in this bungling manner and that yet their proceedings were so carefully planned that, although they had accessories before the fact to enable them to secure their guns and pass the guards and accessories after the fact to enable them to return, clean their guns, and otherwise deceive their officers, yet all concerned—the President thinks the great majority of the battalion—have so carefully guarded the secret that no one has allowed a single word or hint to escape that even tends to convict. Such secrecy would be utterly impossible; but it is, if it were possible, utterly inconsistent with the performances with which their proceedings were initiated. The two ideas are utterly at variance with each other—at war with each other—they destroy each other.

And if the soldiers were so reckless as to disclose their identity as soldiers by breaking open their gun racks and opening fire in the way indicated and at the places indicated, why should there have been maintained such secrecy with respect to themselves and their operations in other respects?

Is it reasonable to suppose—can any fair-minded man believe—that men capable of planning and executing such a conspiracy and willingly engaging in such a work would be so secretive on the one hand and so absolutely reckless on the other?

And is it reasonable to suppose that if there were from five or six or eight to twenty soldiers engaged in the raid they could have gone through the town to the extent described by the testimony, and in the manner shown by the testimony, and then from a point distant 300 to 350 yards from the fort have returned to the barracks and rejoined their companies while in the process of formation, under the very eyes of their officers, without being detected?

In order to have returned to their companies before their formation was completed they would have had to run swiftly and would, therefore, have been likely to show excitement, quick breathing, and other effects of their exertion, which would be observed.

The testimony of all the officers is unqualifiedly that not a man in any one of the companies showed any sign whatever of having participated in the affray.

It is no part of my purpose to speculate upon the suggestions of the testimony as to who, in fact, did do the shooting.

PRESENT DUTY.

At this time we are concerned only as to what affects the soldiers, and our sole concern as to them is to ascertain, if we can, what our duty toward them requires.

It is not essential to our action that we should determine who the raiders were. It is enough to know, what now seems to be commonly agreed upon, that, no matter who did the shooting, there are many of the soldiers who are wholly innocent both of participating in the affray and of withholding knowledge with respect thereto, and that all such have suffered disgrace, loss, and hardship from which they should be relieved, and that such relief can be granted only by an act of Congress.

Apparently no one appreciates this more keenly than the President. It is interesting to note how this matter seems to have weighed upon his mind and how by successive steps he has reached this conclusion.

His order discharging the men without honor was dated November 5, 1906. Congress convened December 2, 1906. On that day resolutions were introduced in the Senate authorizing an investigation of the facts connected with the affray and the discharge. They led to a debate and discussion, in consequence of which on the 12th day of December, 1906, the Secretary of War, by direction of the President, issued the following order:

Applications to reenlist from former members of Companies B, C, and D, Twenty-fifth Infantry, who were discharged under the provisions of Special Orders, No. 266, War Department, November 9, 1906, must be made in writing and be accompanied by such evidence, also in writing, as the applicant may desire to submit to show that he was neither implicated in the raid on Brownsville, Tex., on the night of August 13, 1906, nor withheld any evidence that might lead to the discovery of the perpetrators thereof.

Later, on the 14th day of January, 1907, the President, in a special message to the Senate, said:

I am now satisfied that the effect of my order dismissing these men without honor was not to bar them from all civil employment under the Government, and therefore that the part of the order which consisted of a declaration to this effect was lacking in validity, and I have directed that such portion be revoked.

On the 11th day of March, 1908, the Committee on Military Affairs having made its report, the President said, in a special message to the Senate, that he desired to revive the order of December 12, 1906, and therefore recommended—the passage of a law extending this time limit, so far as the soldiers concerned are affected, until a year after the passage of the law, and permitting the reinstatement by direction of the President of any man who, in his judgment, shall appear not to be within the class whose discharge was deemed necessary in order to maintain the discipline and morale of the Army.

In harmony with that message four of the members of the Committee on Military Affairs who had joined in the majority report joined in a supplemental report recommending the passage of a bill providing for the reinstatement in the Army, but without providing for pay in the meantime of all the discharged soldiers who would within a year after the approval of the act satisfy the President that they did not participate in the affray, and that they have not withheld any information with regard thereto.

Later, on the 19th day of March, the Senator from Missouri introduced a bill (S. 6206), which went still further in favor of the men, and provided that all who might reenlist under its provisions should have full pay from the date when they were discharged without honor.

Prior to the introduction by the Senator from Missouri of S. 6206, I introduced, March 12, S. 5729. Both of these bills were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs. Both have been reported from that committee adversely. Both are on the Calendar for consideration by the Senate, in accordance with their respective merits, without either having any parliamentary advantage over the other. I speak now in favor of the passage of S. 5729.

It will be helpful to recall in this connection precisely what these two bills are.

I ask that they be printed in the RECORD without reading.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, permission is granted.

Mr. FORAKER. I will state that the effect of the bill introduced by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. WARNER] is that any of the soldiers who were discharged may be allowed to reenlist whenever they may prove their innocence to the satisfaction of the President. Perhaps I had better read it all. It is a very short bill.

Mr. WARREN. I hope the Senator will read the bill. The language differs somewhat from that which the Senator has just used. I trust he will read the bill.

Mr. FORAKER. The bill provides that whenever the President shall be satisfied—I will read it as it is, then we will have it exactly. It is as follows:

A bill (S. 6206) for the relief of certain former members of the Twenty-fifth Regiment of United States Infantry.

Be it enacted, etc., That if at any time within one year after the approval of this act the President shall be satisfied that any former enlisted man of the Twenty-fifth Regiment of United States Infantry who was discharged from the military service as a member of said regiment under the provisions of a special order numbered 266 and dated at the War Department on the 9th day of November, 1906, had no participation in the affray or guilty knowledge of the persons engaged in said affray that took place at Brownsville, Tex., on the night of August 13–14, 1906, the President may authorize the enlistment of said man; and any man who shall enlist in the military service under authority so given by the President shall be held and considered to have reenlisted immediately after his discharge under the provisions of the special order hereinbefore cited and to be entitled, from the date of his discharge under said special order, to the pay, allowances, and other rights and benefits that he would have been entitled to receive from said date of discharge if he had been honorably discharged under the provisions of said special order and had reenlisted immediately.

I do not know of any way in which I departed from what the bill really is in the statement which I made, except only that I did not make the statement full enough. The bill does provide—and that is the fundamental idea of it—that none of these men can be authorized by the President to reenlist until he shall have satisfied the President—to use the exact language of the bill—that he is innocent of having participated in that affray and innocent of withholding any knowledge with respect to it; in other words, it is a requirement that these men shall prove to the satisfaction of the President their innocence.

The bill I introduced—perhaps I had better read that so that Senators may know just what it is—reads as follows:

A bill (S. 5729) to correct the records and authorize the reenlistment of certain noncommissioned officers and enlisted men belonging to Companies B, C, and D of the Twenty-fifth United States Infantry who were discharged without honor, under Special Orders, No. 266, War Department, November 9, 1906, and the restoration to them of all rights of which they have been deprived on account thereof.

Be it enacted, etc., That any noncommissioned officer or enlisted man belonging to Company B, C, or D of the Twenty-fifth United States Infantry, discharged without honor under Special Orders, No. 266, War Department, dated November 9, 1906, on account of the shooting affray that occurred at Brownsville, Tex., on the night of August 13–14, 1906, who shall make oath before any duly authorized enlisting officer of the United States Army or Navy that he did not participate in said affray, and that he does not know of any soldier belonging to any of said companies who did participate in the same, and that he has not at any time heretofore and does not now withhold any knowledge with respect to that occurrence which, if made public, would or might lead to the identification of any participator in said shooting affray or any accessory thereto, either before or after the fact, and that he has answered fully to the best of his knowledge and ability all questions that have been lawfully put to him by his officers or others in connection therewith, shall be, and hereby is, made eligible to reenlist in the military or naval forces of the United States on his application therefor at any time within three months from and after the passage of this act, any statute or provision of law or order or regulation to the contrary notwithstanding; and that upon such reenlistment he shall be allowed full pay, according to the rank he held and the pay he was receiving at the date of discharge until his reenlistment: Provided, That all the rights and privileges to which the soldiers reenlisting under the provisions of this act were entitled, respectively, at the time of their discharge shall be, and hereby are, fully restored to them, and the record showing their discharge without honor shall be, and hereby is, annulled, set aside, and held for naught, and the time elapsing since their discharge without honor until the date of such reenlistment shall be computed in determining all rights to which they may be respectively entitled on account of continuous service as though they had been in the service without interruption, and they shall not suffer any forfeiture of any right or privilege by reason of such discharge: Provided further, That in any case where the regular term of enlistment which the soldier was serving at the time when discharged without honor has in the meanwhile expired, his record shall be, and hereby is, corrected so as to show an honorable discharge at the time of the expiration of such enlistment, and he shall be allowed full pay and all rights and privileges until that time; and in the event of the reenlistment of such soldier under the provisions of this act his term of reenlistment shall be deemed to have commenced as of the time when his previous enlistment expired, and his service under such reenlistment shall be without prejudice of any kind by reason of his former discharge without honor: And provided further, That in case any of the noncommissioned officers or enlisted men belonging to said companies and discharged without honor shall have died since they were so discharged and before the passage of this act, but who shall have testified under oath or made affidavit before their death that they did not participate in said shooting affray or have any knowledge with reference thereto, their respective records shall be, and hereby are, corrected in accordance with the provisions of this act and their legal representatives shall be entitled to all pay that would have become due to them from the time of their discharge until the time of their decease.

SEC. 2. That nothing in this act contained shall be construed to prohibit the prosecution and punishment of any soldier reenlisting under the provisions hereof as to whom it may at any time hereafter appear that he did participate in said shooting affray or have knowledge thereof which he has withheld.

SEC. 3. That all reenlistments under the provisions hereof of soldiers who at the time of their discharge without honor were serving terms of enlistment which have not yet expired shall be held to be for only the remaining portion of said unexpired terms, respectively.

It will be observed with respect to these measures that both of them proceed upon the assumption that some of the men, whether few or many, or all, who were discharged without honor, were innocent, and that justice requires that all such men should have an opportunity to reenlist and be restored to all the rights they lost by being discharged without honor.

It will also be observed that both of these bills provide that the men so reenlisting shall be paid in full for all the time since they were discharged without honor until their reenlistment. In other words, in a general way the proposition of both bills is that the innocent men shall be allowed to reenlist without loss of pay, and be restored to all the rights lost on account of their discharge.

The chief difference between the two bills is that, according to the bill introduced by the Senator from Missouri, the men who are to secure reenlistment in accordance with its terms and provisions are required, as a condition precedent, to prove their innocence to the satisfaction of the President; while under the bill I have offered as a substitute it is provided that all shall be allowed to reenlist—who shall make oath before any duly authorized enlisting officer of the United States Army or Navy that he did not participate in said affray, and that he does not know of any soldier belonging to any of said companies who did participate in the same, and that he has not at any time heretofore and does not now withhold any knowledge with respect to that occurrence which, if made public, would or might lead to the identification of any participator in said shooting affray, or any accessory thereto, either before or after the fact, and that he has answered fully to the best of his knowledge and ability all questions that have been lawfully put to him by his officers or others in connection therewith.

There are other important differences, among them the following:

The bill offered by the Senator from Missouri does not authorize the correction of the records of the men who are to be reenlisted. That is necessary to enable them to have their rights to pensions, and other rights. His bill is silent on that point.

The bill offered by myself provides as follows:

* * * The record showing their discharge without honor shall be, and hereby is, annulled, set aside, and held for naught.

This bill further provides:

That in any case where the regular term of enlistment which the soldier was serving at the time when discharged without honor has in the meanwhile expired, his record shall be, and hereby is, corrected so as to show an honorable discharge at the time of the expiration of such enlistment.

This bill further provides:

That in case any of the noncommissioned officers or enlisted men belonging to said companies and discharged without honor shall have died since they were so discharged and before the passage of this act, but who shall have testified under oath, or made affidavit before their death, that they did not participate in said shooting affray or have any knowledge with reference thereto, their respective records shall be, and hereby are, corrected in accordance with the provisions of this act, etc.

There are a number of cases to which this provision would be applicable—a number of cases as to which the law would fail in its purpose if it did not contain some such provision.

All these provisions as to the correction of the records of these men are absolutely necessary if we propose to meet all the cases that will arise and treat them as equity and justice require.

These bills differ in another respect. The order of the President discharging them without honor forever debarred them from reenlisting in either the Army or the Navy of the United States.

The bill introduced by the Senator from Missouri does not remove the bar against reenlisting in the Navy of the United States, while my bill does explicitly remove that bar.

The importance of this is not in the fact that these soldiers may want to reenlist in the Navy and find themselves debarred therefrom, but in the fact that so long as any part of said order of dismissal stands against them they are at least pro tanto in disgrace and deprived of rights to which they are entitled.

Another difference is in the fact that the bill of the Senator from Missouri does not restore to the noncommissioned officers who may reenlist the rank they held, which my bill does. Failure to do this would be a denial of justice.

Still other differences might be pointed out, but those mentioned are sufficient for present purposes.

The main difference is the first indicated. That shows that these bills are based on radically different theories.

The bill introduced by myself requires every man who seeks reenlistment to purge himself by making oath as to his innocence of every crime connected with the shooting affray; not only that he did not participate in the shooting, but that he has no knowledge with respect thereto and that he has not withheld any knowledge from anybody.

These are requirements with which these men can comply, and under all the circumstances the test is sufficient and all that should be asked.

It is now more than eighteen months since this shooting occurred. It is almost a year and a half since the men were discharged and became separated from each other.

They have been during all this period under surveillance and practically on trial.

Numerous investigations have been had. One by the grand jury of Cameron County, Tex., another by the Penrose court-martial, another by the Macklin court-martial, and another by the Senate Committee on Military Affairs.

Nearly all these men have in some connection or in some form or other testified as witnesses at least once, and all those regarded as most likely to have knowledge as often as two, three, or four times. They have been examined and cross-examined, but during all this period, and notwithstanding all these trials to which they have been subjected, not one iota of testimony has been adduced anywhere by anybody of any kind whatsoever to point to any particular one of the men as guilty of any offense of any nature in connection with or growing out of this shooting affray.

This fact alone, disregarding altogether their own positive testimony as to their innocence, should be enough to authorize the acceptance of the affidavits they will be required to make under the bill I have offered as a sufficient basis for their reenlistment, especially in view of the fact that it is provided in my bill—

That nothing in this act contained shall be construed to prohibit the prosecution and punishment of any soldier reenlisting under the provisions hereof as to whom it may at any time hereafter appear that he did participate in said shooting affray or have knowledge thereof which he has withheld.

If these men are innocent as they claim to be, they can not make other or further statement than my bill requires them to make, for all an innocent man can do if charged with the commission of an offense is to say he did not do it, and that he knows nothing whatever about it, except it be to account for his whereabouts at the time when the offense was committed, and that has been done by every man in this battalion who was present at Brownsville that night.

To require more is to require an impossibility, and to require a man to prove his innocence is to outrage justice by reversing the rule of evidence that obtains in every civilized country.

But the bill offered by the Senator from Missouri is most extraordinary in another respect. I venture to claim that it is without a precedent in all the history of the liberty-loving English-speaking nations of the earth.

It requires two things of these men in violation of the fundamental spirit of our institutions and which, in my opinion, it would be a disgrace to the Congress of the United States to exact:

First, that men accused of crime shall prove their innocence; and, second, that they shall prove their innocence to the satisfaction of a judge who has already prejudged their case, not once, or twice, or three times, and casually, but repeatedly and officially, and each time with a manifestation of the most unqualified conviction that not only some of the men discharged did the shooting, but that many, if not all of them, had knowledge of the perpetrators which, through a conspiracy of silence, they have refused to divulge.

In his message to the Senate of December 19, 1906, in response to resolutions of the Senate calling for information on the subject, the President said:

I am glad to avail myself of the opportunity afforded by these resolutions to lay before the Senate the following facts as to the murderous conduct of certain members of the companies in question, and as to the conspiracy by which many of the other members of these companies saved the criminals from justice, to the disgrace of the United States uniform.

In that same message, in another connection, he said:

As to the noncommissioned officers and enlisted men, there can be no doubt whatever that many were necessarily privy, after if not before the attack, to the conduct of those who took actual part in this murderous riot.

I refer to Major Blocksom's report for proof of the fact that certainly some, and probably all, of the noncommissioned officers who were in charge of quarters, who were responsible for the gun racks and had keys thereto in their personal possession, knew what men were engaged in the attack.

Further along in that same message he said:

There is no question as to the murder and the attempt at murder; there is no question that some of the soldiers were guilty thereof; there is no question that many of their comrades privy to the deed have combined to shelter the criminals from justice.

Again, in that same message, he speaks on that same point, as follows:

So much for the original crime. A blacker never stained the annals of our Army. It has been supplemented by another only less Black in the shape of a successful conspiracy of silence for the purpose of shielding those who took part in the original conspiracy of murder.

Further along in that same message he repeats, as follows:

Yet some of the noncommissioned officers and many of the men of the three companies in question have banded together in a conspiracy to protect the assassins and would-be assassins who have disgraced their uniform by the conduct above related. Many of them may have known circumstances which would lead to the conviction of those engaged in the murderous assault. They have stolidly and as one man broken their oaths of enlistment and refused to help discover the criminals.

In that same message occurs also the following:

Incidentally I may add that the soldiers of longest service and highest position, who suffered because of the order, so far as being those who deserve most sympathy, deserve least, for they are the very men upon whom we should be able especially to rely to prevent mutiny and murder.

In his message of January 14, submitting the Purdy testimony, occurs the following:

The evidence, as will be seen, shows beyond any possibility of honest question that some individuals among the colored troops whom I have dismissed committed the outrages mentioned, and that some or all of the other individuals whom I dismissed had knowledge of the deed and shielded from the law those who committed it.

And then, finally in that same message, as though afraid his numerous positive and unqualified statements on this point would not be believed, he said:

It is out of the question that the fifteen or twenty men engaged in the assault could have gathered behind the wall of the fort, begun firing, some of them on the porches of the barracks, gone out into the town, fired in the neighborhood of 200 shots in the town, and then returned—the total time occupied from the time of the first shot to the time of their return being somewhere in the neighborhood of ten minutes—without many of their comrades knowing what they had done.

Indeed, the fuller details as established by the additional evidence taken since I last communicated with the Senate make it likely that there were very few, if any, of the soldiers dismissed who could have been ignorant of what occurred. It is well-nigh impossible that any of the noncommissioned officers who were at the barracks should not have known what occurred.

While these assertions, repeated over and over again in the most extravagant language, show after all, as General Garlington reported, that there was no evidence to establish a conspiracy of silence, and that the charges and assertions that there was such a conspiracy rested only on deductions that there must have been such a conspiracy because nobody would tell of that about which all claimed to have no knowledge, yet that very fact but emphasizes the President's unfit state of mind to act judicially in passing upon the applications of these men to reenlist as proposed in the bill introduced by the Senator from Missouri.

If these men are innocent, as they claim and as I believe, what else could they have said or done? Will some man please tell what word any one of them has uttered or what thing any one of them has done inconsistent with the innocence they assert? And yet, because they have said and done precisely what as innocent men they should have said and done, for that very reason they are arraigned as guilty of conspiracy and denounced in terms harsh enough to manifest exasperation because they will not confirm the charges against them and thereby establish an excuse for the crime that has been so inconsiderately committed against them and their rights, if they are in fact innocent, as they claim to be.

It would seem that we are to be carried back in the administration of justice to the days when men and women put on trial for witchcraft found no avenue of escape from punishment, brutality, and execution, except only in confession—to the days when if a man but stood mute he was liable to be put to death for it.

The President gives no intimation, except as already indicated, that his mind has undergone any change. He would therefore become judge of the worthiness of these men to reenlist if we should pass the bill introduced by the Senator from Missouri, firmly possessed of the conviction that very few, if any of them, were free from guilt. In other words, practically every man of the battalion would have to prove his innocence before one who has over and over again formally and publicly adjudged him guilty and denounced him as guilty in the severest language of censure and condemnation.

Another reason why this duty should not be intrusted to the President is that it would be impossible for him to act upon all these cases in detail, giving to the testimony of each of the 167 men, if all should apply to reenlist, that careful consideration which fair dealing would require.

It may be assumed that no one would expect him to personally examine the testimony in each case and pass judgment as the bill contemplates. He would of necessity have to call some one to his assistance to examine the testimony and advise him, but who would that be? Possibly the Secretary of War, who has expressed his agreement with the President in all he has said and done in the whole matter, and in every other matter. [Laughter.] But he, too, is a busy man, and would doubtless require the help of a suitable subordinate, and thus in all probability General Garlington, as the Inspector-General of the Army, and one of the officers who made a special investigation, would again come to the front, and to know his unfitness for such a duty we have but to recall that he testified before the Committee on Military Affairs that he would not believe anything anyone of these soldiers might say about this matter, even under oath, unless corroborated in some satisfactory way.

But if none of these should be called upon to assist the President, then somebody else—nobody knows who—would become the judicial adviser, to the satisfaction of whose whim the men would have to prove their innocence.

Moreover, how would such a proceeding be conducted? Would it be public or private? It is a constitutional right of the most important character that all trials upon indictments involving criminal charges and convictions shall be public, to the end that the public may see to it, through the power of public sentiment, that no man shall be unfairly condemned. This trial would not be within the letter, but it would be within the spirit of the Constitution, for these men are not now soldiers to be dealt with arbitrarily, but plain American citizens, invested with all the rights of citizenship, who are seeking not only a restoration of their good names, but also of valuable property rights, to all of which they are confessedly entitled, if not found guilty of crime. They should not be dealt with, therefore, in the dark, as though a lot of chattels, for that day for the American negro has forever passed, but as American citizens, entitled to the same rights white men would have under the same conditions.

In so far as we are to be governed by the fact that they were soldiers and may be soldiers again, we should remember, as Secretary Taft said of the white soldiers who shot up the town of Athens, Ohio, that they are, in a sense, the wards of the Government, and for that reason entitled, under such circumstances, to the protection of the Government in all their legal rights. And if we are to be further reminded, as we have been, that the President is the Commander in Chief of the Army, it is a sufficient answer that, while that is true, yet also it is true that he does not create the Army. It is not for him to say who shall enlist or reenlist. All that belongs to Congress.

In short, there is no excuse whatever for such a bill. To pass it would be but pretending to grant relief, for manifestly, unless there has been a decided change of mind, practically none would follow.

Our action would but add insult to injury. It would be without precedent, for it may be safely asserted that never before in the history of civilization has a legislative body been invited to require men accused of crime to prove their innocence before a hostile judge who has already adjudged them guilty; and never before has there been a suggestion that any man worthy to sit in judgment upon the rights of his countrymen would accept such a duty if assigned him, if conscious of having the slightest prejudice against the accused.

By what right does the Senator from Missouri assume that the President is capable of such a manifest impropriety?

The vilest horse thief, the most dangerous burglar, or the bloodiest murderer would not be required either to prove his innocence or to submit to a trial before a judge who had in even the most casual way expressed the opinion that the defendant was guilty.

Such a performance would be justly denounced as a denial of one of the most sacred rights of citizenship and a lasting disgrace to the judge who perpetrated it.

Who are these men that it should be even suggested that they should be treated worse than common criminals?

They are at once both citizens and soldiers of the Republic. Aside from these charges, which they deny, their behavior, both in the Army and out of it, has justly excited the highest commendation. Their record is without spot or blemish.

They are typical representatives of a race that has ever been loyal to America and American institutions; a race that has never raised a hostile hand against our country's flag; a race that has contributed to the nation tens of thousands of brave defenders, not one of whom has ever turned traitor or faltered in his fidelity.

In every war in which we have permitted them to participate they have distinguished themselves for efficiency and valor. They have shed their blood and laid down their lives in the fierce shock of battle, side by side with their white comrades.

They are the direct and worthy successors of the brave men who so heroically died at Petersburg, at Wagner, and on scores of bloody fields that this nation might live.

Faithfully, uncomplainingly, with pride and devotion, they have performed all their duties and kept all their obligations.

They ask no favors because they are negroes, but only for justice because they are men. [Applause in the galleries.]

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair must admonish the occupants of the galleries that applause is not permitted under the rules of the Senate.

SPECIAL MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

Let me again urge upon the Congress the need of providing for four battle ships of the best and most advanced type at this session. Prior to the recent Hague Conference it had been my hope that an agreement could be reached between the different nations to limit the increase of naval armaments, and especially to limit the size of war ships. Under these circumstances I felt that the construction of one battle ship a year would keep our Navy up to its then positive and relative strength. But actual experience showed not merely that it was impossible to obtain such an agreement for the limitation of armaments among the various leading powers, but that there was no likelihood whatever of obtaining it in the future within any reasonable time. Coincidently with this discovery occurred a radical change in the building of battle ships among the great military nations—a change in accordance with which the most modern battle ships have been or are being constructed, of a size and armament which doubles, or more probably trebles, their effectiveness. Every other great naval nation has or is building a number of ships of this kind; we have provided for but two, and therefore the balance of power is now inclining against us. Under these conditions, to provide for but one or two battle ships a year is to provide that this nation, instead of advancing, shall go backward in naval rank and relative power among the great nations. Such a course would be unwise for us if we fronted merely on one ocean, and it is doubly unwise when we front on two oceans. As Chief Executive of the Nation, and as Commander in Chief of the Navy, there is imposed upon me the solemn responsibility of advising the Congress of the measures vitally necessary to secure the peace and welfare of the Republic in the event of international complications which are even remotely possible. Having in view this solemn responsibility, I earnestly advise that the Congress now provide four battle ships of the most advanced type. I can not too emphatically say that this is a measure of peace and not of war. I can conceive of no circumstances under which this Republic would enter into an aggressive war; most certainly, under no circumstances would it enter into an aggressive war to extend its territory or in any other manner seek material aggrandizement. I advocate that the United States build a navy commensurate with its powers and its needs, because I feel that such a navy will be the surest guaranty and safeguard of peace. We are not a military Nation. Our Army is so small as to present an almost absurd contrast to our size, and is properly treated as little more than a nucleus for organization in case of serious war. Yet we are a rich Nation, and undefended wealth invites aggression. The very liberty of individual speech and action which we so prize and guard, renders it possible that at times unexpected causes of friction with foreign powers may suddenly develop. At this moment we are negotiating arbitration treaties with all the other great powers that are willing to enter into them. These arbitration treaties have a special usefulness, because in the event of some sudden disagreement they render it morally incumbent upon both nations to seek first to reach an agreement through arbitration, and at least secure a breathing space during which the cool judgment of the two nations involved may get the upper hand over any momentary burst of anger. These arbitration treaties are entered into not only with the hope of preventing wrongdoing by others against us, but also as a proof that we have no intention of doing wrong ourselves.

Yet it is idle to assume, and from the standpoint of national interest and honor it is mischievous folly for any statesman to assume, that this world has yet reached the stage, or has come within measurable distance of the stage, when a proud nation, jealous of its honor and conscious of its great mission in the world, can be content to rely for peace upon the forbearance of other powers. It would be equally foolish to rely upon each of them possessing at all times and under all circumstances and provocations an altruistic regard for the rights of others. Those who hold this view are blind indeed to all that has gone on before their eyes in the world at large. They are blind to what has happened in China, in Turkey, in the Spanish possessions, in Central and South Africa, during the last dozen years. For centuries China has cultivated the very spirit which our own peace-at-any-price men wish this country to adopt. For centuries China has refused to provide military forces and has treated the career of the soldier as inferior in honor and regard to the career of the merchant or of the man of letters. There never has been so large an empire which for so long a time has so resolutely proceeded on the theory of doing away with what is called "militarism." Whether the result has been happy in internal affairs I need not discuss; all the advanced reformers and far-sighted patriots in the Chinese Empire are at present seeking (I may add, with our hearty good will) for a radical and far-reaching reform in internal affairs. In external affairs the policy has resulted in various other nations now holding large portions of Chinese territory, while there is a very acute fear in China lest the empire, because of its defenselessness, be exposed to absolute dismemberment, and its wellwishers are able to help it only in a small measure, because no nation can help any other unless that other can help itself.

The State Department is continually appealed to to interfere on behalf of peoples and nationalities who insist that they are suffering from oppression; now Jews in one country, now Christians in another; now black men said to be oppressed by white men in Africa. Armenians, Koreans, Finns, Poles, representatives of all appeal at times to this Government. All of this oppression is alleged to exist in time of profound peace, and frequently, although by no means always, it is alleged to occur at the hands of people who are not very formidable in a military sense. In some cases the accusations of oppression and wrongdoing are doubtless ill founded. In others they are well founded, and in certain cases the most appalling loss of life is shown to have occurred, accompanied with frightful cruelty. It is not our province to decide which side has been right and which has been wrong in all or any of these controversies. I am merely referring to the loss of life. It is probably a conservative statement to say that within the last twelve years, at periods of profound peace and not as the result of war, massacres and butcheries have occurred in which more lives of men, women, and children have been lost than in any single great war since the close of the Napoleonic struggles. To any public man who knows of the complaints continually made to the State Department there is an element of grim tragedy in the claim that the time has gone by when weak nations or peoples can be oppressed by those that are stronger without arousing effective protest from other strong interests. Events still fresh in the mind of every thinking man show that neither arbitration nor any other device can as yet be invoked to prevent the gravest and most terrible wrongdoing to peoples who are either few in numbers or who, if numerous, have lost the first and most important of national virtues—the capacity of self-defense.

When a nation is so happily situated as is ours—that is, when it has no reason to fear or to be feared by its land neighbors—the fleet is all the more necessary for the preservation of peace. Great Britain has been saved by its fleet from the necessity of facing one of the two alternatives of submission to conquest by a foreign power, or of itself becoming a great military power. The United States can hope for a permanent career of peace on only one condition, and that is on condition of building and maintaining a first-class navy; and the step to be taken toward this end at this time is to provide for the building of four additional battle ships. I earnestly wish that the Congress would pass the measures for which I have asked for strengthening and rendering more efficient the Army as well as the Navy; all of these measures as affecting every branch and detail of both services are sorely needed, and it would be the part of farsighted wisdom to enact them all into laws; but the most vital and immediate need is that of the four battle ships.

To carry out this policy is but to act in the spirit of George Washington; is but to continue the policies which he outlined when he said, "Observe good faith and justice toward all nations. Cultivate peace and harmony with all. * * * Nothing is more essential than that permanent, inveterate antipathies against particular nations and passionate attachments for others should be excluded, and that in place of them just and amicable feelings toward all should be cultivated. * * *

"I can not recommend to your notice measures for the fulfillment of our duties to the rest of the world without again pressing upon you the necessity of placing ourselves in a condition of complete defense and of exacting from them the fulfillment of their duties toward us. The United States ought not to indulge a persuasion that, contrary to the order of human events, they will forever keep at a distance those painful appeals to arms with which the history of every other nation abounds. There is a rank due to the United States among nations which will be withheld, if not absolutely lost, by the reputation of weakness. If we desire to avoid insult, we must be able to repel it; if we desire to secure peace, one of the most powerful instruments of our rising prosperity, it must be known that we are at all times ready for war."

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, April 14, 1908.

Mr. HALE. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 3 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, April 15, 1908, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, April 14, 1908.

[Continuation of the legislative day of Monday, April 6, 1908.]

The recess having expired, the House, at 11.30 a. m., was called to order by the Speaker.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. WILLIAMS) there were—ayes 60, noes 26.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. PAYNE. I make the point that there is no quorum.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman's point of no quorum is dilatory. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The point of order is not sustained. [Laughter.] The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant-at-Arms will notify absent Members, and all those in favor of the motion, when their names are called, will answer "yea," and those opposed will answer "nay," and those present will answer "present," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 227, nays 5, answered "present" 16, not voting 139, as follows:

Until Wednesday:

Mr. BROWNLOW with Mr. GAINES of Tennessee.

For one week:

Mr. OVERSTREET with Mr. MOON of Tennessee.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The doors were opened. Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 20471, the naval appropriation bill, with Mr. MANN in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the Clerk will report the pending amendment.

On page 35, lines 7 and 8, strike out "$100,000."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a point here, if the Chair will permit me. The Chair said, "Without objection the Clerk will report the pending amendment." The Clerk then immediately proceeded to report it. I did not care to object in this particular case, but I think it would be better always to leave an opportunity for an objection, instead of immediately proceeding to report. The Chair never did put the question to the committee as to whether the committee would or would not object.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES.]

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I am not satisfied with the way this proposition is presented to the committee for consideration. When the House was considering the fortification bill, I was led to believe that the contest between Subic Bay and Manila Bay, respecting which should be created a naval base in the Orient, had been finally and definitely determined; that Subic Bay had been abandoned for that purpose, and that Manila Bay had been settled upon. Now, the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs practically states to the House that it is the purpose, as I interpret his remarks, of that committee to appropriate money so that Subic Bay may be created a permanent naval base, and he supplies the House with arguments calculated to justify that conclusion. He makes the statement that Subic Bay is the only proper place for a naval base in the Philippine Archipelago. It seems that the naval experts insist that Subic Bay should be adopted because it has the water, it has the better front, and the Army experts insist that Manila Bay should be made a naval base, because it can be protected from the rear. The result is that the Navy is proceeding to improve Subic Bay, and the War Department is proceeding to improve Manila Bay. It will of course inevitably result in the establishment of two naval bases in the Philippine Islands, only about 60 miles apart. Until this question is finally settled I do not believe the Administration ought to ask Congress for any money to expend in the establishment of a naval base in the Philippines. We ought to know where the money is going, at least we ought to have the matter finally determined. This controversy between the Army and the Navy has been going on for six or eight years. We have had it up and discussed it on the consideration of every naval appropriation bill for the last five or six years to my positive recollection. It seems to me the time has come when we ought to know, we ought to be informed as to what has been done in relation to the establishment of a naval base in the Philippine Archipelago. I do not believe the Congress is ready to appropriate for two naval bases there, and if the appropriation under consideration is to be used for the establishment of a naval base in Subic Bay it seems to me that it ought to be voted out of the bill until this question is finally and conclusively determined.

Mr. HOBSON. I would like to ask the gentleman if he regards an appropriation of fifty thousand and odd dollars for Cavite and $100,000 for Subic Bay as sufficient to establish the naval base anywhere.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It depends upon what the appropriation is to be used for. I am interpreting this appropriation in the light of the remarks of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss], who is chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs. I understand from the speech he made yesterday that as far as his influence goes the money will be used toward establishing a permanent naval base at Subic Bay. He furnished arguments that seemed to convince himself that Subic Bay was the only eligible point for a permanent naval base in the archipelago.

Mr. HOBSON. I will put the question in this way: In case Subic Bay was adopted as a naval base, would the gentleman recommend the abandonment of the naval station that exists at Cavite, and would he recommend leaving out the modest appropriation carried in this bill to maintain that third-class station in an efficient condition?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I only got a portion of the gentleman's question, but I understand that it is the policy of the War Department to fortify and protect Subic Bay to prevent a hostile fleet from finding lodgment and a haven of safety there. I understand that is the policy of the War Department, and the Committee on Appropriations recently informed the House and the country that the place had been finally determined upon by the Department. If the purpose of this appropriation is to carry out that policy I have no criticism to make of it at all, but if it is to carry out a policy of establishing a permanent naval base at Subic Bay and we are to have another permanent naval base at Manila Bay, then I am opposed to the appropriation.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the gentleman a question. I would like to ask him whether he could not offer an amendment testing the sense of the House upon that proposition by putting a proviso after this appropriation that none of the money was to be expended for the establishment of a permanent naval base at Subic Bay, or Olongapo, as it is termed in the bill. It seems to me that Congress ought to establish where the naval station is to be.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, acting upon the suggestion of the gentleman from New York, I propose to offer an amendment to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I ask to have my time extended to offer this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to speak for five minutes additional. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I offer this amendment, which I wish the Clerk would take, as I have not had time to reduce it to writing:

Provided, That no part of the appropriation carried in this paragraph shall be used for the establishment of a permanent naval station at Olongapo.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Would it not be well to strike out the word "development" in connection with your amendment?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Well, it might be; I have put the amendment in as a limitation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment. The gentleman has not stated where the amendment is to go.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. At the end of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will inform the gentleman from Indiana that there is an amendment pending.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I did not have in mind that there was already one amendment pending to the paragraph. When that is disposed of I will offer the amendment which I have sent to the Clerk's desk, and Mr. Chairman——

Mr. KEIFER. I would like to know what the pending amendment is. There is so much confusion——

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The pending amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia is to strike out the $100,000 appropriated. Now, the object of my amendment is to leave the question as to where a permanent naval base shall be where the joint commission has left it.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I think it is important to determine that question and not go on making appropriations at random on the principle that if it is a deer we will hit it and if it is a calf we will miss it. I think the question ought to be settled now. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman said a moment ago he was anxious to determine where the permanent naval base shall be. Would the amendment offered by the gentleman determine that question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Well, it would determine it in so far as this appropriation goes—as far as we can do it in an appropriation bill. The fortifications appropriation bill contained no specific direction as to how the appropriation should be expended. It was an appropriation of a lump sum to be used in the Philippine Islands, but the gentleman in charge of the bill informs us that the joint Army and Navy board had finally settled upon Manila Bay as a naval base in the islands, but that appropriations should be made for the fortification and protection of Subic Bay to prevent a hostile fleet from occupying it and finding a harbor of safety there.

Mr. MADDEN. Could the gentleman yield to this further question?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I will yield.

Mr. MADDEN. Does the gentleman believe it is wise to determine upon a place as a permanent naval base where it is impossible to get a ship within 2 miles of where the naval base is established?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. That is a question. The Committee on Appropriations informed the House not two weeks ago that that matter had been finally determined, and that the money carried in the bill should be used, so far as it was used at all, in establishing a naval base at Manila.

Mr. MADDEN. That related to Army fortifications.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It was announced at that time that the question had been fully and finally determined. Now, if it has not been determined, if it is an open question, is the Army or fortification money to be expended in fortifying Manila Bay in view of locating the naval base, or is the money carried in the naval bill to be expended in improving Subic Bay with the view of making that the permanent naval base? Some authority ought to determine which of these two points shall be the permanent naval base in the archipelago. It is an important matter. It ought to be determined now before any more money is expended down there.

Mr. FOSS. May I interrupt the gentleman just a moment?

Mr. KEIFER and Mr. TAWNEY rose.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss].

Mr. FOSS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRUMPACKER. For what?

Mr. FOSS. I wish to correct a misapprehension.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. The gentleman can make a statement when I have finished. I am about through.

Mr. FOSS. I wish to state something in this connection, if I can.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] has expired.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to correct a misapprehension on the part of some of the Members of this House. It is true that a joint Army and Navy board has made a recommendation for a naval station at Manila Bay, but it is not true that that recommendation has been approved by the Navy Department. I have here a letter from the secretary of the General Board, Admiral Dewey being himself the president of the General Board, stating:

Admiral Dewey desires Mr. Foss's attention called to the fact that whereas a recent recommendation of the joint board in connection with Subic and Manila has been quoted in the discussion in the House on the naval bill this recommendation has not yet been approved.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. FOSS. I will.

Mr. TAWNEY. In view of that fact, does not the gentleman think that it would be far more wise for us to postpone any appropriation looking toward the establishment of a naval base until the board has finally approved or disapproved the recommendation of the joint Navy and Army board?

Mr. FOSS. We make, in this bill, an appropriation of $100,000 for Olongapo and a reappropriation of another $100,000, which we believe will be necessary during the coming fiscal year.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is it not also true that in this bill you have items appropriating money for officers' quarters and amusement halls at Olongapo, and is it not true that both the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. Hobson] yesterday stated on the floor that all this was looking to the making of a permanent naval base at Olongapo?

Mr. FOSS. We have put in here an appropriation. We have about 1,000 marines at Olongapo, and we have made an appropriation here of $10,000 for a little amusement hall for the men, and $10,000 for officers' quarters.

Mr. SHERLEY. Did not the gentleman yesterday state that it was the idea of the Navy to make of Olongapo a naval base?

Mr. FOSS. I hold, Mr. Chairman, that Congress, in 1901, established a naval station at Subic Bay. That is the proposition that I hold to. And I hold to the further fact that every Secretary of the Navy during the last five, six, or seven years—and we have had five of them—have stood by that proposition; and I hold further that joint board after joint board has declared in favor of Subic Bay, and I hold further that there is no place in Manila Bay where you can locate the dry dock. And not only that, but I have the opinion of Admiral Dewey himself.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is not the official opinion of Admiral Dewey to this effect—that the alternative is to locate the naval base in Manila Bay? Did he not use that language as the senior member of the joint board, and is that not of as late a date as January 31, 1908?

Mr. FOSS. Admiral Dewey has said there is only one base on which to locate the naval training station, but the Army has said we can not defend the naval station. Well, where is there a naval station anywhere that the Army has defended?

Not only that, but the question in the Philippines is not defense by the Army.

Mr. SHERLEY. But as a fact, did not——

Mr. FOSS. Just one moment. The real question in the Philippines will be, Who will defend the Army? How long can the Army stay in the Philippines if you have no communication between the Philippines and this country? How long could we hold the Philippines if it were not for the Navy? Why, Admiral Dewey once said in his testimony before the committee that General Young, of the Army, told him that the Army could not stay in the Philippines six weeks without the Navy. You talk about the Army defending the Navy. I say to you that in its last analysis it will be the Navy that will defend the Army. It will be the Navy that will keep our flag aloft in the sky over the Philippine Archipelago. [Loud applause.] It will be the Navy, and it will depend entirely upon the control of the sea. That is the proposition in a nutshell before you in the final and last analysis. [Renewed applause.]

Mr. SHERLEY. Now, will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. FOSS. I yield to the gentleman now.

Mr. SHERLEY. Without discussing that question, is not this the fact—that Admiral Dewey, having in mind both the Army and the Navy, as senior member of the joint committee, formally and officially declared in favor of Cavite against Olongapo? That can be answered "yes" or "no."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SHERLEY. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Illinois may have five minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SHERLEY. I would like now to have an answer to that question.

Mr. FOSS. Admiral Dewey informed me that this matter has not yet been definitely decided.

Mr. SHERLEY. I will ask the gentleman if Admiral Dewey did not officially, as a member of the joint board, having in view the opinions of both the Army and Navy, declare in favor of Cavite as against Olongapo? If the gentleman does not want to answer, I will read from his speech yesterday in which he puts the report.

Mr. FOSS. The report speaks for itself. The naval authorities are in favor of Subic Bay; the Army has come along and said, "We can not defend Subic Bay." But I say to you, we want no defense from the Army for Subic Bay. The Navy will defend its own naval base. We could put a great ship in that harbor and train its guns on the hills around. What are you afraid of? Are you afraid of the Filipino? He is not hostile. Who are we to defend it against? Is it from an invading army coming from China or Japan? Well, sir, if we control the seas no invading army will ever come to the Philippines. The whole question of the defense of the Philippines is simply a question of the control of the seas. If we lose control of the sea, then we lose our sovereignty in the Philippines; and our Army, where will they go? They will come back if they can possibly get back.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say that you can not find in Manila Bay anywhere a place to put this dock. Look over this harbor, if you will [indicating on a map]. I wish some of those gentlemen who are so anxious to locate the dry dock and a navy-yard in Manila Bay would come here and point out some place where you could place this great floating dock, which requires a depth of water of 50 or 60 feet. I would be glad for some gentleman to do it. Here is Cavite [indicating on map]. Look at the depth of water around Cavite—15, 18, 20 feet at the most; some places 14, quite a distance away. You can only get the very smallest vessels up to it. In our hearings before the committee Admiral Dewey said you can not get within 2 miles in a battle ship, and all the repairs which are being made are being made upon vessels of very light draft.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FOSS. I can not now.

Mr. SHERLEY. I got the gentleman his additional time.

Mr. FOSS. What is the situation here as to Olongapo? Great depth of water, 50 and 60 feet. Olongapo is in Subic Bay, right up here [indicating on map]. Spending very little in dredging, you can have any depth of water.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. NORRIS. The gentleman from Illinois has now left the space in front of the desk where the map is hanging, so that perhaps there is no occasion for stating the point; but I wanted to call attention to the fact that there was still room for one or two more people around the map. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is not stating a point of order.

Mr. FOSS. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say further, I called at the Navy Department and asked them whether they had received an estimate for dredging a channel for taking a battle ship up to the navy-yard at Cavite, and they replied that they had received an estimate from the commissioner of navigation over in the Philippines.

Mr. MADDEN. How much was it?

Mr. FOSS. It was $5,500,000, and those estimates were not based on borings at all.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question right there?

Mr. FOSS. Not just at this time.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. FOSS. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

There was no objection.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSS. I would rather not.

Mr. SHERLEY. Simply for a question?

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman tell the committee how much money will have to be expended in dredging in order to make Subic Bay suitable for a naval base?

Mr. FOSS. We have spent hardly any money at all in dredging at Subic Bay.

Mr. SHERLEY. I did not ask that. I asked how much money would have to be expended under the estimates made at the Navy Department.

Mr. FOSS. I do not know how much. I have not the estimates here, but nothing as compared with Cavite.

Mr. SHERLEY. Is it not a matter of over $3,000,000?

Mr. FOSS. No; I think not. Not in my judgment.

Mr. SHERLEY. I was so informed.

Mr. BATES. About $2,000,000.

Mr. FOSS. We have expended hardly any money at all for dredging there. The only appropriation for dredging at Subic Bay has been a little over $50,000. We have expended in all in Subic Bay about $2,500,000 to $2,750,000, of which $500,000 has been for a coaling plant; $1,250,000 has been for the floating dry dock, which makes $1,750,000, and the difference between that and the total amount of the appropriation is $750,000 to $1,000,000. That is all we have expended there, and we have been docking our ships and repairing them, and it is the only place where you can put the dry dock.

Mr. BUTLER. Will my colleague yield for one question?

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. BUTLER. If this station is abolished, where will we repair our battle ships and other ships of war in the Philippine Islands?

Mr. FOSS. I do not know.

Mr. BUTLER. Is there any other place?

Mr. FOSS. The gentleman from Kentucky perhaps can tell.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman can tell you what Admiral Dewey said, as the ranking member of the board, when he recommended Cavite, if that will satisfy the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. BUTLER. Admiral Dewey recommended Subic Bay, and Admiral Dewey's word induced the Committee on Naval Affairs——

Mr. SHERLEY. I have here the final report, placed in the RECORD by the gentleman from Illinois, of date of January 31, 1908, in which Admiral Dewey, in the fourth proviso, says that the alternative is to locate the naval base in Manila Bay.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. And he spoke for the unanimous joint board.

Mr. SHERLEY. He spoke for all of them.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. He spoke of that as an alternative, but will the gentleman tell us which proposition he favors?

Mr. SHERLEY. He favors that, considering the position of both the Army and the Navy, as to the defense of the two places, and the final unanimous conclusion of that board was in favor of Manila as against Olongapo.

Mr. FOSS. I will say to the gentleman from West Virginia that the joint board has reported for Manila Bay, but that recommendation has not been approved by the Department. We have had joint board after joint board, a joint board upon which Secretary Taft once sat, and they have been unanimously heretofore in favor of Subic Bay. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] seems to be overpowered by the report of the joint board. The joint board! I have known the joint board to swap their minds overnight. I am not overpowered or overcome by the "joint board."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. FOSS. I ask unanimous consent that my time may be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that his time be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOSS. Now, Mr. Chairman, this question was settled way back in 1904. Admiral Dewey appeared before the committee when we had hearings on this question, and at that time he said:

> I am convinced that Subic Bay is the one place in the Philippines for a naval base.

Further on he says:

> With regard to the Cavite Navy-Yard, I refreshed my memory a little this morning, and I see that a battle ship can not get within two miles of the wharf of the Cavite Navy-Yard.
> Already an estimate has come in for dredging a little channel to take a battle ship up there, and the first item, which will probably be exceeded by the cost of the actual work, was five and one-half million dollars.

Now, Secretary of the Navy Moody appeared before the committee in 1904, and what did he say? He said: "We have been five years in the Philippines, and we have not yet a naval station there of any consequence;" and he urged on the committee the establishment of a naval station at that time. He says: "Every single bit of information is in favor of establishing it within Subic Bay at the harbor of Olongapo. Nobody disagreed. The Army and Navy alike say that this is the place for it. There is plenty of water, and the protection of the entrance may be made perfect." Upon that hearing we established a naval station at Subic Bay, and we appropriated $862,000, and the Congress of the United States authorized it. And year after year the joint board of the Army and Navy have confirmed it, and every Secretary of the Navy has also confirmed it, until this last year we have a joint board of the Army and Navy that comes along and says, "You ought to put it at Manila Bay.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSS. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BUTLER of Pennsylvania. Will the gentleman state how much money the Government has spent on improvements in Subic Bay?

Mr. FOSS. I have already stated; $2,750,000, including the dry dock, which cost $1,250,000, and a coal plant of $500,000.

Now, I have a letter from Admiral Dewey, which was written on March 24, and he says:

> DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY.
> GENERAL BOARD,
> Washington, March 24, 1908.
> MY DEAR MR. FOSS: Referring to the matter of the naval station at Olongapo, in Subic Bay, and our conversation in connection therewith, I inclose a brief historical summary of official action in relation to a naval station at that point, extending from 1900 to 1907.
> Subic Bay is already fortified in considerable strength against attack from sea. The Navy, with some valuable assistance from the Army Engineers, has mounted twenty 6-inch guns, four 4.7-inch guns, four 4-inch guns, and ten 6-pounder guns on commanding points at the entrance to the bay. These are sufficient to protect Olongapo from any attack from the sea except one made by heavy vessels in considerable force. The floating dock Dewey is moored at Olongapo, finding a sufficient depth of water close to the beach and naval station. There is no similar place at which it could be moored in Manila Bay. If placed near Manila or Cavite it would have to be moored some distance from shore and in the open bay, an impracticable situation, not only as regards weather, but also as regards the administration and management of work in connection with the docking of vessels. This dock has been used for fifty-six dockings since its arrival at Olongapo, on July 10, 1906, for naval vessels, auxiliaries, and Army transports.
> Recent developments and the decision of the War Department that Subic Bay could not be defended against a land attack with the forces ordinarily stationed in the Philippines, as accurately stated by Congressman SMITH of Iowa in the debate on the fortifications bill on March 21, have placed in some doubt the location of a permanent naval station in the Philippines, but the joint board is nevertheless of the opinion "that the proper defense of the Philippine Islands includes the fortification of the entrances of both Manila and Subic bays, such fortification being essential both to protect the armed forces of the United States and to prevent occupation by an enemy."
> Very truly, yours,
> GEORGE DEWEY.
> Hon. G. E. FOSS, M. C.,
> House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SUBIC BAY.

October, 1900. Secretary of Navy appointed a commission of five officers under Admiral Remey, commander in chief. Reported unanimously in favor of Olongapo.

Referred to general board, which, September 28, 1901, after seven months' consideration and study of subject, earnestly recommended the establishment of a strong naval base at that point.

November 4, 1901. Secretary Long approved report and recommendation.

November, 1903. Secretary Moody, in annual report, stated that naval opinion unanimously favors Subic Bay. Commanders in chief, two Boards, and Admiral of the Navy all agree that our naval base should be within Subic Bay. It would seem as if this body of opinion ought to be deemed conclusive. I know of no other military question upon which such unanimity exists.

Also approved by joint board, December, 1903, whose report stated emphatically "That Manila is not but that Subic Bay is suited for a naval base and station, and of all harbors in the archipelago it is the best for the purpose. That the fortification of Subic Bay is essential to the security of a naval station there. That a fortified naval base at Subic Bay will contribute materially to the defense of Manila Bay."

The National Coast Defense Board, of which Secretary Taft was president, February 1, 1906, places Subic Bay as in order of special importance for defense, next after the defenses of our own coasts; the total lists of those localities considered as of special importance being Chesapeake Bay, Long Island Sound, Puget Sound, Subic, Guantanamo, Manila Bay.

The Philippines are not self-sustaining in military supplies or provisions. Sea communications are vital to defense of the Philippines, and therefore, as affirmed by the joint board, the Navy must have a fortified base of operations from which to protect trade routes and keep open our sea communications. There may not be local superiority over enemy, but a minority of force great enough to make his operations hazardous. Subic, 35 miles from Corregidor. Channels narrow and easily defended. Anchorage 5 miles inside entrance. Is on flank of enemy's line of communications to Manila.

Depth of water, 25 fathoms in the bay and 11 to 15 fathoms in the harbor of Olongapo.

Fortifications at Manila Bay also necessary, but on account of strategical and dry-dock considerations Subic should be fortified first. Admiral Brownson, in a letter dated last December (1906), writes: "On one question I can express myself decidedly. Before coming out here I was decidedly in favor, as you may remember, of the Olongapo scheme, as compared with any other that had been suggested for a naval station in the East. My further inquiry into the subject since arrival on the station only strengthens this belief. I am for Olongapo first, last, and all the time. * * *

"With an inferior fleet, well protected by batteries and mines in Subic Bay, would any fleet dare go in Manila Bay with a view to taking possession of it, without first destroying the Subic Bay fleet?"

April 21, 1904. Congress appropriated $700,000 "for construction of seacoast batteries in the insular possessions."

May 26, 1904. Joint board recommended that the whole of this amount be devoted to defense of Subic Bay.

July 1, 1904. Acting Secretary of War informed joint board that as there were certain reasons why the whole expenditure should not be made at Subic Bay the Department would approve a project for the emergency defense of that place providing for the installation of three 10-inch high-power guns and six 6-inch guns.

March 2, 1907. Congress appropriated $500,000 for seacoast batteries in Philippine Islands.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FOSS. And let me say, Mr. Chairman, right along after this comes the recommendations of the different boards in relation to this subject. Congress settled it in 1904, and let it remain settled. [Applause.]

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, when this discussion commenced upon this paragraph of the bill I thought I had something that might be important to say on the subject, but since I have heard so much and varied talk about Subic Bay, Olongapo, Cavite, Manila Bay, and so forth, I am prone to be as confused as some of my fellows. I was not pleased with the claim which the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs [Mr. Foss] made that the time would come when the Navy must protect the Army in the Philippines and fight for its safety. The mistake the gentleman makes is that the two are in combination; the Army and the Navy in a certain sense, when we are dealing with the enemy, is to be treated as a unit. I do not depreciate the Navy as a power to keep communication with our possessions off in the Philippines, but the Navy and Army must act together and one would fail without the other.

Mr. FOSS. I entirely agree with the gentleman, but I was making a statement which Lieutenant-General Young, of the Army, made to Admiral Dewey, to the effect that the Army could not stay there without the Navy if our communications were cut off.

Mr. KEIFER. I was not conplaining of that statement, but the statement that the time was coming when the Navy would have to fight to protect the Army. They are to be treated as a unit. I mean to say that I have always believed, and I understand that naval officers who have been to Subic Bay and Manila have believed, that the only real place for the primary defense of Manila or Manila Bay was at Subic Bay, and that if we fortified that place and fortified it in a proper way as against a foreign navy, we would have perfect safety in the harbor of Manila, where it is more difficult to have fortifications. This was demonstrated when Admiral Dewey was on his way to Manila to attack the Spaniards. He looked into Subic Bay to see that there were no enemies there, that he might safely go on into the bay of Manila. He understood the question then as he understands it now. Subic Bay lies some distance outside of the main entrance to Manila Bay, it is true, but no enemy is going to sail a fleet by it and leave a fleet inside that might come out and attack them in the rear or bottle them up. This is a familiar principle not only in naval warfare, but in land warfare. The claim is made that Subic Bay should not be made a permanent naval station or base because an enemy might attack and take it by a land force. What great harbor of the world is chosen on account of its absolute safety from a land attack. If we hold Subic Bay against becoming a harbor of a foreign fleet, there will be no danger of an army being landed. It could not be subsisted unless a supporting fleet had obtained a permanent success. Mr. Chairman, I have this complaint to make about these appropriations, and that is that we are making indefinite appropriations of $100,000 here and $100,000 there. As I understand this somewhat blind paragraph, we appropriate $100,000 for the improvement and development of the naval station of Olongapo within Subic Bay, and then we appropriate certain moneys that were provided for use in other and earlier such legislation. If I do not misunderstand the chairman, that covers $100,000 more. The difficulty is that we take these hundred thousands from time to time and use them in making fortifications, in attempting to improve and develop stations and other places, and when we are through and the next year comes around for appropriations we do the same thing over and we accomplish practically nothing substantial except to expend our money. We have no plans—we have no definite or specific plans—or, if we have, we do not follow them. The distinguished chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs says that Subic Bay was established as a naval station in 1904.

We have been quarreling for more than three years that I have been in this Congress to determine whether we have done that very thing or not, and we are disputing over it now. If we had a policy that we could follow, and it comes up to the Congress of the United States to establish that policy——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KEIFER. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEIFER. I say it comes to the Congress of the United States to fix these policies for the Philippine Islands, and the policy or policies that should obtain in building up fortifications in the Hawaiian Islands and at other important places on our continental coasts. We have talked about joint boards, Navy boards, Army boards and the like and their recommendations, and then we come here and quarrel as to what they mean. Admiral Dewey's letters read yesterday and others read to-day show that after a board has reported its finding has to be approved, and if it is approved by one bureau of the Navy, another disapproves it, and so we go on legislating and appropriating money and expending it, and when we are through we know it is expended, but we have not accomplished anything.

We the other day wisely passed a bill looking to the establishment of a naval station and the building of permanent fortifications at Pearl Harbor, on the Island of Oahu, in the Hawaiian Islands. That was a proper step, but we are likely to forget ourselves and some of these days be quarreling whether we had not better appropriate money for Diamond Head, or, as in this bill, for Honolulu, for I find in it we are going to expend, if the bill passes as reported, a large sum of money at Honolulu, and when it is expended and gone the Department will be back here for more and you can not find what has been done with it. So my chief objection is that this loose, unsettled policy which we follow as a mode of getting away with our money brings no adequate safe protection against a foreign foe should it come. [Applause.]

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute for the amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is mistaken. There is no amendment to an amendment pending. The gentleman from Indiana gave notice that when this amendment was disposed of he would offer an amendment at the end of the paragraph.

Mr. HOBSON. Then I simply move to strike out the last word of the amendment for the purpose of correcting what evidently is a misapprehension as to the uses of these two stations. Whether we keep the Philippines or give them up, we must forever protect the Filipinos. If we protect the Filipinos, we must have a naval base in the Philippine Islands. If we have a naval base in the Philippine Islands, it must be Subic Bay. We have to-day a station in the Philippine Islands at Cavite. It is only a third-class station. A ship drawing 14 feet of water can not be taken care of there. I would hate to have to use the marine railway at Cavite to haul out of the water a ship of 2,000 tons displacement. There is a proposition on foot to construct a basin above the point of Cavite, and the basin alone, it is estimated, would cost $8,000,000, and then you would only have begun to fight against the insuperable obstacles of nature in the way of the establishment of a naval base at Cavite.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Will the gentleman tell us how much it will cost to establish a permanent naval base at Olongapo?

Mr. HOBSON. I wish to speak accurately when I speak to the House and this committee, consequently I will not answer that question loosely, where the features of the station are not defined, but will answer it thus: The question before the committee is whether we are to have $100,000 to keep up a plant there that has cost nearly $3,000,000. Our fleet is on the way. When it reaches the Far East the floating dry dock at Subic Bay is the only place in American territory where the ships can be docked. It will require at least this $100,000 to enable us to efficiently handle the fleet in one visit, in my judgment.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman from Alabama permit an interruption?

Mr. HOBSON. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana meets exactly the proposition that is presented by this, and that is that the $100,000 may be expended during the next fiscal year for temporary purposes, but not for the establishment of a permanent naval base?

Mr. HOBSON. I am glad the gentleman from Minnesota brings that to my attention, because my amendment was going to propose "for the improvement and maintenance of the station now at Subic Bay." I am not in the slightest degree contending for the beginning now of an elaborate system of development at Subic Bay, because that would simply be preparing it for the enemy that may come. There has never been any difference of opinion between the Army and the Navy or any other men as to the question of a base at Subic Bay, until the matter of the defense of that base came up, and then it appeared that to meet an invasion and properly defend Subic Bay from an attack from the rear, with an army coming down from the Gulf of Lingayen, the line of the American forces would have to be extended, perhaps, 100 miles, and that it would take upward of 100,000 men to do this, an utter impossibility. We have 14,000 men in the Philippine Islands——

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Will the gentleman permit me——

Mr. HOBSON. And there are only 9,000 infantrymen in continental United States, there are only 19,000 Regulars available in the whole United States, and there are 14,000 in the Philippines, with the 15,000——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask unanimous consent that my colleague may have five minutes additional time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Alabama may have five minutes additional time. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Will the gentleman yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HOBSON. Certainly.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. I have no doubt the gentleman from Alabama is correct, but I would like to have it explained, so that I could understand what the difficulty is at Olongapo. To explain my question, I mean this about the defenses of Olongapo: What sort of a situation is it in which a fleet can not defend itself; what sort of approaches, surroundings, are there that may not be so fortified as to make an approach of a hostile army itself dangerous?

Mr. HOBSON. I shall be very glad to answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. I would like to know. I have never understood what they mean by saying that we could not defend Olongapo.

Mr. HOBSON. It is a very interesting question, and one that has been thoroughly worked out. The approaches to Subic Bay are peculiar, and they are such that siege artillery could be located beyond the reach of the guns of ships in the harbor and drop a plunging fire on those ships without being exposed to fire from the ships, and the topography about Subic Bay is such that to properly protect against such a siege we would have to locate lines far back beyond the hills, and those lines would have to extend so far that it would require an enormous force. And, furthermore, it has been accepted as conclusive that this nation can not afford to allow the city of Manila to be captured by an enemy except in the last resort. It is a question of a joint defense of a naval station we may have and the city of Manila.

The line of defense from the city of Manila, and including Cavite, is comparatively short. I do not believe that I am divulging matters that I should not divulge when I say that the Army estimates that while it could not make any showing of resistance in trying to protect Subic Bay and Manila Bay with the present strength of our forces, it estimates that it could on the shorter line of defense for Manila city and Cavite hold out for ninety days against an army of invasion. And that is the reason why this matter has been suspended for the present.

Now, I beg to submit that the chairman of the Naval Committee is absolutely correct in the position he has taken. This American nation does not propose to become a military nation. With that leverage against us it would require a force of occupation of fully 200,000 to hold the Philippine Islands, and then they would be but partially secure against an Asiatic enemy with a great army in control of the sea.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HOBSON. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. I understood the gentleman to say a moment ago that it was very much easier to protect the city of Manila and Cavite from unfriendly attack than it would be to protect Olongapo. Now, what I want to get at is this, so that I can understand what the situation is: If that be true, why is it advisable to locate the naval base at Olongapo in preference to Cavite?

Mr. HOBSON. Because a naval base can not now and never can, until the judgment day, be located at Cavite. Now, allow me, as I say, to point out——

Mr. DOUGLAS. Why not?

Mr. HOBSON. Because the physical obstacles can not be surmounted, with even a stupendous cost, by the work of man.

Mr. MADDEN. Now, what are these obstacles, please?

Mr. HOBSON. It is because, primarily, the water is open, and it would require tremendous works to give it protection from the seas that sweep across during the typhoons.

Mr. MADDEN. The width of the entrance to the harbor of Manila Bay is the difficulty, is it?

Mr. HOBSON. It is the spread of the bay—the width of the bay.

Mr. SHERLEY. Does the gentleman mean to say that this opinion of his——

Mr. HOBSON. These are not all of the obstacles. I have simply begun to enumerate them.

Mr. MADDEN. We simply want to know now, if we find so much difficulty in protecting a naval base at Olongapo——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] may be given five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] may proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MADDEN. Now, if it would be impossible to get a sufficiently large army to protect a naval base at Olongapo, and then we have the difficulties surrounding the location of a naval base at Cavite, why would it not be wise to continue to develop the naval base at Olongapo?

Mr. HOBSON. It would be wise, though expensive development should wait until we can be sure of the permanent control of the sea.

Mr. MADDEN. And does not the gentleman believe it wise to establish a permanent naval base there?

Mr. HOBSON. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Would not the strategic situation demand the location of the naval base?

Mr. HOBSON. Unquestionably.

Mr. SHERLEY. Now, if the gentleman will allow me a question?

Mr. HOBSON. Certainly.

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman has stated his opinion that it is impossible to establish a naval base at Cavite. The gentleman will also say, I have no doubt, to the committee, that that was not the conclusion of the Army and Navy board that last looked into the matter?

Mr. HOBSON. I will not say anything of the kind.

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, the gentleman is aware of the report they made.

Mr. HOBSON. Now, the gentleman has asked his question; he will have to define what he calls a naval base. I know the gentleman does not wish to ask a question except to bring out the truth. I wish to ask him if he thinks the joint Army and naval board has settled the question as to an adequate first-class naval base; and if they in this decision and through it did not simply contemplate a temporary transfer of the dry dock for the case of attack?

Mr. SHERLEY. The gentleman has asked the question, and I will answer it. I believe that the board was not doing a useless thing; and if I understand the English language at all, I do understand that the report made on January 1, 1908, and signed by Admiral Dewey as the presiding officer, was distinctly in favor of Cavite as a permanent naval base for the Philippine Islands.

Mr. HOBSON. The reason why he used the word "base" there is simply that it is popular. Cavite has been, and is, and will remain a third-class naval station, and ought to be so maintained.

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, of course, the gentleman will understand that I do not feel at liberty to interpret the language used by this board in any other than its usual sense.

Mr. HOBSON. I wish to tell you what Admiral Dewey's position is. Admiral Dewey told me this morning over the telephone, "It is Subic Bay now and forever if we are going to have a base there." [Loud applause].

Mr. SHERLEY. All I can say in response to the gentleman is, and I do not desire to criticise the distinguished Admiral, it would have been a little more valuable to the Congress of the United States if he had made his final finding to the Congress of the United States instead of making it to a Member by telephone. [Applause.]

Mr. HOBSON. And if Admiral Dewey or the joint board had told this committee or this Congress that this whole question was one of providing against sudden attack by 150,000 men that might land at Lingayen, then you would have criticised Admiral Dewey, the board, the President, the Navy Department, and every other man who has studied the question, for bringing up a "war scare." [Renewed applause.]

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. HOBSON. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What is the width of the entrance to Manila Bay?

Mr. HOBSON. There are two main entrances.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That is correct. What is the width of each of the entrances? Eight or ten miles, is it not?

Mr. HOBSON. Fully, on either side.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. On either side of Corregidor Island. What is the length of Manila Bay—about 30 miles?

Mr. HOBSON. Fully.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What is the width of Manila Bay?

Mr. HOBSON. It varies; it runs as high as nearly 30 miles.
Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Practically 30 miles in diameter.
Mr. HOBSON. Roughly.
Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That affords great opportunity for a tremendous storm?
Mr. HOBSON. It is open sea.
Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It is open sea. What depth of water should we have in order to use this dry dock?
Mr. HOBSON. It ought not to be less than 60 feet.
Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. What depth of water is there now?
Mr. HOBSON. Within a mile of Manila proper it would be about 8 or 9 feet; within a mile of Cavite station, about 8½ to 9 feet at low tide.
Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Eight and a half to 9 feet.
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.
Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Alabama may have five minutes more.
The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.
Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman is a recognized expert, and we want the facts on which to base our judgment. I have myself seen the conditions over there, and therefore I ask these questions. Now, do I understand the gentleman to say that a mile and a half from the shore at Cavite the water is 9, 10, or 12 feet deep?
Mr. HOBSON. At low tide; yes.
Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is it not desirable to have a dry dock nearer the shore than a mile or a mile and a half?
Mr. HOBSON. Most certainly. Even as near as it is to the shore in Subic Bay, and as wonderfully sheltered as it is in Subic Bay, that floating dry dock has had to be sunk twice in order to protect it from the typhoons.
Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. There would have to be, then, a mile or a mile and a half of dredging, beginning with 8 or 8½ or 9 feet, to secure from 50 to 60 feet of water before we could take that million-dollar dry dock from where it has been already moored, where it is practicable for use, and tow it to Cavite?
Mr. HOBSON. Yes.
Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. And it would cost $5,000,000 and over to dig the channel, before we did anything else?
Mr. HOBSON. At least that.
Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Then, there are the immense expensive works to be constructed for the purpose of protecting this plant from the sea and the storm?
Mr. HOBSON. Yes.
Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Now, what is the diameter of the entrance to Subic Bay?
Mr. HOBSON. I should say, roughly, that the channel is about half a mile wide.
Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. We can easily defend that with guns at the harbor entrance, so that all the ships of the world can not enter if we want to keep them out?
Mr. HOBSON. Unquestionably.
Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The shores about Subic Bay are high, are they not?
Mr. HOBSON. Yes.
Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. How high do those hills run?
Mr. HOBSON. I should estimate them at about three or four hundred feet.
Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Three or four hundred feet. So that our battle ships in Subic Bay are perfectly safe from storms, are they not?
Mr. HOBSON. As safe as they can be in the typhoon region.
Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Safer than they are at Cavite?
Mr. HOBSON. Infinitely more safe.
Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. And we have 50 or 60 feet of water in Subic Bay?
Mr. HOBSON. Right at the dock.
Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Which makes a suitable place for this valuable piece of property—the dry dock?
Mr. HOBSON. Yes.
Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. And it is the only place where we can locate the dry dock now?
Mr. HOBSON. It is the only practicable place in the Philippine Islands at this time.
Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That is all.
Mr. TAWNEY. Now let the cross-examination proceed. [Laughter.]
Mr. HOBSON. Now, I wish to point out that the Hawaiian Islands are in precisely the same condition as the Philippine Islands, except that they are worse. People put the wrong construction on my words when they interpret any symptom or suggestion of war as I state the facts. A foreign nation has twelve to one the strength of population that we have in the Hawaiian Islands. We have wisely provided for the beginning of a great naval base at Pearl Harbor. It ought to be realized now, not only that the Philippine Islands, but the Hawaiian Islands will be lost to this nation if we do not maintain, as the chairman of this committee has pointed out, control of the sea. If we do not maintain control of the sea, we are but preparing the bases for the enemy. And mark, the temporary control of the sea is not adequate. With our fleet in the Atlantic Ocean a force of 100,000 men could land in the Philippine Islands and take those islands, and an additional force of 50,000 men, joined by 50,000 more in the Hawaiian Islands, could take those islands. Adequate munitions and supplies could be landed with this expedition, and those islands would then be lost practically forever.
Mr. LONGWORTH. Will the gentleman yield for a question?
Mr. HOBSON. Yes.
Mr. LONGWORTH. Does the gentleman believe we should have as large and elaborate a naval station at Subic Bay as we propose to have at Pearl Harbor?
Mr. HOBSON. No; I do not. I regard Pearl Harbor as the coming greatest naval station in all the world, and that the defense of America's interests in the whole Pacific Ocean will be centered at Pearl Harbor. [Applause.] But the distance is so great across to the Philippines, even from Pearl Harbor, that you could not give it adequate protection. We will need at least what could be technically called a second-class efficient station at Subic Bay in addition to the naval station at Pearl Harbor.
Mr. LONGWORTH. The gentleman's idea is that we would want a first-class naval station at Pearl Harbor, a second-class one at Subic Bay, and a third-class station at Cavite?
Mr. HOBSON. Yes. Now, this temporary control, or loss of control, may result disastrously for our country for this reason, that the enemy, after landing on the islands and taking possession, could live on the islands——
The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.
Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more, as my time has been taken up with interruptions.
The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks for five minutes. Is there objection?
There was no objection.
Mr. HOBSON. If a foreign army is landed on the Philippine Islands with adequate munitions of war, or the Hawaiian Islands, the fleet that convoyed them—or perhaps a fleet would not be necessary—the fleet of the enemy could repair to its own protected harbors and then issue a challenge to the United States to do what it may. It is a woeful fact that this nation has no merchant marine. We could not get the transports to carry the soldiers, and it is also a fact that we have not the soldiers if we had the transports.
Therefore public opinion in America would probably demand that our fleet after it reached the Pacific should go forth and try to retake the Hawaiian or the Philippine Islands. That would be precisely what the enemy would desire. The fleet would go out there; there would not only be no coaling station, there would be no docks, there would be hostile conditions, mines, torpedoes, submarines, and if we were enabled finally to seize some distant harbor and make a coaling station, we could not carry on any considerable repairs. When the ships' bottoms became foul they would remain foul. When the machinery got out of order it could not be repaired. When the great ships of the enemy, twenty-odd thousand tons, with three knots greater speed than our best ships, would sally forth and wound or injure ship by ship, they could escape without corresponding injury to themselves, and there could be no repairs to these wounded ships. If a desperate commander decided to force the issue and throw his fleet against the enemy's ships in the harbor, he would have no place for a temporary base.
We seized Guantanamo when we seized Santiago, but we seized it because the enemy was not occupying that region in force. Here we would find an enemy with a million trained men occupying the territory. We could not secure a single harbor from which to operate. It would require, therefore, an immediate attempt to force the channels—channels defended by mines, channels defended by automobile torpedoes, channels defended by submarines, channels defended by perhaps the strongest fortifications in the world. It would simply mean that our fleet would be disintegrated and annihilated, and then the enemy would have permanent control of the Pacific Ocean.
The consequence of this can not be overestimated. I am only stating facts, and I am not holding up any war scare when I say that 200,000 men could be placed aboard ship from the great military nation of Asia inside of a few days, and it would not take long for the expedition to be landed on the Hawaiian Islands; those transports could return and get another 200,000, and soon there would be 500,000 men on the Hawaiian Islands.

There are four spots on the Pacific coast where a force of 75,000 men could be landed without any substantial resistance if we lose even temporary control of the Pacific Ocean. With only temporary control of the sea, an expedition could come and raid Los Angeles, San Francisco, probably Portland, and certainly the cities that cluster about Puget Sound, and escape without serious resistance from us. If we lose permanent control of the sea in that ocean, my countrymen, our country would be open to permanent invasion.

You may know, or you may not, that there are available only 20,000 regulars in the whole United States, and only 50,000 trained militia, that are scattered all over the nation. A foreign nation has more than 80,000 trained soldiers of her own on our territory, and from Hawaii, as a base, could throw 500,000 trained men on our shores before we could assemble 100,000 trained men to resist them. With the open ocean, the communication from Asia via Hawaii would have great advantage over the communication from our centers of population, and in occupancy of the slope up to the Coast Range and Cascade Mountains and the myriads of Asia to draw upon, it would be years before America could get into position to begin the terrible task of dislodging the invaders. I know we would resolve to complete the task, but the cost in men, money, and future pensions would stagger the imagination of man.

Thus, for the safety of Hawaii, the safety of the Philippines, and the safety of the Pacific slope, we must now provide not only for the temporary, but also for the permanent control of the sea in the Pacific.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, the proposition that is before this committee does not involve the question of the defense of our Pacific coast nor the Hawaiian Islands. The question before the committee arises upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER], which does not propose to interfere with the maintenance of a temporary naval base at Olongapo, in Subic Bay.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will remind the gentleman from Minnesota that the gentleman from Indiana has no amendment pending.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. It is the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. JONES].

Mr. TAWNEY. I understood the gentleman from Virginia had withdrawn his amendment and the gentleman from Indiana had offered his.

Mr. JONES of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that the gentleman from Indiana proposes to limit the expenditure of this money to a temporary purpose; and my amendment was to strike out the whole amount, I withdraw my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota yield the floor to the gentleman from Virginia for that purpose?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CRUMPACKER rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAWNEY. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert at the end of the paragraph:
"Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used for the establishment of a permanent naval base at Olongapo."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, the proposition then that we are now considering and will be called upon to vote on is whether or not we will declare that no part of this appropriation shall be expended toward the establishment of a permanent naval base at Olongapo. This matter has been a matter of discussion in this House almost ever since we took possession of the Philippine Islands. We have had reports from the Navy in favor of the establishment of a permanent naval base at this point. We have had reports from the Army that this point could not be fortified so as to protect the base—not protect the fleet when in the bay, but to protect the base itself; and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] very eloquently stated what every Army officer and every naval officer now concedes, and that is the absolute impossibility of protecting a naval base at Olongapo from assault from the land. The gentleman explained how easy it would be for an enemy even behind the hills to drop its shell over into the bay and absolutely destroy a vessel or our naval base. Now, we are asked to express by this amendment our opinion as to whether or not Olongapo should be selected for the establishment of a permanent naval base. The amendment of the gentleman from Indiana will not interfere with the expenditure of this $100,000 for such purposes as are necessary in connection with the maintenance of the temporary base we now have. On the question of whether or not we should or should not declare in favor of a permanent naval base at this point, and in order to settle this question, the President of the United States appointed a joint board consisting of Army and Navy officers. This board was not appointed by the Navy Department or by the War Department, but it was appointed by the President of the United States, selecting the most competent men and officers in both Departments. This board has made its report, in which it says:

The joint board at its meeting of this date and at various meetings previously held took up the consideration of the question of the suitability of Subic Bay for a naval base, having regard to its capability for defense, by the United States forces which will be available, against attack from both the sea and land sides; and further, as to whether the naval base, with all its appurtenances, should not be located behind the fortifications of Manila Bay.

These are the two propositions that were considered by this board—the question of establishing a naval base; as to whether or not it could be defended and protected against attack both from the sea and from the land. Those were the questions that this board considered and this is the report which they have made.

Mr. HOBSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes.

Mr. HOBSON. Does the gentleman consider that a favorable vote on the pending amendment would mean that this Congress contemplates an attack upon Subic Bay from the rear?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not think so. A vote in favor of the amendment, if I understood the gentleman's question, would simply mean that we were not in favor of establishing a permanent base at Subic Bay. A vote against the amendment would by implication be a vote in favor of the establishment of a permanent naval base at this point.

Mr. BATES rose.

Mr. TAWNEY. Just a moment. I want to conclude this report, and then I will yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

These questions were brought before the board by an order of the President, dated October 26, 1907.

After mature consideration of all features involved, the joint board unanimously adopted the following resolutions:

"I. That the proper defense of the Philippine Islands includes the fortification of the entrances of both Manila and Subic bays, such fortification being essential both to protect the armed forces of the United States and to prevent occupation by an enemy.

"II. That in order to sustain any policy of the United States in the Orient, a suitable naval base in the Philippines is essential—"

A fact that every Member of Congress has long since recognized.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask that I may proceed for five minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TAWNEY (reading):

"And that, in the selection of such a base, it is necessary to consider the adaptability of the site for purposes connected with the shelter, supply, and repair of a fleet and its capability of defense against attacks both from land and sea for such a period as may be necessary for the preparation and transfer of the battle fleet to Philippine waters from the most distant station at which it may be found at the outbreak of hostilities, probably the Atlantic coast of the United States.

"III. That, as to the first named of these considerations, Subic Bay is the most suitable port in the Philippines; as to the second, the Army has determined that the conditions surrounding Subic Bay are such that no land fortifications of any kind can be erected covering the bay which will enable the Army to hold it, with any such land force as Congress is at all liable to authorize for permanent maintenance in the Philippine Islands, against a serious land attack.

"IV. That the alternative is to locate the naval base in Manila Bay.

"V. That, in the event of threatened hostilities involving the Philippine Islands before the establishment of a naval base in Manila Bay, all the military resources of the United States available in those islands should be devoted to the protection of the temporary naval base, wherever it may be."

Now, Mr. Chairman, this proposition is in line with the recommendations made by the board appointed by the President, a board that specifically considered these very questions that were submitted to it by the President of the United States, and upon that theory and the recommendations of this board and upon the theory that this was to be our policy, the Committee on Appropriations at this session of Congress carried in the fortifications appropriation bill an appropriation for the proper fortification and protection to the entrance to Manila Bay. That plan, when complete, contemplates two islands, or one artificial island in addition to the island now there. This all comes in one general plan for the fortification of Manila Bay in order that the Army and the Navy together may be able to hold out against either a land or a sea attack long enough to enable our Government to send such relief as is necessary for the purpose. I now yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HOBSON. Does the gentleman interpret the report of the joint board to mean that that board decides unanimously that Subic Bay ought to be permanently abandoned?

Mr. TAWNEY. I do not. I do not know that it means that Subic Bay is to be abandoned, but I will say to the gentleman from Alabama that the officers who appeared before the Committee on Appropriations, or the Subcommittee on Fortifications, did state most positively that Subic Bay was to be abandoned as a permanent naval base. There was nothing said about its maintenance or maintaining it as a temporary naval base. I now yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BATES].

Mr. FOSS. Ask him whether that was the testimony of naval or Army officers.

Mr. HOBSON. Will you state who those were who gave statements that way and to the contrary?

Mr. TAWNEY. I refer the gentleman to the hearings on the fortifications bill. General Crozier was one and General Mackenzie was the other.

Mr. BATES. I desire to ask the gentleman from Minnesota, because I honor his opinion, concerning this amendment which was offered and to which substitute he was going to address himself——

Mr. TAWNEY. I was trying to do so.

Mr. BATES. Does the gentleman think it would be wise in passing an appropriation bill to inject into it any words that could be construed into a declaration that we were not to permanently retain control of the Philippine Islands? Is not that a declaration that has no place in an appropriation bill?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, for whose opinion I have a very high respect, that there is nothing contained in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana that even winks at the possibility of our abandoning the Philippine Islands. There is nothing of that kind involved or recommended or that can be held by construction to be involved in the report of this joint board.

Mr. BATES. Then may I ask further, Mr. Chairman, why is not the language of the section as submitted by the committee utterly respectable and sufficient? It does not state in this section that this is to be a permanent station. It merely states it is toward the improvement and development of a naval station at Olongapo, Philippine Islands. Why, therefore, should we inject into it a declaration which can be construed into a declaration of abandonment later on?

Mr. TAWNEY. If the committee had included in that paragraph the word "temporary," and made it read "for maintenance and development" there, I admit, then, that the gentleman's inquiry would be pertinent.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAWNEY. In just a moment. The language of the paragraph as it is presented to the committee here implies that this money is to be expended in the development and maintenance of a permanent naval base. Now, Mr. Chairman, in view of the recommendations of this joint board, in view of the plan that has been submitted at this session of Congress for the fortifications along the line recommended by this board, if we do not now declare whether or not we are going to favor Subic Bay as a permanent naval base, then we will have two naval bases as a necessary consequence hereafter, if the Army and Navy join in asking that these recommendations that they now make be respected and recognized and appropriated for by Congress. It is not my purpose to interfere in the least with the maintenance of our military or naval power in the Philippine Islands. All I want to prevent is the establishment of two permanent naval bases in the Philippine Islands as the result of the disagreement that has heretofore existed between these two arms of the service, or because of any disagreement that may result hereafter. That is the reason for my opposition, and I think that when the Members of the House vote on this proposition, if they understand they are not voting to interfere in the least with the maintenance of the temporary naval base there, but would merely declare, in line with the recommendations of this board, that we will not establish a permanent naval base there, we will be voting, then, in accordance with what, I believe, is for the best interests of the Government here and in the Philippine Islands.

Mr. BATES. I desire to ask the gentleman one question. Did the gentleman from Minnesota, in his fortification bill from the Appropriation Committee in the item for the fortification of this harbor, say that that was not to be permanent? Did he make the declaration to the Congress, to the country, and to the world, when he was providing for fortifications at this point—a proviso that they were not intended to be permanent, but might be taken away in a few weeks or a few months? Such a declaration, Mr. Chairman, was certainly not made in his own bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. The fortifications that are there now are to be permanent and they will be permanent.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TAWNEY. Just one minute more, Mr. Chairman. The officers who appeared before the committee did not make any estimates for further fortifications at Subic Bay, upon the ground that the plans for the establishment of a permanent base at Subic Bay had been abandoned.

Mr. DRISCOLL and Mr. PAYNE rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. DRISCOLL] is recognized.

Mr. DRISCOLL. If my colleague [Mr. PAYNE] wants to say a word, I will be glad to yield to him.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have a word now, as I have to go away, because this amendment was introduced in the committee here by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER] at my suggestion, and my thought, Mr. Chairman, was this: The objections to Subic Bay were stated to some of us who went to the islands three years ago by the officers of the Army, and it seemed to be the universal opinion among those officers that Olongapo was impracticable because of the impossibility of defending it from the rear, while the naval officers, most of them, thought it was the best place. Some of them did not; they agreed with the Army officers. But I thought that it was not best to have this matter go on in the way it has been going. My eloquent friend from Illinois [Mr. Foss], chairman of the committee, who always is able to make a great big argument out of a very small premise—and sometimes he uses a large one when he deals heavier and sledge-hammer blows—was contending a few moments ago that we had expended $2,750,000 for Subic Bay and Olongapo, and that therefore Congress had established a permanent naval station there.

That is hardly true, Mr. Chairman. If there is any element of truth in that proposition, I do not think it is best now, with the difference of feeling and opinion that there is among the Members of the House, to add even a straw's weight to that argument of my friend from Illinois [Mr. Foss] by an appropriation of $100,000, so that next year he can say: "We have expended $2,850,000, and the matter is settled." Rather, let this amendment go in. Let them use the $100,000 for the temporary use there, but not for the permanent use, and then let the Committee on Naval Affairs consider the subject and bring all the information there is before the House. Then let my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BATES] come in, as he did the other day, with a bill for Pearl Harbor, a bill that was so wise and so well fortified by the facts that were stated in his report that it went through the House by almost a unanimous vote, locating Pearl Harbor as a naval base in the Hawaiian Islands. When they have fairly considered this matter and focused their minds upon it—the great naval minds of this great committee of the House—let them bring in their bill in their frank, manly sort of way, and not try to sneak it in with a hundred thousand dollars here and a hundred thousand dollars there. Let the Congress understand just what they are doing and decide as to which is the proper place for this naval station. I shall be ready to listen to their arguments fully and fairly, and try to decide justly, as far as my vote is concerned. And, if I agree with them, I will vote for their bill, wherever they establish their naval station, and, if I do not, I shall just as cheerfully vote for an amendment to establish it somewhere else. Let the bill finally receive the approval of both Houses of Congress, so that Congress may understand, and the country may understand through the law, just what Congress proposes to do.

Then when we make the appropriation for this place, it will be understood when it is put in the law whether it is a temporary or a permanent naval base we are building up.

Mr. BATES. I would like to ask the gentleman from New York whether he thinks that this money would be expended in a different way by adding the statement that the station is not to be permanent, and why should you couple that with the appropriation?

Mr. PAYNE. For the same argument made by the chairman of your committee, that we have expended $2,750,000, and "Congress itself had settled this question, and Olongapo was the place, and there was no other place in the Philippines for this naval station." He simply adds a straw to that line of argument, which I do not believe in, but which might catch some Members.

Mr. BATES. It certainly did not hurt the gentleman from New York or any Member of the House.

Mr. PAYNE. It certainly did not hurt me.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio this morning said that the more he read and the more he heard about Olongapo and Subic Bay and Cavite and Manila the more confused he became in this matter. Mr. Chairman, I am one of those not confused with reference to it. I have clear and definite views on the general proposition, upon which this particular question or amendment bears. I am one of that large and rapidly growing class of Americans who regret exceedingly that we got into the Philippine entanglement [applause] and who hope to live to see the day when we can honorably get out. [Renewed applause.] I do not mean to say that we should sell or trade them away. Whatever may be our legal right, we have no moral right to sell 8,000,000 souls, even with their lands, homes, and firesides, but we have a moral right to educate them and we have a right to elevate them politically, physically, morally and industrially, and every other way so that they can maintain a republic of their own over there. [Applause.] When that time comes, and I hope it will come within the lives of men here present, then we will get an agreement on the part of all the powerful nations to keep their hands off the islands and allow them to work out their own destiny and establish a republic in the Orient after the model of the great Republic of the West.

Now, sir, when that time comes we will need a great natural harbor over there, either an island or a part of an island, on which we can construct our own improvements. Subic Bay is by all means best fitted for that purpose. We can not retain Cavite if we surrender the rest of the islands, because Cavite is in the great Bay of Manila. It is inside the same fortifications as Manila. Guns from Cavite could be trained on the city of Manila. We can not retain Manila without retaining Luzon, because Manila is the heart of Luzon. We can not retain Luzon without retaining the rest of the islands, because Luzon is the most populous and the most advanced in all respects and really the heart of the whole archipelago. Therefore when we surrender American occupation, we must withdraw from Manila and Cavite. In that event we can retain Subic Bay as a permanent naval, coaling, and commercial station, as a sort of foothold there which we may use also as a trading basis. No nation would object to that or accuse us of bad faith. We would be justified in doing it, and the Filipinos would doubtless be willing to make that concession. Now, what do you propose to do? If you pass this amendment you practically abandon Subic Bay, and when you abandon Subic Bay, it will indicate to the world that we are going to fortify Cavite as a permanent naval basis, and that will indicate, further, that we are going to hold possession of the Philippines permanently. I do not believe the American people will stand for that. Sentiment is growing the other way all the time. The best part of our citizenship is in favor of giving these people an opportunity to work out their own destiny after we set them up. [Applause.] Therefore, I am in favor of giving this $100,000 to keep up the improvements we have there, so the impression will not go out that we are to abandon the policy practically adopted by this country with reference to the Philippines. [Renewed applause.]

Mr. FOSS. I move to close all debate on the paragraph and all amendments in ten minutes.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I shall not undertake to pit my technical knowledge against that of the gentleman from Alabama in regard to naval matters; but I may, with becoming modesty at least, express an opinion as to the use of the English language. The gentleman took exception to the interpretation placed upon the report made by the joint committee of Army and naval officers. That report clearly establishes certain facts, and it does not require technical knowledge to determine them. The first matter of fact that it establishes is that we need, not bases, but a naval base in the Philippine Islands.

The report says that in order to sustain any policy of the United States in the Orient a suitable naval base in the Philippines is essential. It does not say "suitable naval bases."

Now, what else did it determine? It having started with this premise of a single naval base, determined what particular base was the one best suited to the needs of America. The identical question was whether it should be Subic Bay or Cavite; and in order to show that I am right, again I will read some more plain English:

JOINT BOARD,
Washington, January 31, 1908.

SIR: The joint board at its meeting of this date and at various meetings previously held took up the consideration of the question of the suitability of Subic Bay for a naval base, having regard to its capability for defense, by the United States forces which will be available, against attack from both the sea and land sides; and further, as to whether the naval base, with all its appurtenances, should not be located behind the fortifications of Manila Bay.

That was a square issue, made between the advocates of the two places. Now, what did they decide? And it is not left in doubt. They decided:

IV. That the alternative is to locate the naval base in Manila Bay.

The view both of the Army and the Navy in regard to the suitableness of it, both as a naval base and in regard to its capability for defense, was that as an alternative the naval base should be located in Manila Bay, and they meant a final alternative, for the fifth paragraph proves that, and not by any strange construction of English, for it says:

V. That in the event of threatened hostilities involving the Philippine Islands before the establishment of a naval base in Manila Bay, all the military resources of the United States available in those islands should be devoted to the protection of the temporary naval base, wherever it may be.

Now, what is the answer that is made to that? It is twofold. First, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] tells you that the word "base" does not mean naval station in the sense in which the House has been considering it. If it does not, it at least means all that both the Army and the Navy had in contemplation for the Philippine Islands, because they use the word "base" in determining that they will have but one naval base, without regard to the particular point. The word base means the same in one part of the report that it does in the other.

Now, the other argument is that notwithstanding this official report bearing the signature of Admiral Dewey as the senior officer of the joint commission, some of the favored members of the Committee on Naval Affairs have had private letters or telephone communications to the effect that Admiral Dewey was not convinced, but simply overwhelmed by the other members. He signed the unanimous report, and I repeat again, with all proper respect to the distinguished Admiral, that it would have been infinitely better for Congress and infinitely better for the country if he had seen fit to make a minority report against the findings of that board rather than sign a unanimous report in favor of Cavite and then send to the Naval Affairs Committee his personal opinion that he was in favor of Olongapo as against Cavite; and I ask this Committee of the Whole to follow the last recommendation of a board appointed by the President to determine this special question, and it did determine this question in English so plain that he who runs may read. [Applause.]

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman has alluded to the joint board of the Army and the Navy, but he can not point to one single statement anywhere in writing that the President of the United States has approved of the report of the joint board of the Army and the Navy. We have had several joint boards, and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] suggested that here was a joint board appointed by the President. Will the gentleman from Minnesota name any joint board in the last ten years that has not been appointed by the President? We have had several reports from joint boards heretofore upon this proposition, and they have been unanimously in favor of Subic Bay, but this year this is a joint board that makes a report against it, because they say the Army can not defend Subic Bay. There was no trouble about this question of the location at Subic Bay until this year. In 1904 we established this naval station, and the matter was before the Congress. The Secretary appeared with estimates before our committee, and this whole subject was explained in our report, discussed here on the floor, and year after year we have been making appropriations, only small ones it is true, about $100,000 each year, toward this naval station. So there is no question as to the establishment of it, but the Army has come in this last year and put its nose into the Navy's business, and says we are going to locate a naval station at Cavite where you can not get a battle ship within two miles. I have been in the Philippine Islands, and have seen Army stations here and there, but no naval officer has ever, and the Navy Department has never, attempted to locate any Army station. The Army is attempting to say where the naval stations shall be established against the unanimous opinion of the leading naval authorities, against the opinion of four Secretaries of the Navy that we have had during the last four years. I would like to know whether we are going to follow the Army on naval matters, or whether we are going to follow the Navy on naval matters. Are we going to put this base where a few Army officers say it ought to be when appearing before the Committee on Appropriations in discussing fortifications, or are we going to follow Admiral Dewey and other great authorities of our Navy, and establish it where it ought to be?

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the gentleman from Illinois kindly tell us at what period we should follow Admiral Dewey?

Mr. FOSS. Admiral Dewey was president of the joint board and signed the report as president, but the report of the board has never been approved, and I say to the committee that I hope it will stand by the recommendations of the Committee on Naval Affairs. I now yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER].

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, we seem to have some difficulty in understanding Admiral Dewey. He says in this report that if we desire to have a naval station defended from the land side we ought to go to Manila Bay; that if we desire to have any water upon which to float the ships we should make the naval base at Subic Bay.

I have had twelve years' experience, and I have grown weary of seeing the attempt of the Department to sail ships across an ordinary fog that settles in the meadow in the morning. [Laughter.] I am in favor of Subic Bay for a naval station because of its fitness. All of the naval authorities are in favor of Subic Bay, and, above all, the President of the United States induced Congress to locate the station at Subic Bay.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, a lawyer once proved that the Bible said "There is no God." But the true reading of the Bible is "The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God." I believe that the able, legal ability of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] could discover anything in any statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. HOBSON. Let us vote down the amendment and stand by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CRUMPACKER].

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. CRUMPACKER] there were—ayes 21, noes 70.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 6 strike out the words "improvement and development" and insert the word "maintenance," and between the words "the" and "naval" and insert the word "existing."

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to consume any time in discussing the amendment, and I ask for a vote.

Mr. FOSS. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

The question was taken, and the amendment was lost.

Mr. DRISCOLL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I shall have to object.

The Clerk read as follows:

Plans and specifications for public works: Navy Department: Plans and estimates required by section 3663, Revised Statutes, and plans and specifications for public works, $30,000.

Mr. SMITH of California. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment:

On page 36, after line 25, insert:

"Provided, That the President is hereby authorized to appoint a commission consisting of two naval and two Army officers and one civilian to examine the shores of San Diego Bay and report to the President the point best suited for the location of a dry dock, with an estimate of the probable cost thereof. For the expenses of said commission the sum of $25,000."

Mr. FOSS. To that, Mr. Chairman, I will reserve a point of order.

Mr. SMITH of California. Mr. Chairman, we have had a good deal of war talk lately, and it all points toward the Pacific, and I suppose everyone feels that if there is any danger of a naval war, it is on the Pacific. For myself, I do not feel so much alarmed that I do not sleep well at night [laughter], because the time for a war between this country and the Orient has not yet arrived, in my opinion, and will not arrive until at some future time when, in revising the tariff, we discriminate against manufacturers of the oriental countries. Then we may get a war. It will not come out of the subject of immigration, in my opinion.

If we are going to have a Navy and the activities are going to be on the Pacific Ocean, it is just as important to have yards and docks as it is to have vessels. A navy is of small consequence unless the vessels can be cared for and repaired. It would not be going beyond the truth to say that it would be utterly impossible to dock a battle ship on the Pacific Ocean at the present time in a Government yard. That condition of things ought not to continue, and while we are making some progress at Puget Sound and a beginning is being made at Pearl Harbor, we have had for the last few days here some very instructive and eloquent statements to the effect that a naval base on an island is not the safest to count upon under all emergencies.

It seems to me that we ought to begin at least to look into the wisdom of establishing greater facilities on the shores of the continent. I hope the gentleman will not insist on the point of order, but that there may be a vote upon this amendment, which merely looks to an investigation and a report as to whether there is suitable water and other suitable advantages for a naval station at the southern extremity of our Pacific coast lines. It would take many years, of course, to bring about the improvements, but by the time the Isthmus of Panama is penetrated by the canal there will be still greater need for naval equipment in the southern waters of the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman insist on the point of order?

Mr. FOSS. I insist on the point of order.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. YOUNG having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. CROCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution and bill of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. R. 78. Joint resolution establishing the boundary line between the States of Colorado and Oklahoma and the Territory of New Mexico; and

S. 6163. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to sell and dispose of the surplus unallotted agricultural lands of the Spokane Indian Reservation, Wash., and to place the timber lands of said reservation in a national forest.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 24) to increase the efficiency of the personnel of the Revenue-Cutter Service.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Floating derricks: One 100-ton floating derrick (to cost $250,000), $100,000.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order against that, and will ask the chairman of the committee to explain it. The cost of this floating derrick as proposed in this amendment is enormous, very much more in my judgment than such a floating derrick should cost. A similar piece of machinery, it seems to me, could be produced for the amount of money that is appropriated. I happen to be in the line of business where machinery of this kind is used, and I have had the experience of having this kind of machinery built. I happen to own some of this kind of machinery, and my honest judgment is that this limit of cost for this particular machine is two and a half times what it ought to be. I just want to ask the chairman of the committee whether he has made sufficient investigation of the need of this and the necessity of this amount of money being expended to warrant him in making the recommendation.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, the Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, Admiral Holliday, appeared before the committee and recommended this item, which is for a 100-ton floating derrick. He says they are the greatest machines in the world.

Mr. MADDEN. They are.

Mr. FOSS. We do not know, as members of the committee, whether this is more than he ought to have or not, but we took his judgment, of course, as the Chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks. This was the estimate which he sent to us, and the committee does not feel like making any less estimate. He asked for four derricks, and we gave him only one.

Mr. BUTLER. I feel sure that he will buy it for less money if he can.

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. The limit of cost is excessive. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. FOSS. He does not have to spend the full limit of cost.

Mr. MADDEN. I realize the importance of having possession of such machinery as this. It is the most valuable machinery that can be used in the movement of heavy commodities from place to place where they have water front, but I was in hopes that the committee might see the justice of recommending only such a sum of money for the construction of this machinery as the machine ought to cost. I still believe that $100,000 is all that this machine should cost, and the appropriaion of $250,000 is far in excess of what should be appropriated. I withdraw the point of order, and I will offer an amendment fixing the limit of cost at $100,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws his point of order and offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 37, line 5, strike out "two hundred and fifty" and insert "one hundred."

Mr. FOSS. I call for a vote and hope that it will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The question was taken and the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For the erection of three fireproof buildings, to be used as magazines and filling house, and including necessary grading, walks, and landing stage, $7,000.

Mr. MADDEN. I reserve the point of order on this so as to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill what the necessity for all these magazines and filling houses, and so forth, is.

Mr. FOSS. Those were made upon the recommendation of the Chief of the Bureau, I will say. They used ammunition down there in the education of the cadets, for experimental purposes, and one thing and another, and it is to store that ammunition. It is a small amount.

Mr. MADDEN. I withdraw the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Naval hospital, Great Lakes: For the erection of naval hospital buildings, to cost not to exceed $250,000, $100,000.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I would like to inquire where this hospital is, and what it is.

Mr. FOSS. That is in connection with the naval training station.

Mr. BUTLER. It is part of the outfit there, for which Congress has already provided.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I withdraw the amendment.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. LANDIS having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. CROCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the following concurrent resolution:

House concurrent resolution 37.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in enrolling the bill H. R. 20310, relating to the liability of common carriers by railroads, to their employees in certain cases, the enrolling clerk be directed to correct said bill by inserting in section 3, after the word "railroad," in line 2, the words "under or by virtue of any of the provisions of this act," so that said section 3 will read as follows:

"SEC. 3. That in all actions hereafter brought against any such common carrier by railroad, under or by virtue of any of the provisions of this act, to recover damages for personal injuries to an employee, or where such injuries have resulted in his death, the fact that the employee may have been guilty of contributory negligence shall not bar a recovery, but the damages shall be diminished by the jury in proportion to the amount of negligence attributable to such employee: Provided, That no such employee who may be injured or killed shall be held to have been guilty of contributory negligence in any case where the violation by such common carrier of any statute enacted for the safety of employees contributed to the injury or death of such employee."

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, $6,547,903.75.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that the committee passed favorably upon allowing 3,000 additional men to be made immediately available, it will be necessary to increase this appropriation, and accordingly I move to strike out, in lines 15 and 16, all the words after "six million" and insert "$931,153.75," so that it will read, "in all, $6,931,153.75."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Page 47, amend lines 15 and 16 so as to read, "in all, $6,931,153.75."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

BUREAU OF CONSTRUCTION AND REPAIR.

Construction and repair of vessels: For preservation and completion of vessels on the stocks and in ordinary; purchase of materials and stores of all kinds; steam steerers, pneumatic steerers, steam capstans, steam windlasses, and all other auxiliaries; labor in navy-yards and on foreign stations; purchase of machinery and tools for use in shops; carrying on work of experimental model tank; designing naval vessels; construction and repair of yard craft, lighters, and barges; wear, tear, and repair of vessels afloat; general care, increase, and protection of the Navy in the line of construction and repair; incidental expenses for vessels and navy-yards, inspectors' offices, such as advertising, photographing, books, professional magazines, plans, stationery, and instruments for drafting room, $8,000,000: Provided, That no part of this sum shall be applied to the repair of any wooden ship when the estimated cost of such repairs, to be appraised by a competent board of naval officers, shall exceed 10 per cent of the estimated cost, appraised in like manner, of a new ship of the same size and like material: Provided further, That no part of this sum shall be applied to the repair of any other ship when the estimated cost of such repairs, to be appraised by a competent board of naval officers, shall exceed 20 per cent of the estimated cost, appraised in like manner, of a new ship of the same size and like material: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall deprive the Secretary of the Navy of the authority to order repairs of ships damaged in foreign waters or on the high seas, so far as may be necessary to bring them home; and the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to make expenditures for repairs and changes on vessels in excess of $200,000, or in excess of 20 per cent of the estimated cost, appraised in like manner, of a new ship of the same size and like material: Provided further, That such expenditures on any ship shall not exceed the amounts reported as necessary therefor under the various bureaus of the Navy Department, said reports having been transmitted to Congress in conformity with the provisions of the act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on the language contained in this paragraph, beginning line 22, page 53, to line 8, page 54, on the ground that it is new legislation.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman make the point of order or reserve it?

Mr. TAWNEY. I reserve the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman is familiar with the necessity for this provision. It will be recalled that on our appropriation bill of last year we provided—

That the Secretary of the Navy will hereafter report to Congress, at the commencement of each regular session, the number of vessels and their names upon which any repairs or changes are proposed which in any case shall amount to more than $200,000, the extent of such proposed repairs or changes, and the amounts estimated to be needed for the same in each vessel; and expenditures for such repairs or changes so limited shall be made only after appropriations in detail are provided for by Congress.

Now, in pursuance of that provision, which was enacted into law last year upon the appropriation bill, the Secretary of the Navy sends a letter, known as Document No. 657, giving the vessels and amount of repairs on each in accordance with that provision, and in order to make these necessary repairs it will be necessary for us to give him the authority which is contained in these lines to which the gentleman makes the point of order.

Mr. MADDEN. Did I understand the gentleman to say the Secretary of the Navy gives the names of the vessels?

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Why not specify the amount to be expended on each vessel?

Mr. FOSS. Well, that is quite a long——

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman in charge of the bill stated I was familiar with the provision, and I am familiar with the provision carried in the previous law. Until the first session of the last Congress there had never been any limitation whatever upon the amount the Secretary of the Navy could expend in the repairs of a battle ship, and in the last session of the Fifty-ninth Congress the Committee on Naval Affairs reported in favor of a 20 per cent limitation, and added the provision which the gentleman in charge of the bill has read, requiring the Secretary of the Navy, where the proposed repairs exceeded $200,000, to submit to Congress an estimate of the cost of the repairs on each ship which it was necessary to repair.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this legislation was to give to Congress control over the amount of money to be expended in making repairs, and it was also to give Congress the power to determine whether or not the repairs should be made and how much should be expended in making those repairs. Now, it is proposed by this provision to again restore to the Secretary of the Navy the absolute discretion he has heretofore exercised in the repair of any battle ship he may deem in need of repair, regardless of the cost of that repair. It is placing in the Secretary of the Navy a discretion in regard to public expenditure that no other officer of the Executive Departments of the Government possesses. In other words, if he simply reports to Congress the necessity for the reconstruction of a vessel he is authorized to go on and make the repair, regardless of the cost. Now, in the British navy the British Admiralty can only expend $50,000 in the repair of a vessel without express authority from Parliament.

It was my purpose in first proposing this amendment and in supporting the proposition requiring the report to be made to Congress—it was my purpose and hope that the Committee on Naval Affairs would take the trouble to investigate these reports and these estimates for repairs on particular ships and bring in specific appropriations for the repair of each vessel which the Secretary of the Navy recommended to be repaired, and not to accept his report as conclusive, and then come to the House with the recommendation that the Secretary be allowed to make any and all repairs which may have been approved by the board above $200,000, regardless of the amount we give him. It is for this reason, Mr. Chairman, that I make the point of order against the proposition.

Mr. PADGETT. Will the gentleman reserve it for a moment or two?

Mr. TAWNEY. I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I think the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, is too broad in his statement as to the action of the Committee on Naval Affairs and the provisions of this bill. On page 54 you will find the language:

Provided further, That such expenditures on any ship shall not exceed the amount reported as necessary therefor under the various bureaus of the Navy Department, said reports having been transmitted to Congress in conformity with the act——

Mr. TAWNEY. That is exactly why I do object to it, I will say to my distinguished friend, because it gives to the Department the discretion, first, of determining the amount to be expended in the making of the repairs, and authorizes the Department to make the repairs and report to nobody. The only thing the Department does now, or is required to do under this provision, is to report, first, what ships need repair, and the amounts. Now, you propose by this language to give the Department the power of going on and expending the money appropriated for repairs within the limits of the report of the Department, and not within the limits of the recommendations of Congress.

Mr. PADGETT. Now, if the gentleman pleases, I would like to know what function of Government would determine the amount to be expended upon any ship except the Navy Department?

Mr. TAWNEY. The Congress of the United States, I will say to the gentleman, with all due respect. It is the function of the Department to make recommendations, but it is the function of Congress to pass finally upon those recommendations, and determine, first, whether the repairs shall be made, and at what cost; and it was to take away from the Department the discretion which it has heretofore had and exercised of making any repair at any cost and report to nobody, that this provision was put in the last appropriation bill. And it can be carried out, if the gentleman's committee will consider the report that has been submitted, and then recommend appropriations for the specific repairs that are recommended by the Department.

Mr. PADGETT. The committee has done that very thing. The Department submitted detailed estimates to the Congress in conformity with the requirements of law. The matter was before the committee, was considered by the committee, and the committee has reported this authorization for the Department to make the repairs upon the specific ships named in the report, and not to exceed the amount specified in the report.

Mr. TAWNEY. Oh, the gentleman is entirely mistaken. This language will authorize the Secretary of the Navy to make any repairs on any vessel.

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir.

Mr. TAWNEY. Regardless of the cost, if it is above $200,000, and within the amount recommended by the board.

Mr. PADGETT. It does not.

Mr. TAWNEY. Provided that the board or the bureau have recommended such repairs.

Mr. PADGETT. It does not. It says: "Provided—" let me give the language.

Mr. TAWNEY. The language, I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee, is this:

And the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to make expenditures for repairs and changes on vessels—

Not any particular vessel—in excess of $200,000, or in excess of 20 per centum of the estimated cost, appraised in like manner, of a new ship of the same size and like material.

Provided further, That such expenditure on any ship—

Not on the ships that the Department has recommended to Congress should be repaired, but on any ship—shall not exceed the amounts reported as necessary therefor under the various bureaus of the Navy Department.

Mr. FOSS. Read on to the next line.

Mr. PADGETT. Let me ask the gentleman in plain English if "any ship" does not mean the ship reported to the Congress in pursuance of that law? Here is a report in which each ship is given, the amount required for the improvements in the several bureaus, specially, specifically stated and itemized, and the provision here is that the Secretary is authorized to improve any of the ships on which he has made the report and submitted the estimates to Congress, and he could not improve or spend one dollar on any other ship except the one that has been named in this report and in the bureaus mentioned in the report.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] has expired.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Tennessee many proceed for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] that this provision as framed will become permanent law. It is a permanent authorization to the Secretary of the Navy to make repairs on any ship where the cost of the repair exceeds $200,000 or 20 per cent of the cost of the ship, "provided that the expenditure shall not exceed the amounts reported as necessary therefor under the various bureaus of the Navy Department, said reports having been transmitted to Congress in conformity with the provisions of the act making appropriations for the naval service," and so forth. So that hereafter all that is necessary to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to expend any amount within the appropriation for repairs that the board may recommend is for that board to have transmitted its report to Congress. That means to future Congresses, it having transmitted its report to this, the first session of this Congress.

Now, I submit to the gentleman from Tennessee and the gentleman from Illinois, the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, that it was not the intention of Congress when this legislation was incorporated in the last naval appropriation bill to merely receive the report made by the Department as to the ships that ought to be repaired, and the amount necessary for the repairs in each case. That was not alone the purpose. It was intended to give Congress information as to what repairs were deemed necessary, what ships should be repaired, what the cost was to be, and then let Congress appropriate specifically for the repair of each vessel, according to its judgment as to whether the repairs should or should not be made. Now, what happened at the beginning of last Congress——

Mr. PADGETT. Now, may I ask the gentleman just there, Do you mean to insist that it shall be excluded from the naval appropriation bill and come in a separate bill?

Mr. TAWNEY. No, sir; I do not; but it should be carried just the same in this bill as any repairs are carried in other appropriation bills. The appropriation should be made specific. Now, let me give the gentleman a little information as to how this legislation arose. At the beginning of the last Congress a deficiency was submitted from the Naval Department for this Bureau of more than $2,000,000. Upon investigation it was found that that deficiency arose as a result of the Secretary of the Navy diverting appropriations for the reconstruction of vessels without authority from Congress; and to prevent that the first attempt was made to limit the expenditure to 10 per cent, but it failed; and in the next session your committee brought in here a limitation of 20 per cent, with an additional limitation requiring the Department, when the repairs necessary were above $200,000, to submit the repairs and the necessity for the repairs with an estimate to Congress, the same as any other estimate. It was the expectation when these estimates were submitted that the committee would report a provision specifically appropriating in detail the money to make the repairs, and in this way prevent the diversion of appropriations for the different bureaus.

Now you propose to turn over to the Department, or give to the Department, absolute discretion to spend any amount of money for repairs in this bill that the board may recommend and submit in its report to Congress as being necessary, without any further legislation. Now, I submit that that is neither good administration nor good legislation. It certainly does not afford Congress an opportunity to keep that hold upon public expenditures and the administration of public appropriations that we should always endeavor to maintain. I now reserve the point of order, and the gentleman may proceed.

Mr. PADGETT. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether I have any time remaining.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PADGETT. I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PADGETT. I think, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Minnesota has entirely misinterpreted and misconstrued the language as provided in this bill. This language, to which he reserves the point of order, is granting an authorization to the Secretary of the Navy to make improvements upon specific ships to the specific amount mentioned in his report made to the Congress in pursuance of the law set forth in the section. Without this authorization the Department can not repair a single one of these ships, and we would be left in the condition of having our ships needing repair and the Congress denying to the Secretary the power and the authority and the ability to discharge his duty. It is simply an authorization to repair these specific ships within the amount mentioned in his report. It is not a repeal of the existing law, nor is it intended to be a repeal of existing law. It is more in the nature of an authorization to do work, and limiting the appropriations in this bill to that purpose. So that it does not broaden the discretion of the Department.

It gives them no new power, except the power to carry into effect the recommendations which they have made with regard to these specific vessels, named in their report, of which they have submitted detailed estimates, and these repairs should be made.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PADGETT. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. Was there any way in which the committee could have suggested the total amount of the appropriations to be used for this purpose?

Mr. PADGETT. Oh, yes. We could have named each ship.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. Chairman, I ask that my colleague may have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. PADGETT. We could have named the San Francisco, the Baltimore, the Alabama, the Illinois, the Iowa, the Kearsarge, the Kentucky, the Adder, the Bennington, the Grampus, the Moccasin, the Pike, and the Paul Jones; and we could have said so much from the Bureau of Construction and Repair; we could have said so much from the Bureau of Equipment, and named the various bureaus, but all of that is mentioned and set out in detail in this report. We have referred to the report. We make it by reference a part of the provisions of this authorization.

Mr. MADDEN. But the gentleman will acknowledge that the report is not a part of the law?

Mr. PADGETT. It becomes a part of the law by reference and incorporation in this provision.

Mr. MADDEN. Would the gentleman not think it wise to give Congress the information upon which the committee bases its recommendation?

Mr. PADGETT. It is here in a public document.

Mr. MADDEN. What would be the objection to embodying it in the bill?

Mr. PADGETT. Simply because it would take three or four pages to set it out here. And let me ask the gentleman a question. We authorize the building of a battle ship, the hull of which is to cost not to exceed $6,000,000. Does the gentleman think we ought to set forth that the beams in that vessel should be of certain dimensions and that the nails and rivets should be of such quality and that we should go into the details in authorizing that construction?

Mr. MADDEN. I beg the gentleman's pardon. This is not a parallel case at all. This is a proposition similar to the construction of a ship. It seems to me that in giving the information as to the name of the ship and the amount of money it would cost to repair the ship, it is quite a different proposition from naming the character of the nails and the size of the timbers in the ship. It is simply a question whether the Navy Department or the Committee on Naval Affairs thinks it of sufficient importance to enumerate the particular things for which the money is to be expended.

Mr. PADGETT. Now, may I ask the gentleman just at that point if the committee is not just as specific in saying the ships mentioned in a given document as we would be to enumerate by name the ships mentioned in that document?

Mr. MADDEN. I do not understand that the document is any part of the law of the land.

Mr. PADGETT. But it is a public record. It is referred to by name.

Mr. MADDEN. But it is not any part of our legislation.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman will pardon me, you do not make that document a part of the bill by specific reference to it.

Mr. PADGETT. Oh, I beg your pardon. Listen:

Provided further, That such expenditures on such ships shall not exceed the amounts reported necessary therefor in the various bureaus of the Navy Department, said reports having been transmitted to Congress in conformity with the provisions of the act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908.

Mr. TAWNEY. Yes, but it does not state what reports have been submitted to Congress. It may have been submitted in the hearings before the Committee for aught that anybody here knows. There is no reference to any specific report on the repairs of vessels.

Mr. PADGETT. The gentleman is quibbling on words.

Mr. TAWNEY. No; he is not.

Mr. PADGETT. Let me call your attention to the fact that the act of Congress making appropriations imposed a duty upon the Secretary of the Navy that he should report to Congress the names of the ships and the amount necessary to make the repairs, in a specific case, where it exceeded $200,000, or where it was as much as 20 per cent. Now, in compliance with that specific provision, he makes a specific report with reference to that specific subject, and it is just as definite as if I were to say, "An item under naval construction on a certain page of the naval appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1909."

Mr. TAWNEY. Can the gentleman from Tennessee tell the House how much the Secretary of the Navy under this provision would be authorized to expend in the repair of ships?

Mr. PADGETT. I can refer to it right here.

Mr. TAWNEY. Without his report?

Mr. PADGETT. No; but——

Mr. TAWNEY. Can any Member of the House do it?

Mr. PADGETT. No, sir. Can the gentleman tell me how much is included in any of the paragraphs of the bill without looking at the bill?

Mr. TAWNEY. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that this is an appropriation of $8,000,000 for repairs. So far as Congress knows, the repairs on some of these vessels might amount to as much as $2,000,000, but there is no Member of the House who has any information whatever as to the amount that is proposed to be expended on these ships. The proposition does not identify the appropriation with the repairs that are to be made in any particular whatever.

Mr. PADGETT. We do identify it.

Mr. TAWNEY. No; you do not.

Mr. PADGETT. Because we refer to the ships.

[The time of Mr. PADGETT having expired, by unanimous consent it was extended five minutes.]

Mr. PADGETT. Now, here is the letter of the Secretary of the Navy submitting a draft of proposed legislation to authorize repairs of vessels of the Navy. That letter is addressed to the Secretary of the Navy and is submitted by the Secretary of the Navy to the Congress. In this report each ship is named. For instance, take the San Francisco: For modernizing batteries, $35,250; for mine outfit, $115,000; total, $150,250. Take the Baltimore: For modernizing batteries, $3,300; for mine outfit, $200,000; total, $203,300. And so he goes through with each ship.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman state what the cost is of the repairs on the last ship mentioned?

Mr. PADGETT. That was the Baltimore. Steam engineering—the amount is $203,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. I ask the gentleman what is the original cost of the vessel?

Mr. PADGETT. If I had the document here, I could tell you; I have not my reference book here.

Mr. TAWNEY. I want to ask the gentleman if 20 per cent, which the Secretary is authorized to spend, would not cover all the repairs mentioned?

Mr. PADGETT. It would not. Otherwise the Secretary would not be foolish enough to ask the authority of Congress to do what he already had authority to do.

Mr. TAWNEY. But he does not ask the authority of Congress.

Mr. PADGETT. He does. In the letter of the Secretary of the Navy he speaks of the proposed legislation to authorize the repairs of these vessels of the Navy which he mentions.

Mr. TAWNEY. Proposed legislation. That is the point I make here, that the specific requirements should be set out.

Mr. PADGETT. They are set out in this report. The Bureau of Steam Engineering sets out how much there is in that Bureau. The Bureau of Equipment sets out in detail how much is necessary under that Bureau. The whole of it is set out in detail and itemized, and then the committee in requiring this authorization for the Secretary to do that which it is his duty to do, we make that report a part of this provision.

Mr. MADDEN. How much is it proposed shall be expended under this authorization, does anybody know?

Mr. PADGETT. I have not added it up.

Mr. TAWNEY. Nobody knows.

Mr. MADDEN. It is not in the bill.

Mr. PADGETT. No; it is not set out in hæc verba, but it is set out in the report and in an itemized form, and if the gentleman will take his pencil and take this report and go through it, he can add up and find every dollar that is authorized to be expended on each ship.

Mr. MADDEN. But the gentleman knows that the reports are not submitted to the House to legislate upon.

Mr. PADGETT. What are they submitted for?

Mr. MADDEN. They are not submitted to us at all, they are sent to the Committee on Appropriations. The only thing this House has before it is the bill to legislate upon.

Mr. PADGETT. The report says it is submitted to Congress. It is in the House document room, and is available at any time for any Member. If it is not at the disposal of Congress, I fail to distinguish how it is differentiated from any other public document.

Mr. MADDEN. The bill itself ought to tell how much money there is appropriated, and there ought to be no question about that.

Mr. PADGETT. Oh, well, turn over here to the pay of the Navy in this bill, where we appropriate $27,247,000 for the pay of the Navy; we simply group it in a few words.

Mr. MADDEN. Could not that be done in this case?

Mr. PADGETT. We do not in the bill say how much will be paid to this general or how much will be paid to that soldier. All that is settled by the administration of the Department.

Mr. MADDEN. But the amount which is appropriated is not given in this bill.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to discuss the point of order in case the Chair has not made up his mind. In the first place, I desire to state that I do not agree with the statement made by the gentleman from Minnesota as to the effect that at any time the Secretary of the Navy has exceeded his authority before this provision was put in the bill in the matter of repairing and overhauling of ships.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman from Illinois will pardon me, I will state that the facts appeared before the Committee on Appropriations, and for that reason that committee refused to recommend to the House the appropriation of the $2,000,000 deficiency, and when it was attempted to put a provision on the bill here on the floor of the House the statement as to the diversion of the appropriation was sufficient to prompt the House to refuse to put it on.

Mr. FOSS. The gentleman puts upon it his own construction.

Mr. TAWNEY. That is not a construction; it is a statement of fact.

Mr. FOSS. I have my own opinion also. Now, in regard to this provision which is in this bill, I desire to state that it is in exact conformity with the naval appropriation act of last year. The naval appropriation act of last year provided that the Secretary of the Navy should report to Congress the names of the ships upon which any repairs or changes are proposed, and further states:

And expenditures for such repairs or changes so limited shall be made only after appropriations in details are provided for by Congress.

In express compliance with that provision the Secretary of the Navy has made his report, and it is a House document here, and he has provided here just what shall be done with each ship.

Brooklyn: General overhauling, rearrangement of magazine, ammunition, $275,000.

Does the gentleman want the committee to go down into it deeper than that and find out every screw and bolt and make an appropriation for it?

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman will permit me——

Mr. FOSS. I will not be interrupted at the present time.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will answer the gentleman's question. He asked me a question.

Mr. FOSS. Well, I am going to ask the gentleman a few others.

Mr. TAWNEY. All right.

Mr. FOSS. Now, in this report each bureau sets out specifically what is to be done in connection with these ships. For instance, there is modernizing the battery on the Baltimore, $3,300. On the Alabama we are to replace 6-pounders by six 3-inch guns and mounts, new devices for gun pointers, and so forth. Does the gentleman from Minnesota want to have us specify each and every item in connection with the repairs of these ships? If so, then let us have a bill here 40 miles long.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman allow me to answer him now?

Mr. FOSS. Yes; if it is short.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSS. If it is short.

Mr. TAWNEY. The gentleman asked me a question and I simply propose to answer it, provided he gives me permission to do so. It would be just as rational for the gentleman to say that because we appropriate specifically for the construction of a public building we ought to go into details and specify the character of the material that is to go into that building.

Mr. FOSS. Is not that what the gentleman is insisting upon?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; it is not at all.

Mr. FOSS. What is the gentleman insisting upon?

Mr. TAWNEY. I insist that the law contemplates that this report should be made showing what ships are to be repaired, the amount necessary to make the repairs——

Mr. FOSS. That is stated in the report.

Mr. TAWNEY. And then for the Committee on Naval Affairs to carry in their bill the amount necessary for the repair on each vessel, thus limiting the Secretary of the Navy to the amount which, in the judgment of Congress, should be expended in the making of that repair. You propose no limitation at all.

Mr. PADGETT. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. FOSS. Just a moment. That is just what we do in the bill, only we do not specify the exact amounts. What do we do?

That such expenditures on any ship shall not exceed the amounts reported as necessary therefor under the various bureaus of the Navy Department, said reports having been transmitted to Congress in conformity with the provisions of the act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908.

That is the last Navy appropriation bill made in conformity with that, specifying these amounts, of course. We have not to have the amounts in it. It is not necessary. Why? Because by that language, as the gentleman knows, as a good lawyer knows—and the gentleman is a good lawyer—we made that report a part of the naval appropriation act by putting those words in there, "in conformity with the provisions of the act," and so forth.

Mr. PADGETT. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman says that he has made a report a part of the appropriation act. Will the gentleman say to the House that this report which is made a part of the appropriation act will appear in the act as printed in the permanent laws of the country?

Mr. FOSS. Oh, no; the report will not appear in the permanent laws of the country, but the gentleman knows, as a legislator, that time and again we make reports substantially a part of the laws by referring to them in similar language as placed in this provision.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is often the case in the river and harbor appropriation bill.

Mr. FOSS. Yes. Now, the gentleman from Minnesota, who is so often right, is in this case wrong.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the Secretary of the Navy has carried out to the letter the provisions which were placed in the appropriation act of last year, and it seems to me that this provision, in view of the fact that the Secretary of the Navy has carried it out to the letter as I say, is not subject to the point of order, but is in order as specified in the provision of last year and making appropriations for the repairs of those vessels.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota insist upon his point of order?

Mr. TAWNEY. I insist upon the point of order, but I wish to call the attention of the Chair to the language of the last proviso.

That such expenditures on any ship shall not exceed the amount reported as necessary therefor under the various bureaus of the Navy Department, said reports having been transmitted to Congress in conformity with the provisions of the act, etc.

That certainly does not relate to repairs heretofore submitted to Congress. It relates also to any report which may hereafter be submitted to Congress, and accordingly any amount of money that may be authorized in the appropriation for the repairs of ships, provided the report has been made. Authority would exist to make the repairs within the limitations of that report without any language of this character being carried in the bill hereafter, and it is virtually making this permanent law and legislation. If the word "heretofore" is inserted in line 3 after the word "amount" it would only relate to repairs made on vessels heretofore reported to Congress, but it does not do that. It relates also to repairs on vessels that may be reported to Congress at any time under the provisions of this law. The law also requires the appropriation for repairs to be made in detail and in so far as this language authorizes repairs generally it is a change of existing law.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, just a moment. The gentleman is clearly in error. This language says, "said reports having been submitted to Congress in conformity with the provisions of the act"——

Mr. TAWNEY. When?

Mr. FOSS (continuing). "In conformity with the provisions of the act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908," last year. It means all the reports which have been made up to the present time in conformity with the act.

Mr. TAWNEY. But it means also all future reports.

Mr. FOSS. It does not at all.

Mr. TAWNEY. "Said reports having been transmitted to Congress."

Mr. FOSS. It does not. If it meant all that, the word "hereafter" would be in there, but no such word is there. It is a provision which would have to be put upon the naval appropriation bill every year, but the provision of last year makes the appropriation in order. The Chair will see, if he reads the provision contained in the appropriation act of last year, "and expenditures for such repairs or changes so limited shall be made only after appropriations in detail are provided for by Congress." So, in my judgment, this is clearly in order, the Secretary of the Navy having carried out the wish and the will of Congress as expressed in the provisions of last year's bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The discussion so far has been purely upon the merits and has not been addressed to the Chair. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman from Illinois on the point of order. The provision is purely a legislative provision.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to suggest to the Chair that it is not subject to the point of order, for this reason: The act of Congress passed last year directs and makes it the duty of the Secretary of the Navy to report to Congress all repairs upon ships in order that authority may be granted to make repairs. Pursuant to that law he has submitted the estimates——

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman state the provisions of last year's act?

Mr. PADGETT. It is in the naval appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908.

Mr. FOSS. I have the law here.

The CHAIRMAN. Under what heading?

Mr. PADGETT. It is under the heading of "Bureau of Construction and Repair."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Tennessee desire to proceed?

Mr. PADGETT. The only thing I wish to say, if the Chair pleases, was the suggestion that the law requires the Secretary of the Navy to submit the estimates for repairs and designate the ships; having done so, and this being a proper expenditure in the naval appropriation bill, it necessarily becomes pertinent and appropriate to include in the naval appropriation bill the authority to expend the money which it is necessary for the naval appropriation bill to carry.

The CHAIRMAN. The item in last year's bill contains this provision:

And expenditures for such repairs or changes so limited shall be made only after appropriations in detail are provided for by Congress.

Does the gentleman claim that this item makes an appropriation in detail under that provision of the statute?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes, sir; I do; by virtue of the fact that it refers to the estimates submitted by the Secretary of the Navy, and directs that the money shall be expended only according to and in pursuance of those estimates; and having referred to those by designation makes them a part of the legislation, and the appropriation being made for that specific purpose and limited to that purpose must be expended pursuant to that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The item in the bill to which the point of order is made provides:

And the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to make expenditures for repairs and changes on vessels in excess of $200,000, or in excess of 20 per cent of the estimated cost, appraised in like manner, of a new ship of the same size and like material.

Provided further, That such expenditures on any ship shall not exceed the amounts reported as necessary therefor under the various bureaus of the Navy Department, said reports having been transmitted to Congress in conformity with the provisions of the act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908.

The act of last year contains this provision:

Provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy shall hereafter report to Congress, at the commencement of each regular session, the number of vessels and their names upon which any repairs or changes are proposed which in any case shall amount to more than $200,000, the extent of such proposed repairs or changes, and the amounts estimated to be needed for the same in each vessel; and expenditures for such repairs or changes so limited shall be made only after appropriations in detail are provided for by Congress.

In the opinion of the Chair the item in the pending bill is not in conformity with the provision of the law of last year, but contains an express authorization to the Secretary of the Navy, and in that respect constitutes a change of existing law. The Chair, therefore, sustains the point of order.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment in detail, and I will ask the Clerk to read, as part of the amendment, that portion of the printed report marked by the pencil.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. TAWNEY. I rise for the purpose of asking unanimous consent that I may submit a proposition to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PADGETT] that may obviate the necessity for much of the language that he proposes in this amendment, and that is that we pass this provision temporarily and prepare his amendment, eliminating the descriptive language in it.

Mr. PADGETT. That is all right.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] asks unanimous consent that the committee may recur to this portion of the bill for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me it all ought to go in, all the reports connected with the Bureau, stating what repairs should be made.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] objects. The Clerk will read.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my objection.

Mr. TAWNEY. I renew the request, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the committee may recur to this portion of the bill for the purpose of having an amendment offered. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all, Naval Academy, $475,728.36.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of referring to the efficiency of the work done at the Naval Academy as shown in the efficiency of the American Navy under the control of the naval officers. A great deal has been said in criticism of this efficiency.

In the war of the Revolution the American Navy captured 800 British ships, with 12,000 British seamen, more prisoners of war captured by the Navy than there were prisoners on land surrendered at Saratoga and Yorktown by Burgoyne and Cornwallis combined. It is true that because of the inadequacy of the Navy it was wiped off the seas. In 1812 the American Navy captured 1,200 British ships, with 20,000 British seamen. The British ships that came across the ocean were those that had won the victories of Nelson. They came across five times as strong as the whole American Navy. They had counted 196 victories out of 200 engagements with European enemies. They fought eighteen battles with American frigates and lost fifteen of the engagements.

The American force was far inferior. Its loss should have been greater. On the contrary, the American losses were only about one-fifth the British losses. It is true that because of the insufficiency of the Navy it was unable to control the sea, it was wiped off the ocean, and America was invaded at the mouth of the Mississippi and up the Chesapeake, and Washington City was burned.

In the civil war, it has been stated by an unprejudiced expert, an officer sent by the French Government to follow the operations of that war, that three things were necessary to the success of the Union arms. First, that the South, which had wealth to purchase, but which did not have manufacturing facilities to manufacture the materials of war, should be shut off from the rest of the world.

Second, that the compact South should be cleft in twain by the Mississippi River and its tributaries. Third, that the Union Army should capture Richmond. Three prime factors, two of which fell to the function of the Navy. That war lasted almost five years, it is true, but it did not last very long after the Mississippi River had cut the South in twain and a blockade of the Southern harbors was effected. I venture to suggest that that war would have been ended in half the time if the United States had had an adequate navy at the outset, and that the pension bills that have been paid since the war would have been cut more than in half. At this point I beg to call the attention of Members of Congress to the fallacy that is going around—that the Navy is responsible for pensions. The pensions are due to the fact that we did not have a Navy adequate to prevent the war. Sixty-five to 70 per cent of our revenues——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. COX of Indiana. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chairs hears none.

Mr. HOBSON. It is said that we spend 65 or 70 per cent of the entire revenues of this country for the purposes of war, past, present, and future. And the statement is brought up as an argument against the provision for a navy that would save us from a war. The great pension lists we are paying are paid for the volunteer armies that had to be raised because the country did not have a navy either to prevent war or to make it short and decisive.

But take the war with Spain. An expert has been quoted as saying that our efficiency at target practice was very poor. It was poor as compared with the efficiency of to-day. But it was excellent as compared with the efficiency of that day. Let me remind Members here that the work of the Navy in the war with Spain will go down all the annals of time as the most efficient since the world began. Up to the battle of Manila Bay there had never been a case in the world's history where any fleet had totally destroyed another fleet in any engagement of any considerable size. There had never been in the world's history a war where a fleet had won a substantial victory without suffering serious loss. At Manila Bay, on the 1st of May, 1898, the American Navy broke two world's records in accomplishing the total destruction of the enemy without incurring any loss to the victor.

Some say it was only cruising ships against cruising ships, but the same record was repeated at Santiago. The Spanish ships there were 21-knot vessels, well armed, first class, up to date. Our vessels differed in speed. If the Spanish vessels had attained 21 knots standing off in a group, before nightfall our squadron would have been strung out over a distance of a hundred miles, and the compact Spanish squadron could have turned about and destroyed our vessels by piecemeal, one at a time. Instead of the Spanish ships making 21 knots, they realized 16 knots speed. The American ships of 16 knots, in the heat of battle, realized 17 knots speed. Again the record of Manila Bay was repeated. I do not care if battles are fought until the end of time, there never will be a case which will surpass the victories won at Manila Bay and Santiago, in which the American Navy attained a mathematical maximum of efficiency by totally destroying the enemy without loss to themselves.

There are those who will tell you our vessels are badly built; that the armor belt is not properly placed; that the freeboard is too low, and so forth. Let me remind you that the naval constructors of the American Navy go through Annapolis and take postgraduate courses. There is no such education of naval constructors in any other country. There is no navy that has such provision for education of its officers as the American Navy. The naval constructors here are not inferior to any others in the world. As a matter of fact the American naval constructors in the old days put forty-four guns upon the same frigate where foreign constructors put thirty-six. In the later day, in the case of the Oregon, they gathered as much power in a ship of 10,500 tons as their contemporaries abroad gathered in ships of 13,000 and 14,000 tons. You will permit me to say that I believe the record of unparalleled efficiency is still maintained by the personnel of the Navy, and to say that the ships, the product of the personnel of the Navy, are fully as good as their contemporaries of equal tonnage in the best navies abroad. It is my own judgment that to-day the historic sequence is maintained of 20 to 25 per cent greater power than similar contemporary vessels abroad.

But a revolution has taken place in naval architecture in the last few years, and all the great nations are building their navies anew.

The gunnery showing at Santiago, making 4 per cent of hits at moderate ranges, would be regarded as very poor to-day, when 75 per cent of hits at long ranges is not unusual. Consequently the whole method of naval fighting has been revolutionized. You do not have to fire on the wing. The mechanism is adapted so that you can keep your sights pointed on the target even while the ship is rolling. All you have to do is to pull the trigger when the gun is ready. Furthermore, you can stand off at long ranges and with the methods of spotting now in vogue you can know the range accurately and can make a large percentage of hits in a seaway at six, seven, eight, and nine thousand yards. This means that the great guns will fight out the battles of the future, and the 6, 7, and 8 inch guns carried in great numbers by existing ships will take no important part except in resisting torpedo attack.

[The time of Mr. HOBSON having expired, by unanimous consent it was extended five minutes.]

Mr. HOBSON. The war between Russia and Japan brought out the fact that you can stand off with your great guns and hammer the enemy. It revolutionized naval architecture, like the war of 1865. All the world has recognized that the navies must be built over. There is no nation in the world that is following out its old consecutive programme, continuing as in the past. Every other nation in the world is building a new navy, composed of these great ships, with the great guns that stand off at long distances, and against which existing ships, even the best, could not hope to contend. There are those who will tell you they had rather have one ship of 20,000 tons built to-day than a dozen ships of 10,000 to 15,000 tons built three and four years ago, because with the larger displacement they can attain higher speed and carry better armor, as well as three and four times as many great guns. This question is not a difficult one to understand. The dead weights on a ship—the skin, the frames, the beams—are all surfaces. They vary as the square of a linear dimension.

The useful weights—the guns, the armor, the coal, the machinery—are measured by the displacement of the ship, or the volume, and vary as the cube of a linear dimension. Therefore even in like vessels the percentage of useful weight increases with the size, and the advantage lies heavily on the side of the larger vessel. If a vessel had been built five years ago of 20,000 tons, it would have had the power of three vessels of 10,000 tons each of the same general design. To-day a vessel of 20,000 tons built to embody the new features has the power of at least five vessels of 10,000 tons built before the revolution in naval architecture. With higher speed the larger vessels can control the range, and stand off at seven, eight, and nine thousand yards and, by concentrating their fire, destroy almost any number of smaller ships that might try to reach them. This means that when we come to determine the naval programme this year it is not a matter of following a consecutive programme gauged by tonnage of existing ships, but is a matter of building the Navy over anew, as all the other nations are doing. We are already two years behind. I have a set of curves here appearing in The Engineer, of London, of March 13, 1908. It has plotted curves for the other powers, and, assuming that America will go on a two-ship basis for the next five years—two Dreadnoughts a year—this curve shows that not only Germany, but Japan, will go far ahead of us. It shows that America, instead of holding her present position, will drop back either to fourth or fifth place.

It is the law in Germany to-day that there must be four ships this year, three battle ships and one armored cruiser of about 20,000 tons apiece, and the armored cruiser ought to be counted with the battle ships; that next year there must be four, and the following year there must be four. Our existing tonnage will soon count for little, and at the rate of two new ships a year America will speedily fall far behind Germany. The American people do not wish our Navy to drop back in this way. Other powers are negotiating loans at as high as 4 per cent to build their navies over anew, while we, with $250,000,000 cash balance in the Treasury, apparently are satisfied to go along as though there had been no change in naval architecture. In the Atlantic Ocean alone, if there were no added demand due to the fact that the Pacific Ocean has come upon us, we would have to change this programme of two battle ships a year to at least four if we would hold our own position.

The highest efficiency of our personnel can not make inferior ships do the work of superior ships. We must either build ships faster or sink back to a secondary position among the naval powers. The American people certainly do not desire this.

The Clerk read as follows:

Contingent, Marine Corps: For freight, tolls, cartage, advertising, washing of bed sacks, mattress covers, pillowcases, towels, and sheets, funeral expenses of officers and marines, including the transportation of bodies and their arms and wearing apparel from the place of demise to the homes of the deceased in the United States, stationery and other paper, telegraphing, rent of telephones, purchase and repair of typewriters, apprehension of stragglers and deserters, per diem of enlisted men employed on constant labor for a period of not less than ten days, employment of civilian labor, repair of gas and water fixtures, office and barracks furniture, camp and garrison equipage and implements, mess utensils for enlisted men, such as bowls, plates, spoons, knives and forks, tin cups, pans, pots, etc; packing boxes, wrapping paper, oilcloth, crash, rope, twine, quarantine fees, camphor and carbolized paper, carpenters' tools, tools for police purposes, iron safes, purchase and repair of public wagons, purchase and repair of public harness, purchase of public horses, services of veterinary surgeons, and medicines for public horses; purchase and repair of hose, purchase and repair of fire extinguishers, purchase of fire hand grenades; purchase and repair of carts, wheelbarrows, and lawn mowers; purchase and repair of cooking stoves, ranges, stoves and furnaces where there are no grates; purchase of ice, towels, soap, combs, and brushes for offices; postage stamps for foreign postage; purchase of books, newspapers, and periodicals; improving parade grounds; repair of pumps and wharves; laying drain, water, and gas pipes; water, introducing gas, and for gas, gas oil, and introduction and maintenance of electric lights; straw for bedding, mattresses, mattress covers, pillows, sheets; wire bunk bottoms for enlisted men at various posts; furniture for Government quarters and repair of same, and for all emergencies and extraordinary expenses arising at home and abroad, but impossible to anticipate or classify, $285,000.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of calling attention to the strength of the personnel of the Navy, including that of the Marine Corps. It has been argued on the floor of this House that the Navy has now an extraordinary shortage in its personnel and that on that account we should stop building ships until we catch up in men.

In the first place, the present bill carries 6,000 additional men and 1,500 marines, and these men and marines are to man the ships already authorized. So that, according to our own practice, we have not yet found it necessary to stop building ships to wait for the men. Heretofore we have been building ships and then authorizing the men afterwards. The argument that the ships should wait on the men has no weight whatsoever. Not that I approve of delay in authorizing more men. It really takes almost as long to train a man as to build a ship. Of course, they do not put all new men on the new ship, but put with them some experienced men. The wisest policy would be to allow the bill that carries the ship to carry automatically the men required to man the ship, and then the men would be ready by the time the ship is built.

But the truth is that to-day our country, for personnel of our Navy, is in better condition than it has been at any time since the civil war, except during the Spanish war period. It is recruited right up to the last man, and they are now stopping recruiting and calling in some of the recruiting stations.

Furthermore, there is a prospect of continued activity and efficiency in recruiting. The very fact that the country is taking more interest in its Navy, that it is sending its fleet to the Pacific Ocean, that we find we must become a naval power, creates an interest throughout the nation that enables us without any question of conscription, and with only a reasonable and fair standard of inducement, to secure all the men we need. What we should do is not to stop building ships, but to continue the precedent set in this bill by each year authorizing a proportionate increase in the number of men. [Applause.]

A big new ship of 20,000 tons, without the large number of secondary guns, requires but few, if any, more men than one of our existing ships of 15,000 and 16,000 tons. As we get the big ships of great power we can put out of commission an increasing number of smaller ships, and thus economize on the number of men, though greatly increasing the power of the Navy.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MANN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 20471, the naval appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. CROCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 15653) to increase the pension of widows, minor children, etc., of deceased soldiers and sailors of the late civil war, the war with Mexico, the various Indian wars, etc., and to grant a pension to certain widows of the deceased soldiers and sailors of the civil war.

PENSION OF WIDOWS AND MINOR CHILDREN.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the conference report on the bill H. R. 15653. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the report be dispensed with and that the statement be read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire asks unanimous consent that the reading of the report be dispensed with and that the statement only be read.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I object.

The Clerk read the conference report and statement, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill H. R. 15653, "An act to increase the pension of widows, minor children, etc., of deceased soldiers and sailors of the late civil war, the war with Mexico, the various Indian wars, etc., and to grant a pension to certain widows of the deceased soldiers and sailors of the civil war," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment to section 1 of the bill;

That the Senate recede from its amendment on lines 14 and 15, page 2 of the bill;

That the Senate recede from its amendment on line 20, page 2, after "six;"

That the Senate recede from its amendment to the title of the bill.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate in line 12, page 2 of the bill;

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate on lines 17, 18, and 19, page 2 of the bill; and agree to the same.

C. A. SULLOWAY,
H. C. LOUDENSLAGER,
CHAS. H. WEISSE,
Managers on the part of the House.

STATEMENT

Of the conferees on H. R. 15653, "An act to increase the pension of widows, minor children, etc., of deceased soldiers and sailors of the late civil war, the war with Mexico, the various Indian wars, etc., and to grant a pension to certain widows of the deceased soldiers and sailors of the late civil war."

The Senate amended section 1 of the bill by striking out the minor children, helpless children, Spanish-war widows, and widows of the regular establishment, and the result of the conference is that these are restored, and the section as it originally passed the House is agreed to.

As the bill originally passed the House it applied only to those widows who were married prior to June 27, 1890, but it was amended in the Senate, bringing the date of marriage down to the time of the passage of this act. As a result of the conference it is agreed by the managers on the part of the House and Senate that the provisions of the same be only applicable to those who married prior to June 27, 1890, as the law now is, and as the bill was passed by the House.

The amendments of the Senate, in lines 12, 17, 18, and 19, page 2 of the bill, relate solely to the verbiage, and do not change the provisions of the bill; but, in the opinion of your conferees, they perfect the same, and your conferees agreed to these Senate amendments.

C. A. SULLOWAY,
H. C. LOUDENSLAGER,
CHAS. H. WEISSE,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SULLOWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House agree to the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Hampshire moves that the House agree to the conference report.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In order to expedite business, Mr. Speaker, I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 238, answered "present" 7, not voting 142, as follows:

Mr. MOON of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I voted in the affirmative. I have a general pair, and I wish to withdraw my vote and vote "present."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the gentleman's name.

The Clerk called the name of Mr. MOON of Tennessee, and he answered "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 20310. An act relating to the liability of common carriers by railroad to their employees in certain cases.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill of the following title:

S. 24. An act to increase the efficiency of the personnel of the Revenue-Cutter Service.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate joint resolution of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. R. 78. Joint resolution establishing the boundary line between the States of Colorado and Oklahoma and the Territory of New Mexico—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

INCREASE OF THE NAVY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a message from the President of the United States, which was read and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered printed.

[For message see proceedings of Senate of this day.]

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to—

Mr. BEDE, for five days, on account of important business.

Mr. LEVER, for one week, on account of sickness.

NAVY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 20471, the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to present the following petition and have it, together with the names thereto attached, read at this time and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that the following petition, with the names attached, be read and printed in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Representatives and Senators in Congress:

We, the undersigned citizens of New York City, voicing, as we believe, the sentiments of many thousands of American citizens, earnestly protest against the extravagent demand for an addition of over $60,000,000 in the form of four new battle ships, cruisers, etc., to the naval budget of last year, inasmuch as no danger threatens the country not known last April, when President Roosevelt told the world: "We are no longer enlarging our Navy. We are simply keeping up its strength. The addition of one battle ship a year barely enables us to make good the units which become obsolete."

Sixty-five per cent of the national income is now expended on war, past and present. The increase of our naval budget has recently been used in the French Assembly as a reason for increasing its own; is largely responsible for the increase of armaments among Asiatic nations, and is well-nigh certain to retard that reduction in the armaments of the world for which we have so long been waiting.

The growing discontent throughout the world at the appalling increase of waste of national resources must be heeded. We feel that this protest is the more necessary inasmuch as there are various new and effective methods now available for promoting international friendship and rationally settling difficulties, which these new demands seem to ignore.

RECESS.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now take a recess until 11.30 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of personal privilege, and ask that unanimous consent be given for the reading of the following memorial.

Mr. HARDWICK. That is not a question of personal privilege, and I make the point of order.

Mr. HOBSON. Well, the gentleman can make his point of order.

Mr. HARDWICK. I do.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his question of privilege.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent on any ground whatsoever, that this memorial be allowed to go into the RECORD.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, both sides of this controversy having been heard, I shall now object to any further continuance of it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi objects. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York, that the House take a recess until to-morrow morning at 11.30 o'clock.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. Ah, but a motion of the highest privilege is pending before the House.

Mr. HOBSON. A parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. PAYNE. I call for the regular order.

Mr. HOBSON. Have I not the right now to lay before the House a memorial from a labor organization of America?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, but I make the point of order that that is not personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The point is well taken. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from New York that the House take a recess until to-morrow morning at 11.30.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. WILLIAMS) there were—ayes 160, noes 75.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I respectfully demand tellers.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that demand is dilatory.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 143, nays 95, answered "present" 10, not voting 139, as follows:

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 3 minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until to-morrow at 11.30 a. m.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a letter from the Acting Secretary of State submitting an estimate of appropriation for printing the ascertainment of electors for President and Vice-President (H. R. Doc. 862)—to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, transmitting the report of Special Agent W. A. Graham Clark on the Swiss embroidery and lace industry (S. Doc. 434)—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

A letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings filed by the court in the case of Coleman T. Brown against The United States (H. R. Doc. 861)—to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. MONDELL, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 480) amending subdivision 10 of section 2238, Revised Statutes of the United States, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1443), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. CUSHMAN, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 19964) to authorize the Iron Dyke Copper Company, a corporation of the State of Pennsylvania, to construct a bridge across the Snake River, between Oregon and Idaho, at or near Homestead, Oreg., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1444), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. ADAMSON, from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 20115) to extend the time for the construction of a bridge and approaches thereto across the Missouri River at or near South Omaha, Nebr., reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1445), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. WALDO, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 11039) for the relief of Willard W. Alt, of Hyannis, Nebr., reported the same with amendments, accompanied by a report (No. 1440), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. R. 15218) for the relief of the sureties on the official bond of the late Cornelius Van Cott, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1441), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill of the Senate (S. 2873) for the relief of the owners of the steam lighter Climax and the cargo laden aboard thereof, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 1442), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 19066) granting an increase of pension to Edward F. Reeves, and the same was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. LOUD: A bill (H. R. 20771) to create a third Federal district court in Michigan to be known as the northern district—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. COCKRAN (by request): A bill (H. R. 20772) to construct a national auto highway along or near to the thirty-fifth parallel of north latitude from the Atlantic to the Pacific oceans—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. KAHN: A bill (H. R. 20773) authorizing the Chief of Ordnance of the United States Army to sell obsolete rifles, etc., to patriotic organizations—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HULL of Tennessee: A bill (H. R. 20774) to establish a fish hatchery and biological station in the Fourth Congressional District of the State of Tennessee—to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. BURTON of Delaware: A bill (H. R. 20775) to provide for the acquisition and improvement of the Chesapeake and Delaware Canal—to the Committee on Railways and Canals.

By Mr. FERRIS: A bill (H. R. 20776) providing for free homesteads on the public lands for actual and bona fide settlers, and reserving the public lands for that purpose in the State of Oklahoma—to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. ANDREWS: A bill (H. R. 20777) authorizing the Territory of New Mexico to sell and transfer certain school lands to the town of Portales, N. Mex.—to the Committee on the Territories.

By Mr. BELL of Georgia: A bill (H. R. 20778) to provide for increasing the limit of cost of the public building authorized to be erected at Gainesville, Hall County, Ga.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. BATES: A bill (H. R. 20779) authorizing the appointment of certain first-class sergeants, Signal Corps, United States Army, now on the retired list of the Army, to the grade of second lieutenant in the Army, and placing them upon the retired list of the Army—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HAMILTON of Iowa: A bill (H. R. 20780) to regulate interstate shipments of domestic animals, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. REEDER: A bill (H. R. 20781) providing for an increase of the irrigation fund, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands.

I now present certain papers as a supplemental report to accompany the bill, and ask that they be printed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT WESTERLY, R. I.

Mr. WETMORE. I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5657) to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a building thereon at Westerly, R. I., to report it favorably with an amendment, and I submit a report (No. 520) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendment was, on page 1, line 12, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifty" and insert "one hundred," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, a site and cause to be erected thereon a suitable building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office and other Government offices at Westerly, R. I., the cost of said site and building, including said vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, elevators, and approaches, complete, not to exceed the sum of $100,000.

SEC. 2. That proposals for the sale of land suitable for said site shall be invited by public advertisement in one or more of the newspapers of said city of largest circulation for at least twenty days prior to the date specified in said advertisement for the opening of said proposals.

SEC. 3. That proposals made in response to said advertisement shall be addressed and mailed to the Secretary of the Treasury, who will then cause the said proposed sites, and such others as he may think proper to designate, to be examined in person by an agent of the Treasury Department, who shall make written report to said Secretary as the result of said examination and of his recommendation thereon and the reasons therefor, which shall be accompanied by the original proposals and all maps, plats, and statements which shall have come into his possession relating to the said proposed sites.

SEC. 4. That the building shall be unexposed to danger from fire by an open space of at least 40 feet on each side, including streets and alleys.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. CULBERSON was, on his own motion, relieved from further service upon the Committee on Coast Defenses.

On motion of Mr. CULBERSON, and by unanimous consent, Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas was assigned to the Committee on Rules.

On motion of Mr. CULBERSON, and by unanimous consent, Mr. MILTON was assigned to the following committees: District of Columbia, Fisheries, Pacific Islands and Porto Rico, Patents, Printing, Public Health and National Quarantine, and the Revision of the Laws of the United States.

On motion of Mr. CULBERSON, and by unanimous consent, Mr. SMITH of Maryland was assigned to the following committees: Canadian Relations, Coast Defenses, Expenditures in the Treasury Department, Irrigation, to Investigate the Condition of the Potomac River Front, and Naval Affairs.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT POPLAR BLUFF, MO.

Mr. STONE. I report back with amendments, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, the bill (S. 4692) providing for the erection of a public building at Poplar Bluff, Mo., and I submit a report (No. 519) thereon. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendments were, on page 1, line 5, to strike out the words "and cause to be erected thereon;" in line 6, after the word "building," to strike out "including fireproof vaults and heating and ventilating apparatus;" in line 10, after the word "site," to strike out the words "and building thereon, with its appurtenances, when completed, upon plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury;" and in line 14, before the word "thousand," to strike out "one hundred" and insert "ten," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to acquire, by gift, purchase, or otherwise, a site for a suitable building for the use and accommodation of the United States post-office and such other United States offices and the officers thereof as may from time to time be established at Poplar Bluff, Mo. The cost of the site shall not exceed in the aggregate the sum of $10,000.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill providing for the purchase of a site for a public building at Poplar Bluff, Mo."

REPORT OF INLAND WATERWAYS COMMISSION.

Mr. PLATT, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the concurrent resolution submitted yesterday by Mr. PILES, for Mr. NEWLANDS, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound at the Government Printing Office 10,000 copies of the preliminary report of the Inland Waterways Commission, with illustrations, of which 5,000 copies shall be for the House of Representatives, 2,500 copies for the Senate, and 2,500 copies for the use of the Commission.

WILLIAM FOWLER, ADMINISTRATOR.

Mr. KEAN, from the Committee on Claims, reported the following resolution, which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That in compliance with a communication from the Assistant Attorney-General the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, directed to return to the Court of Claims the following Congressional case, namely, of William Fowler, administrator of Hickman Fowler, v. The United States, No. 10193, and the said court is hereby authorized to proceed in said case as if no return therein had been made to the Senate.

COBB, BLASDELL & CO.

Mr. KEAN, from the Committee on Claims, reported the following resolution, which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 6474) entitled "A bill for the relief of the late firm of Cobb, Blasdell & Co." now pending in the Senate, be, and the same is hereby, referred to the Court of Claims, in pursuance of the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the bringing of suits against the Government of the United States," approved March 3, 1887. And the said court shall proceed with the same in accordance with the provisions of such act and report to the Senate in accordance therewith.

FRANCES E. RANSDELL.

Mr. KEAN. I am directed by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted on the 7th instant by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY], to report it favorably with an amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Frances E. Ransdell, widow of Edward S. Ransdell, late a policeman in the employ of Congress, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving at the time of his demise, out of the contingent fund of the Senate, said payment to be considered in full of all funeral expenses or other allowances.

The amendment was, in lines 3 and 4, to strike out the words "policeman in the employ of Congress" and insert "member of the Capitol police force, in the employ of the Senate."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

NATIONAL FOREST IN MINNESOTA.

Mr. CLAPP. From the Committee on Indian Affairs, I am authorized to report back the bill (S. 4186) creating in the State of Minnesota a national forest reserve consisting of certain described lands, and for other purposes, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute, and I submit a report (No. 517). It is a local measure and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed substitute will be read.

The Secretary read the amendment, which was to strike out all after the enacting clause and in lieu thereof to insert:

That there is hereby created in the State of Minnesota a national forest consisting of lands and territory described as follows, to wit:

Beginning at a point where the north line of section 31 in township 148 north, range 28 west, fifth principal meridian, intersects the low watermark of the lake formed by the waters of Third River; thence easterly along the north line of sections 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, and 36 in township 148 north, ranges 28 and 27 west, continuing easterly along the north line of section 31 in township 148 north, range 26 west, to a point where said line intersects the low watermark of Bow String Lake on the west shore; thence southerly along the west side of said lake at low watermark to a point where it crosses the section line between sections 16 and 17 in township 147 north, range 26 west; thence southerly along the section line on the east side of sections 17, 20, 29, and 32 in township 147 north, range 26 west, and continuing southerly along the east side of sections 5, 8, 17, 20, 29, and 32, township 146 north, range 26 west, continuing southerly along the east line of sections 5, 8, 17, 20, and 29, township 145 north, range 26 west, to a point at the low watermark on the right bank of the Mississippi River on the section line between sections 28 and 29 in said township; thence southeasterly along the right bank of the Mississippi River at low watermark to its confluence with Leech Lake River in section 12, in township 144 north, range 26 west; thence southwesterly along the right bank of Leech Lake River along the low watermark to Mud Lake; thence along the line of low watermark of Mud Lake on its northern and western shores to the point where Leech Lake River empties into the same on fractional section 32, township 144 north, range 26 west; thence up said river along the low watermark on the right bank thereof to a point in fractional section 29 where the line intersects the low watermark of Leech Lake; thence in a northwesterly and southwesterly direction, following the contours of said lake at low watermark to the point at low watermark on the shore of said lake on the northeast boundary of the ceded Leech Lake Indian Reservation on section line between sections 5 and 8, township 143 north, range 29 west; thence in a southwesterly direction following the contours of said lake at low watermark to the point on said lake at the southwestern extremity of Ottertail Point; thence southwesterly in a direct line to the southern extremity of section 25 in township 143 north, range 31 west; thence in a westerly direction along the contour of said lake to the southwestern extremity of section 26 in said township; thence in a northerly and westerly direction along the contour of said lake at low watermark to a point where the center line through section 2, running in a north and south direction in township 143 north, range 31 west, intersects the low watermark of Leech Lake; thence northerly through the middle of said section 2 to the shore of a small lake at low watermark; thence along the east shore of said lake at low-water line to a point where the section line between sections 35 and 36, township 144 north, range 31 west, intersects low watermark of said lake on north shore; thence northerly on section line between sections 35, 36, 25, and 26 to the low watermark at the shore of a small lake; thence northerly along the east side of said lake to a point where the section line between sections 25 and 26 intersects the low watermark of said lake in said township; thence northerly along the east line of sections 26, 23, and 14 to a point on the east line of section 14, 20 chains north of the southeast corner of section 14; thence west 20 chains; thence north 20 chains; thence west 20 chains; thence northerly along the east side of a small lake to a point where the center line running in a north and south direction through section 14 intersects the north side of said lake at low watermark; thence northerly along the center line of said section through section 11 to the quarter corner between sections 2 and 11 of said township; thence westerly to a point 20 chains west of the northwest corner of section 11; thence north 40 chains; thence west 20 chains; thence north to a point where the center line running in a north and south direction in section 3 intersects the township line between townships 144 and 145 north, range 31 west; thence westerly to the quarter corner on the township line in the southeast quarter of section 34 in township 145 north, range 31 west; thence north 20 chains; thence west 40 chains; thence north 20 chains; thence west 20 chains to the quarter corner between sections 33 and 34 in said township and range; thence northerly along the east line of sections 33, 28, 21, and 16 in said township to a point where it intersects the right of way of the Great Northern Railway as at present located; thence easterly along said right of way to a point where it intersects the shore of Cass Lake at low watermark in section 15, township 145 north, range 31 west; thence northerly along the west shore of Cass Lake and the south, west, and north shore of Allens Bay and the northwest shore of Cass Lake to a point along the contour of said lake at low watermark at the head of the Mississippi River, approximately in section 21, township 146 north, range 30 west; thence easterly along the right bank of said river to a point where the range line between ranges 29 and 30 west intersects said river; thence northerly along the range line to the northwest corner of section 19 in township 147 north, range 29 west; thence easterly along the north line of sections 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, and 24 in said township, and along the north side of sections 19 and 20 in township 147 north, range 28 west, to a point where said line intersects the left bank of Third River at low watermark; thence northerly along the right bank of Third River to the contour line at low watermark of the lake formed by the waters of Third River; thence southeasterly and northerly along the contour line of said lake to the point of beginning; and it is the intent of this act to include in said national forest and make a part thereof all that certain territory and land which has heretofore been selected by the Forester of the Department of Agriculture as the ten sections situated in townships 144, 145, and 146 north, ranges 30 and 31 west of the fifth principal meridian in Minnesota, and designated as being the ten sections referred to and authorized to be selected by section 2 of the act approved June 27, 1902, being chapter 1157, United States Statutes at Large, volume 32, entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota,' approved January 14, 1889;" and also all the islands in Cass Lake in the State of Minnesota.

And in addition to the lands and territory above described, the lands described by section 2 of said act of June 27, 1902, as follows: "One hundred and sixty acres at the extremity of Sugar Point, on Leech Lake, and the peninsula known as Pine Point, on which the new Leech Lake Agency is now located" shall be included in and are hereby made a part of said national forest: Provided, That this act shall not in any manner abridge the right of citizens to the use of the west and northwesterly shores of Cass Lake.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to proceed with the sale of the merchantable pine timber upon the above-described land outside of said ten sections and said islands and points, in conformity with the provisions of said act above entitled, and reserving 10 per cent of such timber from sale, said 10 per cent to be designated by the Forester of the United States Department of Agriculture; and as to the timber upon said ten sections and said islands and points, the Forester is authorized, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe from time to time, to sell and dispose of so much of the standing timber thereon as he may deem wise and advisable in the conduct of a national forest: Provided, That a commission shall at once be appointed, consisting of one person to be designated by the President, one by the Secretary of the Interior, and one by a general council of the Indians of the Winnibigoshish, Cass Lake, Chippewas of the Mississippi Reservation, and Leech Lake Reservation to be held under the direction of the agent at Leech Lake Indian Agency; and said commissioners shall proceed forthwith to appraise the value of the 5 per cent of timber heretofore reserved from sale by the provisions of said act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota,' approved January 14, 1889," and the 10 per cent hereafter reserved under the provisions of this act, and the timber upon said ten sections and upon the unappropriated lands on said islands and points, and shall ascertain the acreage of actual land included under the provisions of this act and to the estimated value of said 5 per cent of timber reserved under the said act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota,' approved January 14, 1889," and the 10 per cent reserved under this act and the estimated value of timber upon said ten sections and upon the unappropriated lands on said islands and points, to the sum of the values of the timber so estimated shall add an amount equal to $1.25 for each and every acre of land not otherwise appropriated which they find covered by the provisions of this act, and shall certify the same to the Secretary of the Interior. The Indians designated in this section, acting through an agent to be named by them at the time of their appointment of the commissioner herein, shall have sixty days in which to appeal to the President of the United States from the findings of said commissioners, as certified to the Secretary of the Interior. At the end of said sixty days, if no appeal has been taken, or if an appeal has been taken, then upon the determination thereof by the President, the Secretary of the Interior shall certify the amount found by said commissioners, or if modified by the President the amount determined by him, to the Secretary of the Treasury, who shall thereupon place such amount to the credit of all the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota as a part of the permanent fund of said "All of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota provided for in an act of Congress entitled 'An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota,' approved January 14, 1889," and the acts supplementary thereto, and the amount so certified to the Secretary of the Treasury shall draw interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, pursuant to the terms of said acts.

SEC. 3. That any Indian having an allotment within the limits of the national forest created by this act is hereby authorized to relinquish such allotment and permitted to take another allotment in lieu thereof outside such national forest under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and the allotments of any deceased Indians located within the boundaries of said national forest shall not hereafter be disposed of under section 7 of the act of May 27, 1902 (v. 32, Stat. L., p. 245), but the heirs of said deceased Indians shall have the right, with the consent of the Secretary of the Interior and under such rules as he may prescribe, to relinquish to the United States the lands covered by such allotments and to select surveyed, unappropriated, unreserved land within the limits of any of the ceded Indian lands in the State of Minnesota and outside of the national forest hereby created in lieu of the land covered by such allotments, and the lands so relinquished by the Indians or their heirs shall thereupon become part of the said national forest. And the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized, on request of the Forester of the Department of Agriculture, to purchase such relinquishments from said Indians or their heirs and to pay for the same from any moneys received, after the appraisal of timber herein provided for, on account of the sale of timber from the national forest hereby created or from the sale of any other products or the use of any lands or resources thereof.

SEC. 4. That all land in any of said reservations, the Winnibigoshish Indian Reservation, Cass Lake Indian Reservation, Chippewas of the Mississippi Reservation, or Leech Lake Indian Reservation not included in the national forest hereby created as above described, heretofore classified or designated as agricultural lands, is hereby declared to be open to homestead settlement, and any of said land which has been classified as timber land shall be open to homestead settlement as soon and as fast as the timber is removed therefrom, in conformity with the homestead law, except that none of said lands shall be disposed of except on payment of $1.25 per acre.

SEC. 5. That all moneys received from the sale of timber from any of the lands set aside by this act for a national forest prior to the appraisal herein provided for, including all moneys received for timber under sales authorized by existing laws and section 2 of this act, shall be placed to the credit of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota, as provided for in an act of Congress entitled "An act for the relief and civilization of the Chippewa Indians in the State of Minnesota, approved January 14, 1889," and the acts supplementary thereto, and shall draw interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, pursuant to the terms of said acts; and after said appraisal the national forest hereby created, as above described, shall be subject to all general laws and regulations from time to time governing national forests, so far as said laws and regulations may be applicable thereto.

SEC. 6. That the commissioners provided for herein shall receive a compensation of $10 per day each for each and every day actually spent upon the work herein provided for, which shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 7. None of the Indian graves now upon any of the islands or points referred to in this act shall be disturbed, and the Indians shall continue to have the right to bury their dead at such places as they have heretofore used for that purpose, under the rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Forest Service.

SEC. 8. That this act is to take effect and be in force from and after the date of its passage.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill creating in the State of Minnesota a national forest, consisting of certain described lands, and for other purposes."

CHOCTAW AND CHICKASAW INDIAN ROLLS.

Mr. TELLER. I am directed by the Select Committee on the Five Civilized Tribes, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by me March 2, 1908, to report it favorably without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury and the Secretary of the Interior be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to, immediately upon the passage of this resolution, transmit to the Public Printer either the original or a true and correct copy of the original of each and every roll of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians now in the possession and custody of either of said Departments, or of any Bureau, division, or commission thereof or thereunder, prepared by United States officers, agents, or representatives during the years 1830 to 1890, inclusive; and the Public Printer is hereby directed, immediately upon the receipt of said rolls, to print 500 copies of the same the expenses of printing the said rolls to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and immediately upon the completion of the printing of said rolls the original copies shall be returned to the Department from which they were received.

Mr. LODGE. I think, under the rules, a charge on the contingent fund has to go to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. TELLER. I suppose if anyone insists on the resolution going to the committee, it will have to go there.

Mr. LODGE. I think the rules require it.

Mr. GALLINGER. More than the rules, the law.

Mr. TELLER. That would depend on the cost. If it comes within a certain limit, it does not have to be referred.

Mr. LODGE. The rule is that if the cost is more than $500 it shall go to the Committee on Printing; but this is a charge on the contingent fund, and the law requires, the Senator from New Hampshire tells me, that it shall go there.

Mr. TELLER. Let it go to the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that the Senator from Massachusetts is correct. The resolution will be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

DAVENPORT FEMALE COLLEGE.

Mr. OVERMAN. I am directed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1762) for the relief of the trustees of the Davenport Female College, to report it favorably with an amendment, and I submit a report (No. 518) thereon. I ask for the present consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, and, there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The amendment was, in line 7, before the word "dollars," to strike out "three thousand" and insert "two thousand," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the trustees of Davenport Female College, situated in the town of Lenoir, N. C., the sum of $2,000, for injuries done the building and destroying the property of said institution by the Federal soldiers at the close of the late civil war.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DOCUMENTARY HISTORY OF THE CONSTITUTION.

Mr. FLINT submitted the following concurrent resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That of volumes 4 and 5 of the document known as the "Documentary History of the Constitution of the United States," 6,000 copies be printed, of which number 2,000 shall be for the use of the Senate and 4,000 shall be for the use of the House of Representatives.

WIDENING OF BENNING ROAD—ANTIBETTING PROVISION.

Mr. CARTER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 4063) for the widening of Benning road, and for other purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 2, line 17, after the word "hereunder," to insert the following additional proviso:

And provided further, That the said Columbia Railway Company, its successors or assigns, shall remove its tracks to the center of the street when widened when required so to do by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, after line 20, to strike out section 2, in the following words:

SEC. 2. That there is hereby authorized to be expended from the revenues of the District of Columbia an amount sufficient to pay the necessary costs and expenses of the condemnation proceedings taken pursuant hereto and for the payment of amounts awarded as damages; to be repaid to the District of Columbia from the assessments for benefits and covered into the Treasury to the credit of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

And to insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 2. That there is hereby appropriated from the revenues of the District of Columbia an amount sufficient to pay the necessary costs and expenses of the condemnation proceedings taken pursuant hereto and for the payment of amounts awarded as damages; to be repaid to the District of Columbia from the assessments for benefits and covered into the Treasury to the credit of the revenues of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, after line 3, to strike out section 3, in the following words:

SEC. 3. That section 869 of an act of Congress entitled "An act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1901, be amended by striking out the words "in the cities of Washington and Georgetown" and the words in said act "or within said District within 1 mile of the boundaries of said cities."

And in lieu thereof to insert the following:

SEC. 3. That section 869 of an act of Congress entitled "An act to establish a Code of Law for the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1901, be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows: "It shall be unlawful for any person or association of persons to bet, gamble, or make books or pools on the result of any trotting or running race of horses, or boat race, or race of any kind, or on any election, or any contest of any kind, or game of baseball. Any person or association of persons violating the provisions of this section shall be fined not exceeding $500 or be imprisoned not more than ninety days, or both."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. GAMBLE. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of Senate bill 1385.

Mr. FRYE. Is the morning business completed?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It has not been concluded.

Mr. KEAN. Let us have the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The regular order is demanded. If there is no further morning business, the Calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

COMPANIES B, C, AND D, TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY.

Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on Tuesday of next week, the 21st instant, at the conclusion of the routine morning business, I will submit some remarks on the Brownsville affair.

EMPLOYMENT OF CHILD LABOR IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there is no further morning business, the Calendar is in order under Rule VIII. The Secretary will announce the first bill on the Calendar.

The bill (S. 4812) to regulate the employment of child labor in the District of Columbia was announced as first in order.

Mr. KEAN. Let that go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice at the request of the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. BURKETT. I should like to ask for information what object there is in putting the bill over. I have heard no objection to it and yet it always goes over.

Mr. KEAN. I will say to the Senator from Nebraska that I have no objection to it whatever; I am perfectly willing that the bill shall be considered; but I understand that the Senator from Indiana [Mr. BEVERIDGE] desires to be present when it is considered.

Mr. BURKETT. I have never heard any objection to it by anyone.

Mr. KEAN. I have none, and I would be glad to have it taken up and gotten out of the way.

Mr. BURKETT. It has gone over several times.

Mr. KEAN. But on every occasion, I understand, at the request of the Senator from Indiana, who is necessarily absent at the present time.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

The next bill on the Calendar was the bill (H. R. 15372) for the allowance of certain claims reported by the Court of Claims under the provisions of the acts approved March 3, 1883, and March 3, 1887, and commonly known as the Bowman and Tucker acts.

Mr. KEAN. Let the bill go over.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice at the request of the Senator from New Jersey.

LANDS IN SOUTH DAKOTA.

The bill (S. 1385) to authorize the sale and disposition of a portion of the surplus and unallotted lands in the Cheyenne River and Standing Rock Indian reservations, in the State of South Dakota, and making appropriation and provision to carry the same into effect, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 6, to strike out the word "State" and insert "States," and in line 7, after the words "South Dakota," to insert "and North Dakota," so as to read:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, as hereinafter provided, to sell and dispose of all that portion of the Cheyenne River and Standing Rock Indian reservations in the States of South Dakota and North Dakota.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 1, line 7, after the word "the," to strike out the words "county of Schnasse, in said State," and insert:

Following-described boundaries, to wit: Beginning at a point in the center of the main channel of the Cheyenne River on the southern boundary of the Cheyenne River Indian Reservation, in the State of South Dakota, where the range line between ranges 23 and 24 east of the Black Hills meridian intersects the same; thence north on said range line to a point where the same intersects the township line between townships 15 and 16 north; thence east along said township line to a point in the center of the main channel of the Missouri River; thence in a northerly direction along the center of the main channel of said Missouri River to a point where the township line between townships 18 and 19 north intersects the same, and including also entirely all islands, if any, in said river; thence west on said township line to a point where the range line between said ranges 23 and 24 intersects the same; thence north along said range line to the State line between the States of South Dakota and North Dakota; thence west on said State line to a point where the range line between ranges 84 and 85 west in North Dakota intersects the same; thence north on said range line to a point where said range line intersects the center of the main channel of the South Fork of the Cannon Ball River; thence in a westerly direction up and along the center of the main channel of the said river to a point where the same intersects the one hundred and second meridian of longitude; thence south along said one hundred and second meridian of longitude to a point where the same intersects the center of the main channel of the Cheyenne River; thence in a northeasterly direction along the center of the main channel of said Cheyenne River to place of beginning.

Mr. GAMBLE. Mr. President, I submit a substitute for the committee amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In lieu of the committee amendment striking out the words "county of Schnasse, in said State," and inserting certain other words, it is proposed to insert the following:

Following-described boundaries, to wit: Beginning at a point on the one hundred and second meridian of longitude west, where the township line between townships 9 and 10 north intersects the same; thence east on said township line to a point where the same intersects the range line between ranges 24 and 25 east of the Black Hills meridian; thence north on said range line to a point where the same intersects the township line between townships 15 and 16 north; thence east along said township line to a point in the center of the main channel of the Missouri River; thence in a northerly direction along the center of the main channel of said Missouri River to a point where the township line between townships 18 and 19 north intersects the same, and including also, entirely, all islands, if any, in said river; thence west on said township line to a point where the range line between ranges 22 and 23 east intersects the same; thence north along said range line to the northwest corner of section 19, in township 21 north, of range 23 east; thence east on the section line north of sections 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, and 24 to a point where the same intersects the range line between ranges 23 and 24 east; thence north along said range line to the State line betwen the States of South Dakota and North Dakota; thence west on said State line to a point where the range line between ranges 84 and 85 west, in North Dakota, intersects the same; thence north on said range line to a point where said range line intersects the center of the main channel of the South Fork of the Cannon Ball River; thence in a westerly direction up and along the center of the main channel of the said river to a point where the same intersects the one hundred and second meridian of longitude west; thence south along said one hundred and second meridian of longitude west to the place of beginning.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, in section 1, page 3, line 8, to strike out "State" and insert "States," and in line 9, after the words "South Dakota," to insert "and North Dakota, as the same may be located in the said States, respectively;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That sections 16 and 36 of the lands in each township therein shall not be disposed of, but shall be reserved for the use of the common schools of the States of South Dakota and North Dakota, as the same may be located in the said States, respectively.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 3, line 22, to strike out the words "said county of Schnasse" and insert "area described in section 1 of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, page 4, line 7, to strike out the words "boundaries of Schnasse County, S. Dak." and insert "area described in section 1 of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to insert on page 4, line 10, after the word "laws," the following proviso:

Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be surveyed all the lands embraced within said reservations, and to cause an examination to be made of the lands by experts of the Geological Survey, and if there be found any lands bearing coal, the said Secretary is hereby authorized to reserve them from allotment or disposition under the homestead laws, to be disposed of in accordance with the coal-land laws of the United States for the benefit of the tribes in common.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 5, line 4, to strike out the words "a commission consisting" and insert "two commissions, one for each reservation, each commission to consist;" in line 10 to strike out "said" and insert "each" before "commission;" in line 13 to strike out the words "or the other;" and in line 14, after the word "Indians," to strike out the following words:

And the said commissioner last named shall act thereon while the appraisement and classification of the lands is made on the particular reservation to which he belongs, and when the appraisement and classification of the lands is completed on the reservation to which said last-named commissioner belongs another commissioner with like qualification shall be appointed, with like power, to act with the other members of said commission to appraise and classify the lands herein granted on the other reservation.

So as to read:

That the price of said lands entered as homesteads under the provisions of this act shall be fixed by appraisement as herein provided. The President of the United States shall appoint two commissions, one for each reservation, each commission to consist of three persons to inspect, appraise, and value all of said lands that shall not have been allotted in severalty to said Indians, or reserved by the Secretary of the Interior, or otherwise disposed of, and excepting sections 16 and 36 in each of said townships, each commission to be constituted as follows: One resident citizen of the State of South Dakota, one representative of the Indian Bureau, and one person holding tribal relations with one of said tribes of Indians.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 5, line 23, after the word "appointment," to insert "the;" in line 24, after "commissioners," to insert "so appointed for each of the said reservations, respectively;" and in line 25, to strike out the words "said county of Schnasse" and insert "area described in section 1 of this act upon the reservations for which they were respectively appointed, and each commission shall," so as to read:

That within twenty days after their appointment the said commissioners so appointed for each of the said reservations, respectively, shall meet at some point within the area described in section 1 of this act upon the reservations for which they were respectively appointed, and each commission shall organize by the election of one of their number as chairman.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 6, line 4, before the word "commission," to strike out "Said" and insert "Each;" in line 5, to strike out "a clerk" and insert "such clerks and assistants as may be necessary;" and in line 7, after the word "day," to insert "subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior," so as to read:

Each commission is hereby empowered to select such clerks and assistants as may be necessary at a salary of not to exceed $5 per day subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 6, line 9, after the word "appraise," to strike out "by the smallest legal subdivisions of 40 acres" and insert "in 160-acre tracts;" and in line 11, after the word "within," to strike out "the particular reservation first appraised, and after reorganization as above specified the said commission shall proceed to personally inspect, classify, and appraise as aforesaid all the remaining lands embraced within the other reservation hereby granted and conveyed" and insert "each reservation as described in section 1 of this act," so as to read:

That said commissioners shall then proceed to personally inspect, classify, and appraise, in 160-acre tracts each, all of the remaining lands embraced within each reservation as described in section 1 of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 6, line 25, after the word "lands," to insert "and necessary expenses to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior;" on page 7, line 2, before the word "months," to strike out "four" and insert "six;" in line 3, to strike out "commission" and insert "commissions respectively;" and in line 4, to strike out "commission" and insert "commissions," so as to read:

In making such classification and appraisement said lands shall be divided into the following classes: First, agricultural land of the first class; second, agricultural land of the second class; third, grazing land; fourth, timber land; fifth, mineral land, if any, the mineral land not to be appraised. That said commissioners shall be paid a salary of not to exceed $10 per day each while actually employed in the inspection and classification of said lands and necessary expenses to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior; such inspection and classification to be completed within six months from the date of the organization of said commissions respectively. That when said commissions shall have completed the classification and appraisement of all of said lands the same shall be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 4, on page 8, line 11, after the word "act," to insert:

And it is further provided that any lands remaining unsold after said lands have been open to entry for seven years may be sold to the highest bidder for cash without regard to the prescribed price thereof fixed under the provisions of this act, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 6, page 9, line 6, after the words "in the," to strike out "State" and insert "States;" in the same line, after the name "South Dakota," to insert "and North Dakota;" in line 8, after the words "per annum," to strike out "for ten years;" in line 10, after the word "alike," to strike out "that at the expiration of ten years the one-half of the amount so realized from the sale and disposition of the lands herein provided for and deposited as aforesaid to the credit of each of said tribes shall be distributed and paid to said Indians per capita respectively in cash; the balance thereof so," and insert "that the moneys derived from the sale of said lands and;" and in line 21, after the word "same," to insert "annually," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 6. That from the proceeds arising from the sale and disposition of the lands aforesaid, exclusive of the customary fees and commissions, there shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States, to the credit of the Indians belonging and having tribal rights on the reservations aforesaid in the States of South Dakota and North Dakota as the respective tribes may be entitled thereto, which shall draw interest at 3 per cent per annum, the interest to be paid to the Indians per capita in cash annually, share and share alike; that the moneys derived from the sale of said lands and deposited in the Treasury of the United States to the credit of said Indians respectively shall be expended for their benefit under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, and he may, in his discretion, upon an application of a majority of the Indians of either tribe, pay a portion of the same annually to the Indians so applying in cash, per capita, share and share alike, if, in his opinion, such payments will be for the best interests of said Indians.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 7, on page 10, line 5, after the word "at," to strike out "one dollar and twenty-five" and insert "two dollars and fifty;" in line 6, after the words "to the," to strike out "State" and insert "States;" in line 7, after the name "South Dakota," to insert "and North Dakota;" in line 8, after the word "purpose," to insert "as the same are located in the said States, respectively;" in line 10, after the word "said," to strike out "State of South Dakota" and insert "States;" in line 11, after the word "the," to strike out "governor" and insert "governors;" in line 12, after the word "said," to strike out "State" and insert "States, respectively;" in line 13, before the word "hereby," to strike out "is" and insert "are;" in line 14, and after the word "the," to strike out "tract described herein" and insert "area in the respective States described in section 1 of this act," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 7. That sections 16 and 36 of the land in each township within the tract described in section 1 of this act shall not be subject to entry, but shall be reserved for the use of the common schools and paid for by the United States at $2.50 per acre, and the same are hereby granted to the States of South Dakota and North Dakota for such purposes as the same are located in the said States, respectively; and in case any of said sections, or parts thereof, are lost to said States by reason of allotments thereof to any Indian or Indians, or otherwise, the governors of said States, respectively, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, are hereby authorized, within the area in the respective States described in section 1 of this act, to locate other lands not occupied not exceeding two sections in any one township, which shall be paid for by the United States as herein provided, in quantity equal to the loss, and such selections shall be made prior to the opening of such lands to settlement.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 8, on page 10, line 22, before the word "thousand," to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "four hundred and fifteen;" in line 24, after the words "to the," to strike out "State" and insert "States;" in line 24, after the name "South Dakota," to insert "and North Dakota," and, on page 11, line 2, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty" and insert "seventy-five," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 8. That there is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated the sum of $415,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to pay for the lands granted to the States of South Dakota and North Dakota, as provided in section 7 of this act. And there is hereby appropriated the further sum of $75,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the purpose of making the appraisement and classification and allotments provided for herein: Provided, That the same shall be reimbursed to the United States from the proceeds received from the sale of the lands described herein or from any money in the Treasury belonging to said Indian tribes respectively.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GAMBLE. On page 11, line 5, I move to strike out the word "same" and insert in lieu thereof the words "latter appropriation."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 8, page 11, line 5, before the word "shall," it is proposed to strike out the word "same" and to insert "latter appropriation," so that if amended it will read:

That the latter appropriation shall be reimbursed to the United States, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Indian Affairs was, in section 9, page 11, line 21, after the name "South Dakota," to insert "and North Dakota," so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That nothing in this act shall be construed to deprive the said Indians of the Cheyenne River or Standing Rock Indian reservations, in South Dakota and North Dakota, of any benefits to which they are entitled under existing treaties or agreements not inconsistent with the provisions of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GAMBLE. On page 11, line 23, after the word "act," I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the bill it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That Indians residing upon their allotments in townships 16 north of ranges 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, and 31 east shall have the right to use timber in said townships, except on sections 16 and 36, for domestic purposes only as long as the lands remain part of the public domain.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the sale and disposition of a portion of the surplus and unallotted lands in the Cheyenne River and Standing Rock Indian reservations, in the States of South Dakota and North Dakota, and making appropriation and provision to carry the same into effect."

SOUTHERN APPALACHIAN AND WHITE MOUNTAIN RESERVATIONS.

The bill (S. 4825) for acquiring national forests in the Southern Appalachian Mountains and White Mountains was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Forest Reservations and the Protection of Game with amendments. The first amendment was, in section 8, page 5, line 1, after the words "meaning of," to strike out "such action" and insert "this section," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 8. That the jurisdiction, both civil and criminal, over persons upon the lands acquired under this act shall not be affected or changed by their permanent reservation and administration as national forest lands, except so far as the punishment of offenses against the United States is concerned, the intent and meaning of this section being that the State wherein such land is situated shall not, by reason of such reservation and administration, lose its jurisdiction nor the inhabitants thereof their rights and privileges as citizens or be absolved from their duties as citizens of the State.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 9, page 5, line 13, after the word "benefit," to insert "of the public schools and public roads;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 9. That 10 per cent of all money received during any fiscal year from each national forest into which the lands acquired under this act may from time to time be divided shall be paid at the end of such year by the Secretary of the Treasury to the State in which such national forest is situated, to be expended as the State legislature may prescribe for the benefit of the public schools and public roads of the county or counties in which such national forest is situated: Provided, That when any national forest is in more than one State or county the distributive share to each from the proceeds of such forest shall be proportional to its area therein: Provided further, That there shall not be paid to any State for any county an amount equal to more than 40 per cent of the total income of such county from all other sources.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 10, page 6, line 12, before the word "act," to strike out "the" and insert "this;" and in line 15, before the word "subject," to strike out "so;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 10. That the Secretary of Agriculture for the further protection of the watersheds of said navigable streams may, in his discretion, and he is hereby authorized, on such conditions as he deems wise, to stipulate and agree to administer and protect, for a definite term of years, any private forest lands situated upon any watershed whereon lands may be permanently reserved, held and administered as national forest lands under the provisions of this act; but such stipulation or agreement shall provide that the owner of such private lands shall cut and remove the timber thereon only under rules and regulations to be expressed in the stipulation or agreement, for the protection and conservation of the forest thereon; and such stipulation or agreement may in any case provide that the private lands so administered and protected shall during such terms be subject to all the provisions of this act and of the laws, rules, and regulations governing national forests so far as the same may be applicable, and in that case the said private lands shall, during such term, be subject to all such provisions, laws, rules, and regulations.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, will an objection carry this bill over?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. One objection would carry it over.

Mr. TELLER. I am going to make the objection. The bill has been read. I want to make some remarks on it, but I do not care to do so to-day, and so I object to its further consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the bill will go over without prejudice.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Connecticut moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill, notwithstanding the objection. [Putting the question.] The noes seem to prevail.

Mr. TELLER. I think that is rather an unusual motion.

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator from Colorado will permit me to say a word.

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I am very much in favor of this bill, but I think, on the statement made by the Senator from Colorado that he desires to submit some remarks upon it and that he is not prepared to do so now, courtesy to him would require that the bill should go over. I hope the Senator from Connecticut will not press his motion.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I did not understand the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] to say that he desired to make remarks upon the bill. I understood him to say that he had no objection to the bill. If he desires to make any remarks on the bill, of course I shall not insist upon my motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion is withdrawn, and the bill will lie over without prejudice.

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY BILL.

The bill (S. 5307) relating to liability of common carriers to their employees was announced as next in order.

Mr. HALE. I call the attention of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER] to that bill.

Mr. DOLLIVER. I move that that bill be indefinitely postponed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa moves that the bill, the title to which has just been stated, be indefinitely postponed. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HALE. The Senate has already acted upon the matter.

SUSPENSION OF COMMODITY CLAUSE INTERSTATE-COMMERCE LAW.

The joint resolution (S. R. 74) suspending the commodity clause of the present interstate-commerce law was announced as next in order.

Mr. KEAN. Let that go over, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will lie over without prejudice.

NATIONAL BISON RANGE.

The bill (S. 6159) to establish a permanent national bison range was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments. The first amendment was, in section 1, page 1, line 4, before the word "lands," to insert "unallotted," and in line 8, before the word "presented," to insert "to be," so as to make the section read:

That the President is hereby directed to reserve and except from the unallotted lands now embraced within the Flathead Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana, not to exceed 12,800 acres of said lands, near the confluence of the Pend d'Oreille and Jocko rivers, for a permanent national bison range for the herd of bison to be presented by the American Bison Society.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, page 2, line 11, after the words "Secretary of," to strike out "Agriculture" and insert "the Interior," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to inclose said lands with a good and substantial fence and to erect thereon the necessary sheds and buildings for the proper care and maintenance of the said bison; and there is hereby appropriated therefor, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $10,000 or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANNUITIES TO MEDAWAKANTON AND WAHPAKOOTA SIOUX INDIANS.

The bill (S. 2405) for the restoration of annuities to the Medawakanton and Wahpakoota (Santee) Sioux Indians, declared forfeited by the act of February 16, 1863, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LODGE. Let that bill go over, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over, at the request of the Senator from Massachusetts.

SUPPRESSION OF VAGRANCY IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The bill (S. 5505) to define and suppress vagrancy within the District of Columbia, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. The bill was reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia with amendments. The first amendment was, in section 1, on page 2, after line 6, to insert:

Every person known to be a pickpocket, thief, burglar, or confidence operator, either by his own confession or by his having been convicted in the District of Columbia or elsewhere of either of such offenses, and having no visible or lawful means of support, when found loitering around in any building, park, highway, street, avenue, alley, or reservation, steamboat landing, railroad depot, station, banking institution, broker's office, place of amusement, room, store, shop, public place, or car or omnibus or other vehicle, or at any public gathering or assembly. Persons upon whom shall be found any instrument, tool, or other implement used for the commission of burglary or the commission of any other crime against property, or for picking locks or pockets who shall fail to give a good account of the possession of the same, and all persons who by the common law are vagrants whether embraced in any of the aforegoing classifications or not.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, section 2, line 12, after the word "District," to insert:

but nothing contained in section 44 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia shall be so construed as to create or give to the accused, in prosecutions under this act, any right to trial by jury not existing by force of the Constitution of the United States.

So as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That every person in the District of Columbia who shall be convicted of vagrancy under the provisions of this act shall be required to enter into security in a sum not exceeding $500, conditioned upon his good behavior and industry for the period of one year, and if he shall fail to give such security he shall be committed to the workhouse in the said District for a term not to exceed one year. The security herein mentioned shall be in the nature of a recognizance to the District of Columbia, with a surety or sureties to be approved by the police court of the said District, in which court all prosecutions under this act shall be conducted in the manner now provided by law for the prosecution of offenses against the laws and ordinances of the said District, but nothing contained in section 44 of the Code of Law for the District of Columbia shall be so construed as to create or give to the accused, in prosecutions under this act, any right to trial by jury not existing by force of the Constitution of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONFIDENTIAL PAPERS IN THE NAVY DEPARTMENT.

The bill (S. 5616) to amend section 3744 of the Revised Statutes was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to amend section 3744 of the Revised Statutes of the United States by the addition thereto of the following proviso:

Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy may withhold from papers transmitted to the returns office any plans, specifications, or other matter of a confidential nature the publication of which would, in his opinion, be prejudicial to the public interests."

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENSIONS OF NAVAL HOME INMATES.

The bill (S. 5950) to provide for the disposition of pensions due inmates of the Naval Home was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, that bill seems to change present conditions somewhat, and I think that we ought to have some explanation of it. The bill certainly changes the present conditions and terms of paying pensions.

Mr. ALDRICH. I think the bill had better go over, Mr. President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will go over without prejudice, at the request of the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to the bill going over if any Senator objects to it.

Mr. KEAN. Let the report be read.

Mr. BURKETT. I will state that I do not make an objection, and I do not know that I will; but the bill seems to change the law so much from what it is at present that I thought we ought to have some explanation of it.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, let the report be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the report, as requested.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. HALE on April 6, 1908, as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5950) to provide for the disposition of pensions due inmates of the Naval Home, having considered the same, report thereon with a recommendation that it pass.

The bill has the approval of the Navy Department, as will appear by the following communication:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 11, 1908.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith, for the consideration of the committee and such action, if any, as may be deemed advisable, copy of a letter from the governor of the United States Naval Home, Philadelphia, Pa., relative to the provisions of the act of May 4, 1898 (30 Stat. L., 377), requiring persons entering the Naval Home to surrender their pensions while residing therein. The pensions of inmates of the Naval Home are now paid into the naval pension fund, which is used for the support of the Naval Home.

Very respectfully,
V. H. METCALF,
Secretary.

Hon. EUGENE HALE,
Chairman Committee on Naval Affairs, United States Senate.

GOVERNOR'S OFFICE, UNITED STATES NAVAL HOME,
Philadelphia, Pa., December 6, 1907.

SIR: In reading the last annual report of the governor of the Naval Home, since assuming command here, my attention is particularly attracted to the facts stated and the recommendation made in the seventh paragraph thereof, which I quote below in full:

"7. It will be noted since my last report there has been a net decrease of sixteen in membership. The advanced age of the beneficiaries is accountable for the large death rate, but to the small number of those coming into the Home other conditions are responsible. It has come to my notice in several instances that men who are eligible to come here by reason of civil-war service are also eligible for admission to the National Volunteer Home, where they receive not only the benefits of the Home, but their pensions as well. When a man comes to this Home, under the law, his pension is required to be turned in to the fund from which the Home is maintained. This often works a hardship, especially on those who have dependents.

"When a man receiving a pension enters a National Volunteer Home or the National Soldiers' Home in Washington—which latter is to the Army what this Home is to the Navy—he not only receives the comforts of the Home, but also his pension, either immediately or eventually, or he can dispose of it to the benefit of his family, and in certain instances outdoor relief is extended to nonresident members. Practically the same rules and requirements governing admission to the National Soldiers' Home govern this Home. I can not, therefore, see why this institution should be thus discriminated against in the matter of pensions to the inmates. I therefore recommend that Congress be asked to confer on the men who have served the country at sea long and faithfully or been disabled in its service the same privileges and benefits when they come to the Naval Home as are enjoyed by the men who have served in the Army when they are admitted to the Soldiers' Home."

I have the honor to state to the Department that this discrimination in the laws, allowing pensions to the inmates of the Soldiers' Homes and not to the beneficiaries of this Home, is a great injustice to the men who come here, and I earnestly hope that the Department will use its best endeavors to impress upon Congress the need of legislation that will correct this injustice and give to the men who serve the country at sea every benefit that is now or may hereafter be allowed to the men who serve in the Army.

Very respectfully,
JAMES M. MILLER,
Rear-Admiral, United States Navy, Governor.

THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.

Mr. BURKETT. I will say, Mr. President, that as I read the report it seemed to me that the bill did just the opposite of what the report said it should do, and that is why I asked for an explanation. The bill seems to withhold the pension money from sailors who are in this Home, while the report, I observe, says that what is specifically designed to do is to give them the comfort of the pension money. The bill says that it shall be withheld from them until they are discharged. That is the part of it I did not understand.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I do not want to interfere with the passage of the bill, but I should like to ask the Senator from Maine a question or two concerning the measure. I want to ask the Senator from Maine whether the entire rank and file of the Navy are assessed any amount from year to year for the support of this Naval Home? Heretofore the soldiers in the Army have been assessed 12½ cents for the support of the Army Home until a large fund has accumulated, and it is now proposed, in a measure which is pending, to dispense with that assessment, because of this large fund, which is also added to by fines from courts-martial, etc. I should like to have some information about that.

Mr. HALE. I do not know the condition of the fund for the Naval Home.

Mr. WARREN. I supposed from the reading of the report at the desk that it was sought to put the inmates of the Naval Home on a basis with the soldiers of the Army Homes, which is of course perfectly right, but I wondered how the support of the Naval Home is provided for. The support of the Army Home is provided by fines from courts-martial for delinquencies, and so on, and a deduction of 12½ cents per month from the soldiers' pay, which has been assessed for many years. The fund has now reached $4,000,000, or such a matter, and the income from it is enough to carry on the Home and leave something in addition without further assessment. I did not know but what the Senator knew the conditions in respect to the Naval Home.

Mr. HALE. I do not know what the collection of fines amounts to or whether the Home is carried on wholly by such fines and assessments, as is the case with the Army Home.

Mr. LODGE. There is a naval fund, I will say to the Senator, which supports the Home. It is known as the naval pension fund. It has been accumulated from various sources—prize money, assessments, and fines. I think the fund is now large enough to support the Home.

Mr. HALE. I think so, but I am not certain.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly the income of the fund is used for the support of the Home.

Mr. HALE. The extent of it I do not know.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, listening to the reading of the report and the bill there is some doubt in my mind as to just the status of this measure. I dislike very much—and I do not hesitate to say so—to see any precedent established that will take from the soldier his pension for the purpose of meeting any proportion of the expense of a Soldiers' Home or from the naval pensioner his pension for the purpose of maintaining a Navy Home. The pension is the property of the soldier and should be inviolate.

Mr. LODGE. Under the existing law the pensions of the sailors who are in this Home are paid into the naval fund and used for the support of the Home, and this bill puts them on the same basis as inmates of Soldiers' Homes, and provides that their pensions shall be paid to them when they are discharged. It so appears on the face of the report. I am not on the committee which reported the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Is the payment now exacted made with the consent of the pensioner?

Mr. LODGE. What payment?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Is this money taken with his consent?

Mr. LODGE. Now?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. It is taken under the law.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That may be, but I have in my mind a situation which causes me some anxiety with reference to the soldiers in my own State. For instance, in the Michigan Soldiers' Home they have created a posthumous fund arbitrarily taken from the pensioner each month. I do not like it. The soldiers in the Home do not like it. It has created a great deal of friction and a great deal of trouble there, and I should dislike very much to see any confirmatory action taken here with reference to Soldiers' Homes. The pensioner is given his pension as a slight evidence of appreciation on the part of the Government for the service he has rendered in war.

Mr. LODGE. The bill, as I understand from the face of the report, does exactly what the Senator from Michigan wants to have done. Under the law the pensions are now taken from the inmates of the Home and paid into the naval fund and used for the support of the Home. Under this bill they are restored to the inmates of the Home. I can not imagine why the Senator from Michigan wants to keep the law as it is now, when it takes the pensions from the inmates.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I do not want to have the law remain as it is now, nor do I want to have it extended any further. I believe it would be unfair to the pensioner, and I propose to offer an amendment to the pension appropriation bill that these pensions shall not be taken from the soldiers without their consent.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. I incline to the opinion that that is a State regulation as to State homes.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. It is a State regulation.

Mr. WARREN. I think the States draw from the United States under the law $100 for each inmate.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes.

Mr. WARREN. The balance is made up by the State. I think the cases alluded to by the Senator are in State homes under State regulations instead of United States regulations.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. In addition to this amount, they also take from him a portion of his pension and apply it to a fund over which he has no control and about which he knows absolutely nothing. Soldiers resent this interference with their vested rights, and Congress should see to it that they are fully protected in all their rights and property.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Michigan yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Certainly.

Mr. KEAN. I think the Senator from Michigan is rather finding fault with laws of the State of Michigan and not with laws of the United States.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If the Senator from New Jersey will permit me, I am not finding fault with laws of the State of Michigan. It is an exaction which is taken without warrant of law.

Mr. KEAN. But it is in a State Home.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. In a State Home, and it is an unfair exaction, and when the pension appropriation bill comes up I shall offer an amendment providing that no part of the pension shall be taken from the pensioner without his consent. I do not know that I object to this bill, but there is a great deal of confusion between the bill and the report. Of course we are adopting the bill and not the report, but I agree with the latter, and the sentiments of the commanding officer are in harmony with my own and disclose a liberality of view most creditable to him and comforting to his comrades.

Mr. HEYBURN. I call the attention of the committee to a provision on line 8 of page 2 of the bill which, it seems to me, should be amended. It provides:

> In case of the death of any pensioner any pension money due him and remaining in the hands of the Secretary shall be paid to his personal representative—

Now, this is the part—

> if demand is made within three years.

I have within my knowledge cases where the families of old soldiers have not been aware for a longer period than that of the fact that the soldiers were in a Soldiers' Home. Many of the soldiers have reached a period of decrepitude. The period stated in the bill should be increased to at least seven years. Three years is a very short time. Things do not move with that celerity and certainty with those people that they do in ordinary affairs. I move to amend by striking out "three" and inserting "seven." Seven is the statutory period.

Mr. HALE. The committee took the recommendation of the Department. Some period ought to be fixed, as it is in all such statutes, and three years was the recommendation of the Department. Perhaps five years would be better, for the reason suggested by the Senator from Idaho. I think that would be long enough for everybody to find out.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have just learned of the death of an old soldier in California, who went there from our country to a Home, who has been dead five years. They have just learned that fact.

Mr. HALE. I do not think it is very essential about the time. It the Senator insists that seven years is better, I have no objection to it.

Mr. HEYBURN. I think seven would be better. There will be very few cases.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Idaho proposes an amendment which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 8, page 2, it is proposed to strike out "three" and insert "seven," so as to read "seven years."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PRIVATE HOSPITALS, ETC., IN THE DISTRICT.

The bill (H. R. 17305) to regulate the establishment and maintenance of private hospitals and asylums in the District of Columbia was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SITES FOR PUBLIC BUILDINGS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. HEYBURN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 122) authorizing the purchase of grounds for the accommodation of public buildings for the use of the Government of the United States in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

Mr. NELSON. On that I ask for a division.

Mr. HEYBURN. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary called the roll.

Mr. CULLOM. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN]. I do not know whether he has voted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. He has not voted.

Mr. CULLOM. I withhold my vote.

Mr. GAMBLE (after having voted in the affirmative). I voted "yea." I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] and therefore withdraw my vote, not knowing how he would vote.

Mr. DAVIS (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. FULTON]. I did not know when I voted that he is not in the city. I shall have to withdraw my vote.

Mr. MONEY. I suggest to the Senator from Arkansas that he transfer his pair to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN].

Mr. DAVIS. Very well. The pair will be transferred to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN], and I will let my vote stand.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], who is necessarily absent. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. FOSTER. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. I see he is absent. I therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. MONEY. I wish to state that my colleague [Mr. MCLAURIN] is absent on important business.

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 22, as follows:

So Mr. HEYBURN's motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. NELSON. I ask that the bill be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to make present and future provision for the erection and maintenance of public buildings for the accommodation of the Government of the United States within the District of Columbia, the following parcels of land shall be purchased, under the direction of the President of the United States, or taken for public use by due process of law, namely:

All of blocks numbered 226, 227, 228, 229, 230, 256, 257, 258, 259, 260, 292, 293, 294, 295, 349, 350, 380, 381, 382, 461, 575, 576, Reservation A, Reservation B, Reservation C, Reservation D, Reservation 12, according to the official plat of the city of Washington, not already owned in whole or in part by the Government of the United States of America.

SEC. 2. That any and all streets and alleys intersecting the said land so to be acquired as aforesaid may, at such time as the President may deem necessary or expedient, be by Executive order vacated and become and constitute a part of the tract of land so provided to be acquired as aforesaid and subject to such other and further division and subdivision for the purposes of buildings or use as streets, alleys, passageways, or avenues as may be or become necessary in connection with the enjoyment of all of the said lands hereinbefore mentioned for public purposes.

SEC. 3. That the sum of $10,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be used for the payment of said lands or the acceptance or acquiring the title thereto, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 4. That the Secretary of the Treasury, subject to the Executive order of the President, shall be authorized to purchase or acquire said land, or any part thereof, as soon as practicable, at such price as may be fixed by agreement between the said Secretary and the respective owners of said lands and premises, not exceeding the actual cash value thereof, and the payments therefor shall be made to respective owners of such lands upon the requisition of the Secretary of the Treasury, with the approval of the President, upon a release and conveyance of said lands to the United States by good and sufficient deeds so conveying the same after the title of the grantor of said lands shall have been examined and approved in writing by the Attorney-General of the United States.

SEC. 5. That in the event of a failure to agree upon the price of said land or any part thereof between the owner of said land and premises and the Government of the United States, the Attorney-General of the United States is hereby authorized and empowered to commence and prosecute proceedings for the condemnation of said lands and premises in the supreme court of the District of Columbia at any general or special term thereof, and to prosecute such proceedings in condemnation in the manner heretofore provided in the statute. That upon the final determination of such proceedings in condemnation, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized and directed to make payment of the sum of money adjudged to be proper compensation on said land and premises so condemned out of the moneys hereinbefore provided to be appropriated for such purposes.

SEC. 6. That in condemnation proceedings so instituted and prosecuted as aforesaid the value of the land and the value of the buildings or improvements thereon shall be separately estimated.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I think Senators are generally familiar with the terms of the bill and its purpose, and yet it is proper that it should be stated at this time as briefly as is consistent with a clear understanding of what we are proceeding to consider.

The proposition is stated most explicitly in the report accompanying the bill, and on the third page of the report Senators will find a diagram showing exactly the ground that is proposed to be purchased, and as a part of that report the number of square feet of ground to be purchased is set forth explicitly by areas and blocks.

The Government already owns nearly half of this property. It owns in streets, parks, and areas of that kind 1,243,188 square feet, and in addition to that ownership it has 441,961 square feet in vacant blocks. The ownership outside of that which the Government has is 1,952,164 square feet. So it will be seen by adding these figures that the Government owns practically half of the ground included in the area between the Mall and the south side of Pennsylvania avenue.

Mr. GALLINGER. That includes streets.

Mr. HEYBURN. It includes streets and blocks.

Mr. GALLINGER. Does the Senator think he ought to include streets?

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from Idaho yield to me?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I understood when the bill first came up that it would cost about $8,000,000; at the outside, $10,000,000. Now we have a report which shows it will cost $20,000,000, exclusive of the Center Market and the Center Market grounds. Has the Senator any information as to what it will cost to get the Center Market grounds.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes.

Mr. NELSON. How many millions more will it take?

Mr. HEYBURN. I will give the Senator the information almost immediately, because I was approaching the statement of it.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, there is one point that I think ought not to be urged in matters of this kind, and that is that the Government owns the streets of the District of Columbia and that they ought to be counted as an asset of the Government. The Senator in estimating the proportion of land south of the Avenue that the Government owns counts in the streets, which, of course, are open to the citizens of the District of Columbia, and, it seems to me, ought to be excluded from any computation of this kind.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator from Idaho allow me?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. I think the Senator from New Hampshire is in error. While the streets belong to the city for purposes of streets for public use, yet when the city ceases to use the streets as streets for public use, they belong to the adjoining lot owners. Each lot owner owns to the center of the street, subject to the public easement.

Mr. GALLINGER. I was following the statement made by the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I am not prepared to concede that point. That depends altogether on the original act of dedication. I do not think that the individual owns to the center of the street in the city of Washington when the street is vacated, except as Congress shall provide that such ownership shall extend to the middle of the street. But that does not enter into the consideration of this quesion at all. My purpose in stating the area separately was that we might have the entire question fully before us.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator allow me? Assuming that he is correct, that the streets belong to the city, they are not included in this estimate, and the city would have a claim upon the Government if we should take them for a public park or for a row of buildings. We would have to pay the city like we would pay private owners if the Senator's position is correct.

Mr. HEYBURN. I can not concede that. The District of Columbia occupies a peculiar relation toward the Government of the United States. I do not concede for a moment that the Government would be required to compensate the singular and peculiar organization known as "the District of Columbia" for the streets. Section 2 of the bill provides—

That any and all streets and alleys intersecting the said land so to be acquired as aforesaid may, at such time as the President may deem necessary or expedient, be by Executive order vacated and become and constitute a part of the tract of land so provided to be acquired as aforesaid and subject to such other and further division and subdivision for the purposes of buildings or use as streets, alleys, passageways, or avenues as may be or become necessary in connection with the enjoyment of all of the said lands hereinbefore mentioned for public purposes.

Mr. President, the situation, as I understand it, is that it is proposed by this bill to acquire the ownership. The private owners of land within the area covered by the bill are not interested more than other citizens of the United States in what becomes of the streets after they have been compensated for the value of their holdings. If the Government becomes the owner of their lots, and the Senator were right in regard to the ownership appurtenant to the lots extending to the streets, then the Government would succeed to the right of the owner of the lot and become the owner of the property to the middle of the street.

Mr. NELSON. Will the Senator allow me a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SCOTT in the chair). Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. NELSON. Can the Senator from Idaho give us information as to the names of the owners of this property?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; I can.

Mr. NELSON. And where the owners of all this property live?

Mr. HEYBURN. I can give that information, and if it becomes necessary during the consideration of this question, I will be able to do so. But I do not think at this time it is necessary to be diverted from a presentation of the bill in order that I may enumerate a lot of property owners.

I will give all of the essential information, I think, either without or by request, before I am through, in the brief interval I intend to take in presenting the bill. I have the information before me, and I can give the names of the owners and tenants and occupants, and all about it, if it is necessary, but I do not see that it would cast any light upon the consideration of the question here.

Mr. CULLOM. Can the Senator give the amount of feet the Government would actually have to buy?

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes, sir. It is proposed to purchase 1,952,-164 square feet of ground. That is all the private ownership that there is south of Pennsylvania avenue and north of the park or Mall; so we do not need to purchase anything in excess of that number of square feet. I have the information here as to the value which those owners have placed upon their property, and then I have the estimates of others than the owners as to the value of the property, which I will give in their order.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I ask the Senator if he has described the entire territory that it is proposed the Government shall acquire?

Mr. HEYBURN. In the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. He has described it as lying north of the Mall.

Mr. HEYBURN. No; it is north of the park and south of Pennsylvania avenue. That is as nearly accurate as it can be indicated by the points of the compass.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. How far does that extend? Down to the post-office building?

Mr. HEYBURN. It takes everything between the Mall and Pennsylvania avenue, so it will bring the park or the Mall—I do not know why we should call it the "Mall," as the word has very little application to it——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. From the Capitol to the Treasury?

Mr. HEYBURN. From Fifteenth street to First street.

Mr. President, we are entitled under the law providing for the determination of values for the purposes of assessment to place some reliance upon the values which the owners of this property have returned upon which to base the assessment for taxes. I will at this time give that assessed valuation of all the land included within the proposed purchase. The assessed valuation of all the land included within the proposed purchase was a year ago $3,753,906. The assessed valuation of all of the buildings upon the same land was $2,203,800. These assessments are based on a two-thirds valuation of the actual cash value of the property.

Mr. GALLINGER. They ought to be.

Mr. HEYBURN. As I understand the system of levying taxes here, the owner of the property himself states the value of the property, and he does it under oath. I know, of course, and I am not inclined to quibble over it, how those matters go in the general administration of the laws regarding the assessment of property; but still it would certainly not be wise to entirely overlook that fact. Your committee has taken into consideration the weaknesses of human nature in persons placing a value upon their property for the purposes of taxation.

This would make the actual value of the land proposed to be taken, on the basis of taxation, $5,630,856, and the value of the buildings thereon $3,305,700, making a total of $8,936,556.

Now, that represents the conscience of the owners of the property at that time, and I am not going to dwell very much more upon the conscience of the owners of the property as a basis for intelligent legislation upon this subject, but I take it up rather from the practical standpoint from which we must deal with this question.

The blocks proposed to be purchased are enumerated in the bill, and I shall not consider it necessary to do more than refer to them as a whole, because the assessment was ascertained as to each piece of property. Every owner of property was determined first as a basis of getting these figures. I first had every owner determined from the record and had it verified from the tax list, and I had the assessments verified, so that there is, I think, no room for question as to the accuracy of these figures.

As the bill was originally introduced it proposed to appropriate $10,000,000 for the purchase of this property—that is, it proposed to appropriate more than a million dollars in excess of the values that would be placed upon the property by the owners themselves, counting the assessments to be two-thirds of the value. The sum asked for was not based upon the assessment, but upon the value under the rule that it was assessed at two-thirds of its value.

I am ready to leave that for the present, because much time has elapsed since this measure was first proposed and since these figures were made up. But only a few days ago the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] introduced a resolution asking for a statement by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia as to the present value of this property in detail, and that statement having been presented to the Senate it has been made a supplemental or additional report upon the bill under consideration, and it will be found as part 2 of report 9 accompanying the bill. There the area in square feet of each of these identical tracts of land is enumerated, the improvements and the land are separately estimated, and the total valuation now placed upon this property from that source of information is $11,923,000 for the land. Those figures are to be compared with $3,753,906, the valuation placed upon this land by the owners of it for taxation.

The value of the buildings stated by the Commissioners of the District, as late as the 2d of the present month, was $6,460,000, making a total of $18,383,000 as the present valuation placed upon this land for the purposes of the bill under consideration.

The resolution was introduced in order that we might obtain information to be used upon the consideration of this bill. The Commissioners in ascertaining these values had that in mind, and in their judgment this property can be purchased inside of those figures, within the aggregate of $18,383,000.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I am in favor of the Senator's bill, but it is well that we should know precisely what we are doing, and that was the reason why I introduced the resolution. I think a report was made not many years ago suggesting that this property could be obtained for $5,000,000. I then ventured to say I thought the amount ought to be doubled, if not trebled. When the Senator made his report, naming $8,000,-000, I remember that I took occasion to say on the floor of the Senate that, in my opinion, the amount would be over $20,-000,000.

Now, for the purpose of ascertaining with some certainty what the actual cost would be, I introduced the resolution, and the Commissioners were very faithful in ascertaining the facts. The Senator is correct in saying that they report $18,383,000; but the Commissioners made a further suggestion that 5 per cent ought to be added to that for machinery, good will, and so forth, which would make $919,000, making a total of $19,-302,150.

In addition to that, they suggested that they had not ascertained the price of the Center Market, concerning which the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] made an inquiry a moment ago. I have made some inquiry concerning that property, and I think it is safe to say that it can be bought for three-quarters of a million dollars, at the outside. That would bring the total amount to a little over $20,000,000.

On that point, Mr. President, I want to say that the assessed valuation of that property—and I have it from the assessor's books—is $5,922,025, showing that the assessors of the District are either very lax, as I have had occasion to say before, in the performance of their duties, or else the landowners are not returning their property for anywhere near the value it ought to be returned for.

We have had some experience in this line. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER], and myself constituted a commission for the building of the new Senate Office Building, and we found when we came to purchase the land there that we had to pay, I believe, a little over three times the assessed valuation of the property. It was for the purpose of not allowing the Senator from Idaho to be misled in this matter that I introduced the resolution I did and which the Senator is entirely familiar with.

When we come to purchase this property, Mr. President, the chances are that we will be forced into condemnation proceedings, no matter what these owners say now, because we could not purchase one square foot in the square where the Senate Office Building is placed when it was known the Government wanted it. We were forced to condemn it, and that is a very expensive proceeding in the District of Columbia. The chances are that we will pay when we come to make this purchase, I will suggest to the Senator from Idaho, $20,000,000, and I am prepared to cooperate with him and purchase it even at that price.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I am indebted to the Senator from New Hampshire for the statement of additional facts. I was proceeding to read the statement as to the additional 5 per cent proposed by the Commissioners, which is a part of the additional report.

I would call attention to the fact that since the introduction of this bill in the Fifty-eighth Congress the valuation has about doubled. I have before me the figures obtained at that time. The valuation placed upon this property at that time was $8,936,556, and it is now $19,300,000. About two and a half times that property has increased in value, according to the estimates placed upon it from practically the same sources of information.

But you must remember that there has been a considerable lapse of time from the Fifty-eighth Congress to the present, and, as has been suggested by the Senator from New Hampshire, it is usual for the owners of property to take into consideration the fact that some one wants it when they are fixing a value upon it. The value that a man places upon his property for one purpose, when he does not know he has a possible buyer or especially a buyer who feels obligated to purchase it, is one thing; the price he would place upon it when it is proposed to purchase it at whatever must be paid for it, is another thing.

Now, there is not such a discrepancy in these figures as one might naturally expect to find. The difference between the $8,936,000 of the Fifty-eighth Congress and the $19,300,000 of the Sixtieth Congress is not a very great increase, considering the fact that the question of the purchase of the property has been agitated and a market has been in view to excite the cupidity of the owners of this property. So I do not think it is necessary to give very much consideration to the fact that the figures now are larger than they were then. I will undertake to say that in another four years they will be, perhaps, double what they are now, or at least very much greater than they are now. I think Congress in the Fifty-eighth Congress would have saved, perhaps, $5,000,000 or more by enacting the law now proposed to be enacted, and I think if we should fail to enact it at this Congress the price would be probably $25,000,000 before the matter comes before us again for consideration.

These values are not all fictitious, because property has been advancing in this city in value. The only person who has not taken notice of it seems to be the assessor, and I think that probably his attention will be very forcibly called to the fact that the people whose property he is fixing a value upon for the purposes of taxation have made some statements that are worthy of his notice. When he comes to make up a new tax roll they probably will be made aware of that fact.

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator think that in the last few years the property covered by the bill on the south side of the Avenue, either in rent or in productiveness, has increased in value? Is it not a fact that, relatively with other property, it has not kept up with the increase in other portions of the city? Business is moving away from this region rather than increasing in it.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, that is true; and yet in another sense it is not true—when you take into consideration the fact that the owners of the property refuse to sell it for what they would have sold it for three or four years ago. Property is worth what the owners will take for it in an open sale. I have made very extensive inquiry as to the rental south of the avenue and as to the asking price for the property. I want to say now, and it is worthy of consideration before we dispose of the bill, that I think with an appropriation of, say, two or not to exceed three million dollars, with authority that it is to be used for the purpose of tying up that property on the south side of the avenue, there would be very little difficulty in obtaining contracts for the purchase of it within the figures submitted by the Commissioners. That would require, of course, some change in the provisions of the bill, and I have had it in mind, in the discussion of it, to call that feature to the attention of the Senate, so that either myself or another may make some proposition in regard to it, if we feel indisposed to appropriate this sum of money.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, would it not be wiser for the people south of the avenue who are so anxious to sell their property to have them send along proposals to the Government stating what they will sell it for and give us an option on it? Then we would, no doubt, know better, if they are so anxious to sell.

Mr. HEYBURN. That is practically what I was just proposing. The Senator from Minnesota says, "Give us an option." Men do not give anything, I notice, in this class of transactions. Perhaps we could obtain options that would make the ultimate cost of the property very much less were we to pursue that policy, and, if it would be practicable to do it, say, over a space of three years.

But, Mr. President, I notice by a question submitted by the Senator from Minnesota that he is laboring under the impression that we have to buy the market property. We do not. We may, if we choose, in an hour of exuberant generosity, do what we did with the railroad company and buy that which we already own. I have taken some pains to explain the title of both the Pennsylvania Railroad Company's holdings and the market holdings. We own the property, and we own it under conditions that make it available whenever the Government of the United States is disposed to take it.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the Senator will permit me, does he mean to say that the Government can absolutely take possession of that market property and oust the present occupants in law?

Mr. HEYBURN. In law; yes. If the Senator from New Hampshire will examine the status of the title, he will find that I am correct when I make that statement.

Mr. GALLINGER. I think the Senator is mistaken; but admitting that he is right, he knows the Government never would do that. The Senator knows that when we acquire property south of the Avenue we shall have to acquire the market property and pay for it. The Senator knows that.

Mr. HEYBURN. If the Government of the United States ever pays a dollar for the land upon which the Center Market stands, it will pay that dollar for something that it already owns and has paid for.

That was true of the ground on which the railroad depot stood, too. An examination of the titles will disclose that fact. There is no use in disguising it. We wanted to be generous and participate in promoting the building of a splendid new Union Depot, and we put it under that class and called it buying the rights of the railroad company.

I am not proposing that we shall be harsh in dealing with those people. The market building is a shell; and when one is acquainted with the talk that has been going around among the very men who own it as to the necessity of substituting some other building for it, it is not difficult to understand that the value of that property is nominal.

As to our right to take it, it is undoubted. As to the wisdom of doing it and the manner of doing it, that is a matter for consideration. It is now proposed, and the initial steps have been taken, to secure a tract of land lying equally convenient to the same element of people who patronize that market for the purpose of establishing a market that will afford equal convenience. If the Government purchases this property and takes possession of it, that undoubtedly will be carried out coincident with the taking down of those buildings. So by the time the Government will want to take possession of the property the new market will be under full operation. I have had careful inquiry made.

There are many men interested in this Center Market proposition who will hail with pleasure the day when we do it. So it is not an obstacle, and it is not necessary to use any large sum of money, in order to feel that we were dealing generously with those who have had the benefit of the use of the Government property for a great many years.

Now, Mr. President, that is the status of the property, and those are the figures. We have no cause to reject a measure of this kind because we have not the money or that we have to raise it by taxation. The Government of the United States has more money deposited drawing no interest in three banks I could name now than will buy this land and pay every cent cash for it. It is just a question of drawing a check for it.

Mr. President, that is about the status of this bill. The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT], now occupying the chair, a few days since gave us a vast amount of very useful information bearing upon the question of the necessity for this legislation. We are paying interest on more than the sum sufficient to purchase this property in the nature of rentals in this city now. We are renting buildings that are unsafe and unsanitary at rates far in excess of the rents that would be paid by private individuals.

Since I have been a member of this body, rooms filled with valuable papers and records and documents of the United States upon which the title of millions of acres of lands rests were burned up and destroyed utterly, and so far as I have been able to ascertain no duplicates are available of those papers. That is not the way to house a great Government and to take care of its business affairs.

This property should be acquired if it is suitable for the purpose, and I think there is a very slight sentiment to the contrary, if any. It should be acquired at as early a day as possible, it should be cleared of the present buildings, and it should be converted into a park, a part of the Mall. In other words, it should be brought up to the Avenue; and then we can take up for consideration the question what we will do with it, how much money we will expend, and in what manner we will expend it for the purposes or uses of the Government.

I have not accepted any of the many proposals that have come to me to incorporate in the bill, provisions for the disposal of this property after it is acquired, because I did not desire to embarrass this measure by the consideration of any such questions.

First get the property. It is becoming disreputable. The property south of Pennsylvania avenue is deteriorating in character, whether in value or not, and it is not a credit to this great nation that it lies here binding together the executive, the legislative, and the judicial branches or houses of the Government. It is getting more sordid every year under our eyes.

What are the legitimate functions of a Government but to take care of questions of that kind with becoming dignity and business sense?

I have in mind a plan for the use of this property, but it is not now before the Senate. I will only suggest it in order that it may not appear that I am seeking only to purchase the land to lie there to be used or not to be used or to be adapted to uses or not. I have taken some pains to ascertain what can be done with it. I know it is charged that it is a swamp. But the day when we were afraid of swamps has passed by. I remember when a stream ran down between here and what is now known as the Metropolitan Hotel, across Pennsylvania avenue. I think I remember before Pennsylvania avenue was paved, and I am a young man. The conditions that we have that are accounted so beautiful and that we boast of are only very recent. In these days of cement structure you can build as substantial and lasting a building on the bottom of the mud of the Potomac River as you could on solid rock fifty years ago. In these days of cement low ground is no objection. The line of buildings to be constructed between the Capitol and the Executive Mansion and the Executive Departments of the Government could be thrown up on elevated terraces as the front of this Capitol is and you would forget that it ever was low ground.

It is not proposed to set them down in the mud, like the post-office building and the new District building were set down level with the ground. In these days of intelligent architecture I think no one would propose such a thing. But the ground upon which these buildings are to be set would be first hardened by cement and the foundations made perfect. There is no difficulty about it at all. The buildings would be set on elevated terraces, and the traffic that passes between the north and south of this city would go through at convenient streets, not streets as frequently as we have them now, with alleys intersecting the grounds east and west. All those would be wiped out. In the plan of improvement just enough streets to afford convenient traffic from the north to the south would be adopted, because it would be all the Government's. In reply to the Senator who propounded the inquiry as to why we should count the streets, I will state that the streets would be a part of the Mall, just as the old streets were a part of what is now the Mall.

Mr. President, sometimes a picture helps, and in order that it may appear more definitely and plainly what may be done with this I have had a very competent architect make a drawing of this ground, which gives a suggestion that I commend to the attention of Senators. I have brought it in. That drawing [exhibiting] represents a series of buildings on the lines I have suggested, set high upon such terraces as would take them up out of the low ground that, in its natural condition, lies on that side of Pennsylvania avenue [illustrating] and make it attractive and useful, so that you might pass from the War or the Navy or the Treasury Department or the Executive Mansion to the very Capitol of the United States without ever going down off of the terrace at all. The traffic would flow beneath your feet, and you would pass from one Department to another, putting the State Department and the Attorney-General's Department up convenient to the Treasury and the White House, commencing at Fifteenth street, and following down and putting a new face on the post-office and the city building on Pennsylvania avenue, if you please. An architect would make you the working and practical plans over night for the doing of it which would make that such a line of buildings as no city and no government in the world has in which to house the Government. Does not that seem to be a reasonable proposition? The cost of the buildings can be determined when we come to consider what we will do with this property. But first let us acquire it. If we bought it only for a park it would be a good purchase. We have been paying millions of dollars for additions to the parks. We have the Rock Creek Park. Every few days during this session some bill carrying an appropriation of hundreds of thousands of dollars, and in some cases of millions of dollars, has been passed under the five-minute rule—under Rule VIII—without any more consideration than is ordinarily given measures under that rule. Such property is never intended to be used except for ornament and comfort and for the beautification of our city.

We are here to-day presenting a proposition that is to wipe out a sordid condition that lies under our eyes and to acquire at a fair price a property that connects the branches of the Government on this great avenue, which is one of the most historic avenues in the world, and thus connect the Government Departments and house them as they should be housed, and yet we quibble over the question as to whether it will cost ten or nineteen or twenty-nine million dollars. Let us appropriate the whole sum now and put it to work, representing the purchase of this property; let us draw it from the source where it is lying idly, so far as the Government is concerned, and drawing no interest; let us use enough of it, whatever it may be, to purchase this property and own it, and then consider, as the landlord, what we will do with it. That is the proposition contained in this bill. The details are not difficult to work out. Having kept the question of the use to be made of this land, or the manner of its use out of the bill, the single question is, Shall we buy this property at a fair price? We have methods for purchasing property that are recognized as sufficient; but when we have the property, we will no longer need to scatter buildings here and there over the city, some in brick, some in tile, some in plaster, and some in stone, so that you must have a guide to find them. Let us have the Government of the United States, so far as the machinery of the Government is concerned, housed in a compact form, and let us beautify this city so that we can show it with pride to those who come here. Let the old landmarks south of the Avenue be memories and the new temples of the Government be the glory of the age.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I do not intend to enter into any extended discussion of this measure, but I regard it as a matter of great importance, and I do not feel that it ought to have an indifferent or perfunctory consideration.

I might say I have been here in Washington a great many years as a member of the Senate and as a Member of the other House, and I have noticed in years past that whenever the real-estate men of Washington get any property which is dead or depreciating, they are always anxious to unload it on the Government. I remember some years ago, in an appropriation bill here, there was contained an appropriation for the purchase of the old Union Building, on G street, and the old Globe Building, down on Pennsylvania avenue, at four times what those buildings could possibly have been sold for to any private individual. Through the efforts of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] and myself those items were left out of the bill, but somehow or other they managed to get the Government to rent those buildings. How they worked it the Lord only knows. They get some bureau officer or some Department officer or some inferior officer to say that some additional quarters are needed, and then they go and rent such rookeries as the old Union Building and the old Globe Building and get enormous sums in the way of rent from the Government.

What does this bill mean? There is no need of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] going into the question of what this property is taxed at or what it is assessed at. That does not cut any figure at all in the case. Neither is the estimate furnished here by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia any criterion, for the reason that we know by experience in all the other cases where we acquired property that these real-estate men, when they find the Government wants property, get up on a high horse and ask an enormous figure for it. If they do not get their price they compel the Government to resort to condemnation proceedings. Then one set of these real-estate men go into court and swear for the other set, and so the Government is mulcted in enormous sums. I have not seen the figures, but I wish we could have the figures that were paid for the site on which the House Building is put or for the site on which the Senate Building is put. I venture to say that the figures for those two buildings together amounted to millions of dollars.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. NELSON. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. Concerning the Senate building, I will say to the Senator from Minnesota that an appropriation bill carried the sum of $750,000 for the purchase of the land and the construction of a building.

Mr. NELSON. Yes.

Mr. GALLINGER. At that time I suggested to certain Senators that there would not be much left toward the construction of a building, and when the juries of condemnation got through finding the value of that land, they disposed of $748,500 of the $750,000, an amount three times and a little over, I believe, the assessed valuation.

Mr. NELSON. Leaving about $2,000 for the construction of the building?

Mr. GALLINGER. I believe that was the amount.

Mr. NELSON. Now, Mr. President, what is the character of the property which it is sought to have us buy, or which these real estate men want to unload on the Government of the United States? I wish Senators would go over to the Congressional Library, go into the chart room there, and look at the early charts of the city of Washington. Should they do so, they would see that in the early days a big swampy creek came from the northwest, with several tributaries, and passed at the foot of the Capitol. By the way, the statesmen of those days had to cross that creek on a wooden bridge, and it is said that sometimes of an evening, when they had been out to late dinners, they fell over the bridge into the creek. [Laughter.] That creek, when it passed the foot of the Capitol, turned west and debouched somewhere between the Washington Monument—what is known as the "White Lot." The Center Market and a good deal of this particular property lies over that creek or on the marshy land that surrounds it.

Only the other day we had evidence of that, when they started in to dig for the foundation for the Grant Monument down here in the Botanic Garden and they struck old Tiber Creek. When they got down there they found that the place they were digging in and where they were going to erect the Grant Monument was in the bed of the Tiber. That creek ran along somewhere about where the Center Market is, and along the side of it was swampy and marshy ground. Somewhere about Eleventh or Twelfth streets another creek came down from the northwest. All of this ground, or practically all of it, was simply a marsh, a bog, and a part of it the bed of the old Tiber. This is the property they are asking us to buy for the Government, where we will not only have to spend millions to acquire the property, but to secure a foundation we shall have to spend millions more than we would have to spend at any other place in the city.

If the Government wanted this land for a grass meadow or for a mall, and could get it within a reasonable sum of what it is actually worth, it would not be so bad. This property, as a matter of fact—and Senators who have been here a number of years know it—is inevitably depreciating in rental value year by year. Business is all the time drifting from Pennsylvania avenue to the northwest. When I came here as a Member of the other House in 1883 there were very few business houses on F street between the Pension Office and the Treasury Department. Most of the buildings there were occupied as residences. Now there is not a residence there, except in the upper stories. The lower floors are devoted to business. If you went farther up the street the buildings were all residences in those days. Within a few years the section between the Interior Department—or what some call the Patent Office—and the Treasury Department has become a business street, and business houses are now gravitating away up on New York avenue. In short, business is moving north and northwest, and the property it is now proposed to purchase has become less and less valuable for rental purposes.

Take the two or three hotels, for instance, that stood near the old Pennsylvania depot, right in front of the people who came from the trains. They had a good business in catering for transients. Now it is all gone, because the depot has been removed.

There is no use of mincing this matter. We all know that a good deal of this proposed purchase is a part of the slums of the city, and we know the rest is as unproductive and as undesirable property as can be found anywhere. If the real-estate men who are so anxious to unload this property onto the Government of the United States are willing to sell it and will come forward and make a binding agreement in writing that they will sell it to the Government of the United States, it is all right to get it and acquire it for the purposes of a mall or a park. But there is another purpose in this bill, and that is to plant our public buildings in that swamp, in the lowest part of the city; to have them arranged from the foot of Capitol Hill to the Treasury Department like a row of Lombardy poplars, when we have so much high, dry ground upon which public buildings might be erected. We have opposite the Congressional Library and across the park from the Capitol good high ground that would not require the expenditure of hundreds of thousands of dollars to get safe and sound foundations. Upon that site we ought to have a building for the Department of Justice and the Supreme Court.

But the most monstrous part of this whole plan, to my mind, Mr. President, is the proposition to put our public buildings in that low, swampy, and most disagreeable part of the city—to put them in a row there on dress parade like one of Frederick the Great's veteran armies of giants.

The post-office building was put down there, and how does it look, away down in that hollow? It looks shabby and disreputable; it looks like one of those old dismantled feudal castles that you find in the province of Normandy and in some parts of England. If they had put the post-office building up near Judiciary square, on high and dry ground in the city, it might have been an ornament, and it would have served the people much better than down on that low, marshy street.

The District Commissioners have sent us in an estimate of nearly $20,000,000 for the purchase of these squares, and it does not include the Center Market property. That is their estimate of what they think we can get it for. I said at the outset, and I still adhere to my opinion, that if this measure goes through we shall, in most cases, have to resort to condemnation proceedings, and this property will cost us, including the Center Market, over $50,000,000. Instead of agreeing with the Senator from Idaho, who estimated that this land could be purchased for eight or ten million dollars, the District Commissioners in their report show that it will require at least $20,000,000, and there is no guaranty that it can be purchased even for that price. They have gone around and seen the owners, but what guaranty have we that they will take any such price as the Commissioners have reported?

I should be very glad to know who the owners of record of this property are and what rental they are getting for it. Then we might know where we stand, and we might know who the parties are outside of Congress who are so vitally interested in the passage of this bill.

I reiterate that if it is desirable to acquire this property for the purpose of extending the Mall up to Pennsylvania avenue, and for no other purpose, and these real-estate men will get together and through some committee make a binding offer to Congress of what they will sell it for, then we shall know where we are; otherwise, if we pass this bill, we shall be at their mercy, and in nine cases out of ten, if they do not get the price they want, they will, as I have said, compel us to go into court and resort to condemnation proceedings.

There are some men who are so constituted that the matter of millions does not worry them. It seems a small matter when you come to handle public money. It may seem small to the Senator from Idaho here, but I venture to say that if he went up into the State of Idaho, among his own people, and talked about twenty or thirty million dollars they would think it a pretty big sum. I think we are here as the representatives and the trustees of the Government, and we ought not to do anything other in a matter of this kind than we would be willing to do for ourselves as a good business proposition.

Mr. President, there is no need of being in haste about this matter. As I said a moment ago, business has been for years drifting to the north and northwest, and in half a dozen years more, especially if the police in this city do their duty, a large share of the buildings south of the avenue will be vacant, and we ought to be able to get the property for a song. It is not a property that increases in value or grows in value in the very nature of the case.

Take the site that the District of Columbia purchased for the erection of the municipal building. For years that was a patch of ground occupied by a dismantled and destroyed power house. The brick and the ruins lay there for years; the property was unsalable; there was nobody they could unload it on except the Government, and they finally unloaded it onto the United States for, I think, nearly half a million dollars. How much more reasonable and how much better would it have been to have erected that building upon the high hill right near where the District building is to-day, right on the corner there opposite the present quarters of the District Commissioners. We should then have had a building on high, dry, and firm ground, and it would have been on Judiciary square, right near where the old District building is, instead of being on the low ground down on the avenue. It was a rich plum to the power-house people. I have seen such rich plums since I have been here in Washington passed around among the real-estate men. I for one, Mr. President, am tired of it, and do not feel like being worked by these real-estate men.

Mr. HEYBURN. I now move, it being after 2 o'clock, that the bill which is under consideration be taken up regularly for consideration. I desire that it shall become the unfinished business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr PERKINS in the chair). The Senator from Idaho moves that the bill under consideration be taken up for consideration. The question is on that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. I now ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business may be temporarily laid aside.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Idaho asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside. Is there objection?

Mr. NELSON. I object, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Minnesota objects.

Mr. HEYBURN. Then we shall have to proceed with it.

Mr. HALE. I think the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], on reflection, will see that there is nothing to be gained by his objection to the request of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN]. On the motion of the Senator from Idaho the Senate has agreed that this measure shall be the unfinished business, and the objection of the Senator from Minnesota prevents any other Senators from getting considered matters on the Calendar in which they are interested. The bill of the Senator from Idaho has already been made the unfinished business.

Mr. NELSON. In that view of the case, I do not want to prevent other Senators from having bills considered, and I withdraw my objection.

Mr. BACON. Then I will make the objection, Mr. President, and I will state frankly my reason for doing so. I have no objection to the bill being considered and passed upon; but there are other matters of legislation that ought to be considered, and so long as this bill can be held as the unfinished business there is no opportunity to consider any other bill except under Rule VIII, or Rule IX, if we should exhaust the matter that is contained on the Calendar under Rule VIII. There are important matters before the Senate that ought to be considered, and my objection is made for the purpose that this bill may be proceeded with and disposed of in order that we may get to something else.

Mr. HALE. I suppose, Mr. President, as frequently happens in the Senate, that the Senator in charge of the bill which has been made the unfinished business does not desire now to go on with it. Almost always when that condition arises in the Senate, for the convenience of Senators who want other things considered, the unfinished business has been laid aside.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Maine yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. With the permission of the Senator from Maine, I understand that in this instance there are Senators who desire to go on and debate this bill.

Mr. HALE. No.

Mr. BACON. If there is no one who desires to speak, of course that is a different matter; but I understood that the junior Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] desired to speak.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. HEYBURN. I should be pleased if Senators desire to continue the consideration of this bill and to speak to it to-day. It was only on the assumption that no one desired at this time to speak that I ask that the bill be laid aside temporarily. I am ready to vote on it.

Mr. BACON. If there are any Senators who desire to speak at any time on this bill and who desire to postpone for their convenience, that is another matter; but if there are no Senators here who will signify that it is their desire to be heard and that it is not convenient for them to be heard now, then we should proceed with its consideration.

Mr. HEYBURN. It is ready for a vote, then.

Mr. BACON. If any Senator shall say that he desires to be heard upon this matter, and that it is inconvenient for him to be heard to-day, it is the universal rule that we should, as a matter of courtesy, yield to his convenience in that matter, and I have no disposition whatever to vary such a proper observance of the courtesies of the Senate, and if there is any Senator here——

Mr. HEYBURN. I will say to the Senator——

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator will pardon me until I finish my sentence—if there is any Senator here who will state in his place that he desires to debate this bill and that it is not convenient for him to do so to-day, I will withdraw the objection.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will say, Mr. President, that when the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT] left the Chamber, anticipating that this bill would be under discussion further, he told me that he desired to say something in regard to it, and he thought he would be back in time to do so. He has not yet returned to the Chamber. While I am not authorized in his behalf to make any request at all, I merely state the fact for what it is worth.

Mr. BACON. I understood the Senator from West Virginia to have spoken very fully and very forcefully upon this very question, but of course if the Senator——

Mr. HEYBURN. I will not press my request for unanimous consent. I am ready to proceed.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator is prepared to say that the Senator from West Virginia desires to be heard and is not now present, I will withdraw the objection.

Mr. HEYBURN. I would not feel justified in saying that, because it was a casual request made by the Senator as he passed me, but whether or not he really desired to speak or to have the question kept open I do not know. However, I am ready to proceed with the bill.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator is ready to proceed with it, I have nothing more to say.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. On page 2, line 23, I move to strike out "ten" and insert "twenty."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, section 3, line 23, before the word "million," it is proposed to strike out "ten" and insert "twenty," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 3. That the sum of $20,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be used for the payment of said lands or the acceptance or acquiring the title thereto, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I propose that amendment, because it conforms to the estimate of to-day. The sum of $10,000,000 was as appropriate at the time this bill was first introduced as the sum of $20,000,000 is now. I therefore propose to amend the bill by inserting "twenty."

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, I am a member of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, but I was not present when this bill was considered. Had I been present, I should have cast my vote against its being favorably reported. We have just built an Office Building for the House of Representatives, costing four or five million dollars, and we are now building an Office Building for the Senate, to cost an amount almost equal to that sum. We have erected a building for the District of Columbia, costing four or five million dollars, and now we are attempting to pass a bill carrying $20,000,000 to buy ground on which to locate buildings for the Government hereafter. We do not know when we will utilize it. We do not know what part of it we will utilize at an early day. To attempt to buy all this land at the present time, not knowing when you are going to utilize it, when you are going to erect buildings on it, or what part of it you are going to utilize, is a very serious matter.

The interest on $20,000,000 is worth considering. It strikes me we have almost reached the point in the Senate where we are reckless in regard to appropriations. We have been told that we are to give a hundred million dollars this year for the Navy, and we know we have already given $100,000,000 for the Army. We are told that we are to give a hundred and fifty or a hundred and sixty million dollars for pensions.

Mr. President, will the Senator in charge of this bill tell us when we are going to build on this land? You are going to buy it to-day and pay for it; and then you are going to let it lie there for the next year and the next and the next and the next.

When are you going to utilize it? We had better buy the ground necessary for one building as we desire to erect it, and then wait a while.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CLAY. With pleasure.

Mr. HEYBURN. I merely desire to answer the question the Senator propounded. That, of course, is a question which no member can answer. It is a question for Congress to determine, and I am willing to trust the wisdom of Congress to deal with that property after we own it.

Mr. CLAY. I have understood that we own next to the Riggs Bank a suitable piece of ground on which to erect a building for the Department of Justice. It is a splendid location. Now, here we are starting in to-day to buy different tracts of land, to cost $20,000,000, with no plans for the future. We have made no plans as to when we will build. We have no recommendations except from the committee in regard to it.

Look how we have jumped. When the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds was in session it considered this matter, in my absence; I was at home sick. The committee concluded to give $10,000,000, and here to-day it comes forward, in the twinkling of an eye, and adds ten million, without that sum ever having been considered by the committee. As the Senator from Minnesota has said, millions of dollars in the Senate amount to nothing.

Mr. HEYBURN. I suggest to the Senator from Georgia that we are not appropriating any arbitrary sum to be paid for this property. We are providing a sum large enough to meet whatever the occasion demands.

Mr. CLAY. My information is that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds had an estimate that this property would cost $10,000,000, and after the committee sat there and considered these different pieces of property it concluded that $10,000,000 was the sum necessary to buy them. Now, you have a report from the District Commissioners, and that report was filed here a few days ago, and without the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds ever considering the question, as I said a while ago, in the twinkling of an eye you raise the sum $10,000,000. I do not hesitate to say that I believe with the Senator from Minnesota that before the scheme is through, before the ground necessary to carry out your plans is secured, it will cost you $50,000,000. We ought to deal with the public funds in a more prudent and careful way. The men who cultivate the farms, who produce corn and wheat and cotton, and who are the great producers of this country and who pay the taxes, ought to be considered as well as those who consume the taxes.

Mr. CLAPP. Will the Senator from Georgia pardon me?

Mr. CLAY. With pleasure.

Mr. CLAPP. I want to remind the Senator from Georgia that in his discussion of this matter he is losing sight of the interest of the men who are seeking to sell depreciating property to the United States. If their interest should be considered, then we might find some little reason for entering upon this proposition.

Mr. CLAY. I think the suggestion of the Senator is a wise one. Mr. President, did you know that during the present session of Congress we have passed through the Senate bills appropriating $1,200,000 for parks? And I believe in parks. I believe in the beautiful city of Washington. But we should not become reckless in regard to public expenditures. Those for this year will be the greatest in the history of the Republic. We were told yesterday that we must have four battle ships, which will cost $40,000,000. We are told by the chairman of the House Committee on Appropriations that the appropriations this year will be greater than during any other period of our history. Unless we curb these expenditures and scrutinize these items before the Appropriations Committees and the various other committees serious results will follow. If we go at the rapid pace with which we have gone during the last eight or ten or twelve years, the time will come in ten or twelve years more when you can not raise enough money in the United States to run the Government.

I do not believe we ought to pass the pending bill at this time. We are told that in a few days more Congress is to adjourn, and we are told by the Senator in charge of the bill that he does not know when this land will be utilized. It is true there are a swarm of real-estate men in Washington always trying to sell Congress something, and they begin at one figure and they rise to another, and then to another, and they are very persuasive and generally have their way.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. CLAY. Certainly.

Mr. HEYBURN. It would have given me pleasure to have completed answering the question which the Senator asked, but the Senator himself had something to say, so that I did not complete my answer.

I started to say that inasmuch as it would be necessary to acquire the property before it was used, it was perhaps wise at this time to give our first inquiry to the question of acquiring it, having in mind that Congress would be as wise to-morrow as to-day and would make proper provision for its use.

If the Senator will permit me further——

Mr. CLAY. Certainly.

Mr. HEYBURN. In regard to this swarm of real-estate agents, I have never had a real-estate agent see me, nor have I seen one in regard to it, and, so far as I know, there are no real-estate agents who have any interest in it whatever. I have absolutely kept away from the business side of this proposition, except so far as was necessary to ascertain the facts.

Mr. CLAPP. I think the opponents of the bill will concede the latter suggestion of the Senator.

Mr. HEYBURN. I did not hear the remark of the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. CLAY. This swarm of agents——

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator has yielded to me.

Mr. CLAY. In one moment.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator has already yielded.

Mr. CLAY. I yield to him.

Mr. HEYBURN. I simply claim that ordinary recognition not to be taken off my feet with half a sentence in my mouth.

Mr. CLAY. I have no desire to take the Senator off his feet.

Mr. HEYBURN. The Senator from Minnesota made some remark, and I stated that I did not hear it. I request to be informed what it was.

Mr. CLAPP. I understood the Senator from Idaho to say, in explanation of the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia as to real-estate agents, that he had kept away from the business end, as I understood the expression, of this matter; and I rose and said that the opponents of the bill would agree with him on that.

Mr. HEYBURN. That would leave me stand in a very unfair light. The Senator quoted a part of my remarks, but it was not the sentence that I stated at all. I said I had kept away from them except so far as was necessary to be advised or to advise myself for the purpose of presenting this bill. Now, to quote half of a man's sentence and then make a bright and shining reply to it does not represent fair debate.

Mr. CLAY. I presume the real-estate men knew that the distinguished Senator from Idaho was a strong advocate of this measure, and it was not necessary to secure his influence in favor of the passage of the bill. Real-estate men generally go to those who are opposed to their measures. I did not mean to say that any real-estate man had used any improper influence upon any member of this body in favor of the passage of this or any other bill. In fact——

Mr. SCOTT. May I ask the Senator from Georgia a question?

Mr. CLAY. In one moment. I want to conclude my sentence. In fact, I do not believe the Senate is capable of being influenced improperly upon any subject. But persuasion and friendship and cordial relations sometimes lead us to believe when we otherwise would not believe.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. CLAY. I do.

Mr. SCOTT. The Senator from Georgia, I take it from his remarks, would advocate the Government delaying the purchase of this property until we grow a new crop of real-estate agents. The Senator from Georgia never saw a real-estate agent, I presume, who was a good one, who did not try to get all he could for property he had for sale. If the Senator advocates waiting until we get a conservative lot of real-estate people, who will offer this property at half price, we will wait a long time.

Mr. CLAY. So far as that is concerned, I want to say to the Senator that he is chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and I have served on that committee with him. I have found him to be a very useful and industrious member. When this proposition came before the committee, the committee had estimates made in regard to the value of the property. We had men carefully examine and report in regard to its value, and the committee found that its value was $10,000,000, and the committee reported a bill to the Senate carrying those estimates. Now, in thirty-three or thirty-four days the value of that property has increased from $10,000,000 to $20,000,000, and there is another piece of property considered very valuable, I am informed, necessary to be purchased to carry out this plan, and I am advised that they ask $15,000,000 for it. That piece of property has advanced nearly double since this scheme was discussed in the Senate.

I saw a piece of property here purchased as a park. As the result of the discussion of the question of the Government buying the land, it increased in value twofold in less than three years. If we are going to locate the public buildings in a certain section of the city, and group them together, before we ever attempt to do it, before we discuss it in any way whatever, we ought to get options on the property. Observation teaches me that in my State, and it is that way I presume in other States, when Congress proposes to erect a public building, even in a small town, the real estate doubles in value in six months. We should deal with propositions of this kind as thoughtful, prudent business men. Advertise to the real-estate agents of the city where you are going to locate buildings to cost $100,000,000, and that you are going to buy those lots for that purpose, and you may rest assured that you will pay double the value of the land before you get it.

The Senator tells us he has no idea when the Government intends to build on these lots. I presume it will be twenty-five years before we utilize all this ground. I presume you will erect one building one year and three years later you will erect another building. We have heretofore been remarkably industrious in looking after that interest in this city. But to go forward to-day and buy all this land in a lump, which in all probability will cost us forty or fifty million dollars, without knowing when you are going to utilize it, is not, in my judgment, a good business proposition.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, it certainly is peculiar to me in some respects to see gentlemen who appear before me occasionally for public buildings in cities of fifteen hundred or two thousand population, for which they want appropriations of from sixty to a hundred and fifty thousand dollars for public buildings, and they can not possibly see how their city can get along for another year without the public building, and yet they oppose this bill. In a feeble way I tried to show to the Senate last Monday the condition of the city of Washington, so far as concerns the way the business of the Government is carried on. I will stake my reputation as a business man that there is not a Senator on this floor, that there is not a business man in the city of Washington, who can truthfully controvert the figures and the estimates I gave last Monday.

Mr. President, the Government has money, as the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] has truly said, lying in bank to-day which could be used for the purchase of this property in the city of Washington and the erection of the necessary buildings for the proper conduct of the business of the Government without costing the Government a single cent for interest. We are getting no interest on the money as it is. The money is lying idle. We have plenty of workingmen who to-day are idle. Why not have this great Government of ours put them to work upon the public buildings that are so badly needed to properly house the Departments of the Government?

It is with little patience that I listen to some of the discussions of the question of buying this property and erecing the buildings. No one can sustain by any logical argument the contention that it is not the proper thing to buy this property and to buy it at once.

Any Senator who has observed the price of real estate in the city of Washington knows of his own knowledge that for the past ten or fifteen years real estate has advanced all over the city, notwithstanding what my distinguished friend the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP] has said in regard to land south of the Avenue. The property is all advancing, and the sooner the Government secures the property necessary for the erection of proper buildings to care for the business of the Government the cheaper it will get it.

Mr. President, any man who has ever traveled, who has ever visited Paris, Berlin, St. Petersburg, or any of the other capitals of foreign countries, and has compared the avenues and boulevards of those cities with Pennsylvania avenue, with the character of buildings on the south side of the Avenue, if he is a true-hearted and full-blooded American, must be ashamed of the conditions here. It is a disgrace to this great country to have buildings of the character of those on the south side of Pennsylvania avenue and to have people of the character of those who occupy at least a part of the property proposed to be acquired.

I repeat myself when I say that the proper business course for this Congress to take is to acquire now whatever property is necessary. If we do not want to utilize all of this property at the present time for the erection of buildings, as the Senator from Idaho has said, it can lie there until we do need it. The time is coming when we shall have to have it, and we will never get it any cheaper.

Mr. President, I do hope that it will be the pleasure of Congress to act in a businesslike manner in regard to the buildings that are necessary for the transaction of the Government's business.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I think the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SCOTT] confounds two thoughts in his discussion of this matter. One is the necessity for public buildings; and for one I am ready to vote at all times for the erection of necessary public buildings, whether here in the city of Washington or in remote towns of this country. Although I do think we should have as beautiful a capital as due regard for the interest of the taxpayers whom we represent would suggest, there is no better place to put surplus funds than in the erection of public buildings throughout the country, bringing to the citizen of the town in which the building is erected a realization of the existence of his central Government.

But, Mr. President, the question of building buildings as they are needed is one thing, and the question of buying a lot of property on the south side of Pennsylvania avenue is quite another thing. I do not believe there is a member of the Senate who, if he had the capital to spare and could be released and relieved from the embarrassment of investing in real estate which was the subject of Congressional consideration, would put one dollar into real estate on the south side of the Avenue to-day. The removal of the depot, the dilapidated condition of that street, referred to by the Senator himself, is the best argument in refutation of its being a business proposition at this time to invest in real estate in that particular locality.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the Senator from Minnesota allow me for a moment?

Mr. CLAPP. Certainly.

Mr. SCOTT. He refers to the fact that no business man would invest in property south of the Avenue. He would, if the property south of the Avenue suited the purpose for which he wanted it. Otherwise possibly not.

Mr. CLAPP. Undoubtedly. If he wanted to go into a business appropriate to that environment, perhaps he would go to that portion of the city. But as a real-estate investment, I do not believe there is a member of the Senate, I repeat, who, if he had the money to spare and was relieved from any embarrassment in connection with the fact that as a Senator he was dealing in property which was the subject of Congressional consideration, would invest one dollar in that portion of this city.

It is true Washington is growing. It is true that real estate is advancing. I have not had time to examine the records, but I suggest that an examination of those records will show very few transfers of titles south of the Avenue, unless possibly among those who look forward to the favorable action of Congress in regard to this proposition.

I say to the Senator from West Virginia, so far as public buildings are concerned (and being opposed to this bill I might have been included in the suggestion he made), that I am heartily in favor of them; but I am not in favor of spending money to buy property that every man in the Senate has seen is dilapidated and which has been depreciating for the last few years that he may have been in this city. This bill does not contemplate the immediate erection of any buildings. If it did, it would be a different proposition. If the Senator from West Virginia were to bring forward a plan that will involve now the selection and the determination to put up buildings to meet the requirements of the public service, that would be one thing. But this bill does not present that plan. This bill proposes to buy property which, in view of the removal of the depot, in view of the generally dilapidated condition of that property is depreciating, and, hold it; and, with due deference to the financial standing and experience and prestige of the Senator from West Virginia, I say he can put the public money to better use. Therefore, for one, I am not only going to vote against the amendment, but I shall vote against the bill.

Mr. SCOTT. Just a moment, if the Senator will indulge me. Does the Senator from Minnesota know of any ground that the Government of the United States owns in the District of Columbia which it would sell to-day for twice the money that it paid for it?

Mr. CLAPP. No; because the Government has not in the past bought property of this character.

Mr. SCOTT. It has bought property of this character. It has bought property for the purpose of putting up public buildings.

Mr. CLAPP. It bought the property on this corner [indicating] and on that corner [indicating], and that property probably will be worth more than we paid for it.

Mr. SCOTT. The piece of ground on the corner by the Riggs Bank, near the Belasco Theater, I suppose, is worth four or five times the amount the Government paid for it.

Mr. CLAPP. Undoubtedly.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, the Senator says we have not devised any plan or suggestion for any buildings. I take it he was here during the Fifty-eighth and Fifty-ninth Congresses. My friend the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] remembers that he tried to keep on the deficiency bill and on different bills an item of $3,000,000. I understood that he was working very hard almost night and day to keep the item of $3,000,000 on that bill. Finally it was stricken out by the House. I know he worked to the very best advantage and to the extent of his ability to keep it on. We wanted then to put up buildings for the three Departments. The piece of ground was indicated upon which we wanted to build them. I tried to present it last Monday again, that three of these great Departments should have a home. They have none.

Mr. President, I appeal to any Senator on this floor to know whether he has ever been criticised at home by one of his constituents or a newspaper—and I care not if it was even at a crossroads—for any vote of his to appropriate money for taking proper care of the business of this great Government.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN].

Mr. BACON. Please have the amendment reported.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 23, before the words "million dollars," strike out "ten" and insert "twenty," so that if amended it would read:

That the sum of $20,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, etc.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HEYBURN. I move to amend, on page 2, line 25, by inserting after the word "title" the words "or option."

Mr. CLAY. Will the Senator let me ask him a question? How will that leave the bill? Will it leave $10,000,000 in the bill to get options on this land? The bill now provides for the purchase, if we can get title to it. I presume, since the additional $10,000,000 has not been agreed to, the Senator intends now that we shall simply get options on it. Is that correct, I should like to ask the Senator?

Mr. HEYBURN. It is very evident the Senator from Georgia, in his zeal not to vote for a bill providing for the purchase of this property, overlooks the fact that the sum named in the bill, whether it be $10,000,000 or $20,000,000, is not the sum to be paid for the property, but it is merely a sum out of which the property may be purchased. If it could be purchased for $1,000,000 or for half a million dollars, the Government would derive the benefit from it. I have proposed to insert the word "option" here, so that it will read:

That the sum of $10,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary—

Those are the words the Senator from Georgia seems to have overlooked or underestimated—to be used for the payment of said land or the acceptance or acquiring the title or option thereto.

That is, so much as may be necessary. I have been told that an option of three years on a certain piece of property could be acquired by a very small payment. It does not say that the Secretary of the Treasury is bound to go out and take options on the property. It simply says, if he finds he can make a better contract for the Government by taking such an option, then he is to do it. Then the objection of the Senator from Georgia and of the Senator from Minnesota would be overcome, their objection being that we had no definite figures representing the purchase price of this property.

I presume if the Government could deal better by getting an option on a part of it, it might do it. I presume if the Senator from Georgia wanted to acquire certain pieces of property, and wanted to acquire all of them or none of them, he would do it, perhaps, by getting an option on all of them before he took up the contract with one of them. That is not an unusual method of doing business. In fact, it is quite an ordinary method, and it is considered a very wise method. This amendment merely gives the option to tie up the property at a definite price, on definite terms.

I did not call for a yea-and-nay vote on the amendment which I offered in regard to changing the gross sum that might be appropriated, because I first wanted to take an expression of the Senate on this proposition of including among the rights of purchase and contract that of obtaining an option on behalf of the Government. I assume that the Secretary of the Treasury, under whose supervision this work would be intrusted, would exercise good business judgment in determining the question as to whether it were better to pay a gross sum for some property or take the chances of getting enough other property to make the deal a good one, or whether he would think it best to get an option on a number of pieces of property. This amendment leaves it to his judgment. I will submit it to the Senate, so far as I am concerned.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho [putting the question]. The noes seem to have it.

Mr. HEYBURN. I will ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

Mr. KEAN. Pending that, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was not agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there a second to the demand for the yeas and nays on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Idaho?

The yeas and nays not being ordered, the amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no further amendments as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and it was read the third time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. NELSON. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of this bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN]. As he is not present, I withhold my vote. If he were present I should vote "nay" on the passage of the bill.

Mr. DAVIS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. FULTON], but my pair has been transferred to the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. MCLAURIN], and I vote "nay."

Mr. DEPEW (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. MCENERY], who is not present, and therefore I will withhold my vote. I would vote "yea" if he were present.

Mr. FOSTER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. DEPEW. I transfer my pair to the senior Senator from New York [Mr. PLATT] and vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 18, as follows:

YEAS—33.

Ankeny	Curtis	Heyburn	Smith, Mich.
Borah	Depew	Knox	Smoot
Bourne	Dick	Lodge	Teller
Brandegee	Dixon	Overman	Warner

Daniel	Hemenway	Nixon
Dillingham	Hopkins	Owen
Dolliver	Johnston	Penrose

So the bill was passed.

ENLARGED HOMESTEADS.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 6155) to provide for an enlarged homestead, which is on the Calendar, under Rule IX.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. CULBERSON. What rule is the bill pending under?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Under Rule IX. The bill was read in full on the 6th of April and a number of committee amendments agreed to.

Mr. CULBERSON. I understand that a single objection will not carry the bill over. I may not be advised correctly as to the rule.

Mr. SMOOT. I hope the Senator will not object to the present consideration of the bill. I think we can agree upon the passage of it with an amendment that I will propose.

Mr. CULBERSON. I understand that it requires a motion to take up the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It can be taken up by unanimous consent, or it can be taken up by motion, if objection be made.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask whether the amendment that was offered, on page 1, line 9, making it read "arid and semiarid," was agreed to?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I now offer an amendment, to be added at the end of section 1.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of section 1, after the word "irrigation," in the committee amendment already agreed to, the following proviso:

Provided, however, That arid and semiarid lands mentioned in this act are to be deemed lands that will not successfully produce annual crops other than native grasses without artificial irrigation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment just read.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If no further amendment is proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator from California [Mr. FLINT] has some doubt as to whether the provision of the bill will affect what is called "Imperial Valley," in California, and is desirous that, on line 6 of the bill, page 1, "California" be omitted. I move that the word "California" be stricken from the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah proposes an amendment, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In page 1, line 6, strike out the word "California."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. KEAN. Now, let us find out what is really in the bill. I should like to have the amendments read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey wish to have the bill read as it now stands?

Mr. KEAN. I do not want to have the entire bill read. I want to know what is stricken out of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the amendments which have been agreed to.

The SECRETARY. The amendments already agreed to in the bill are as follows:

In line 6, page 1, the word "California" and the word "Idaho" are stricken out, leaving the States of Colorado, Montana, Nevada, North Dakota, Oregon, Utah, Washington, and Wyoming and the Territories of Arizona and New Mexico affected.

On line 9, before the word "nonmineral," the committee amendment inserting the word "arid" was agreed to, and after the word "arid" the amendment offered from the floor inserting the words "and semiarid" was agreed to.

After the words "extreme length," page 2, line 2, the following proviso was added:

"Provided, however, That arid and semiarid lands mentioned in this act are to be deemed lands that will not successfully produce annual crops other than natural grasses without artificial irrigation."

On page 2, line 19, the words "contiguous to" were stricken out and the words "within 5 miles of" were inserted.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is in the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, it is suggested, inasmuch as the amendment omitting Idaho from the bill stands and Idaho will not be affected by it, that it is proper and desirable the record should show briefly why Idaho is not included in the bill. I will detain the Senate but for a few moments.

The bill provides in effect that any land which may produce crops by irrigation is subject to its provisions. That is the effect of the bill as it has been amended and as it is now before the Senate for final action.

We have in Idaho millions of acres of that kind of land, and it would seem that we should want this kind of legislation, but the fact is that that is the very land to which we are applying the Carey Act and the reclamation act. The land that will produce crops with irrigation only is within the provisions of this bill, and a settler may take 320 acres of homestead upon it. Three hundred and twenty acres of homestead is larger than we desire in Idaho. We want more people there than would be represented by homesteads of that size. We have the water to irrigate the land with. It is high up in the mountains; it can be made available for this land, and the land instead of being within this exception for the purposes of this act, is within this exception in order that it may be brought under the Carey Act and under the reclamation act.

It is because the citizens of Idaho are differently situated from the citizens of some other States. There are a number of States that have not the water supply with which Idaho is fortunately blessed. There are other States that have a great deal of water, but it is low down, like the Platte River and rivers that flow on lowlands. With us, we are the watershed of the western part of the American Continent. The Snake River, the Missouri River, the Green River, and the Columbia River, through their branches, all rise within one mountain that is on the border line of Idaho, principally in Idaho. The water flows out there and we can reservoir it at the head of the Payette, the Weiser, the Boise, and the Snake and its tributaries, the Salmon and its branches, and other rivers. We can reservoir it so high up that it is merely a question of the distance to carry it. We want our land when it is under water to be under water for as many people as can profitably make a living on it, and we do not want a man on an irrigated farm of 320 acres in Idaho.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, at the end of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] I propose the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. At the end of section 1, after the amendment inserted at that place, insert the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That no land shall be subject to entry under this act for which water is available or obtainable at reasonable expense for the reclamation thereof by artificial irrigation.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. SMOOT. I think that is utterly useless as far as the bill is concerned, because the bill itself provides that it must be nonirrigable land. I do not think it is necessary to encumber the bill with that amendment, because the bill provides specifically that it shall be nonirrigable land.

Mr. CARTER. If the Senator will permit me——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. SMOOT. I do, with pleasure.

Mr. CARTER. It is true, as the Senator from Utah says, the bill provides that no land shall be subject to its terms except nonirrigable land. Nonirrigable land is a definition somewhat vague and subject to construction. We have in progress now what is known as the Reclamation Service, which has expended and provided for the expenditure of probably $40,000,000 of public money heretofore received from the sales of public lands.

That work is providing irrigable lands with a water supply, and lands heretofore of little or no value are being made available for settlement. I think, in the presence of that existing law, which we all hope will in the last analysis work out for the good of the country, it would be extremely unfortunate to interject any enactment which would seriously, or at all, interfere with the application of the law to any available land.

It is known that land deemed nonirrigable in the sense in which the Senator speaks, in the presence of private endeavor, has become irrigable land in the presence of the Government's endeavor. Originally the individual could only draw the water from the stream to irrigate what we know in common parlance as the "first bottom land." While the individual was doing the work, the first bottom lands were the only irrigable lands, because they were the only lands we could irrigate with limited means; but when we provided for the expenditure of the $40,000,000 to which I have referred, a sum to be supplemented by other millions later on——

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

Mr. CARTER. Will the Senator permit me to finish the sentence?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. CARTER. We brought into the field another and an adequate force to reach what we call the "bench lands." frequently located from 50 to 250 feet above the original bottom lands, contiguous to flowing streams. These lands were not irrigable when the individual was operating. They are irrigable now under the Government's operations, and my contention is that, inasmuch as these Government operations are going to make lands irrigable in the future that are now deemed nonirrigable, we should confine this enactment to such lands as the Government can not at any time in the future make available for settlement by placing water thereon.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. CARTER. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I wanted to suggest, since the Senator has twice mentioned the large amount which is being expended and to be expended by the Government, that he should also say at that point "all of which is to be restored to the Government by the settlers on the land."

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I assume that the Senate and the country are familiar with the law in that behalf.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I wish they were; but I hear it very often on this floor, and it is often stated on the other floor, where they seem to have lost sight of the fact which I have just stated. I did not suppose the Senator was not familiar with it, but I thought it was better to have the record complete.

Mr. CARTER. I am glad the Senator did, if he felt it was necessary to make the remarks which he has just made.

Of course, Mr. President, the $40,000,000, in round numbers, to which I have referred, will be augmented by other sums received from time to time from the sales of public lands, and these sums when expended in the Reclamation Service will be paid back again into the fund by the settlers who take up the irrigated lands.

The amendment I have proposed precludes the possibility of the land which can be made available under the reclamation act being taken up in 320-acre tracts under this act. I am sure that no Senator here desires to forestall the widest possible development under the reclamation act. That being true, this amendment, born perchance of extra caution, can do no injury. It merely provides that no land shall be subject to entry under this act for which a water supply is available or obtainable at reasonable expense.

If it is the intention of the act to convey to individuals, in tracts of 320 acres, lands for which water is available, lands for which water for irrigation can be obtained at reasonable expense, then I am unalterably opposed to the purpose of the bill. If, on the other hand, it is the intention to confine the application of this proposed law only to such lands as have not any water supply and for which the water supply can not be procured at reasonable expense, then I hope the act may prove beneficial and may not result in doubling the possibilities of speculation in the public lands.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I should like to have the proposed amendment read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. At the end of section 1, following the amendment already agreed to at that place, it is proposed to insert:

Provided further, That no land shall be subject to entry under this act for which water is available or obtainable at reasonable expense for the reclamation thereof by artificial irrigation.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator from Montana who is going to be the judge as to whether this land can be irrigated under the reclamation act?

Mr. CARTER. There must be a judgment on the bill independent of this amendment. Some power must determine the character of the land subject to the operation of the law, and if this Commission can determine one fact, the same power will be adequate, with proper precautions, rules, and regulations, to determine the other facts.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I want to say to the Senator from Montana that, in connection with the arid and semiarid land, it is provided in the bill that it must be nonirrigable. It does seem to me that that is so plain and so simple that an amendment such as the Senator from Montana has offered here to-day would do nothing more nor less than place the entryman in a position that he would have to go, before entering upon a piece of land, and learn from Washington or somewhere else whether he could enter the land selected by him or not.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah yield to a question?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Will the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. SMOOT. I will.

Mr. CARTER. Does the Senator expect that this law, when enacted, will enable a person to take up land for which the water supply for irrigation exists or for which water can be obtained at a reasonable expense?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I do not think that question would ever arise, taking into consideration the class of land for which the bill provides.

Mr. CARTER. I should be pleased to have the Senator answer the question, and to the end that it may not be misunderstood I will propound it again. Does the Senator from Utah understand that this bill, if enacted into law, will enable a party to take up 320 acres of land for which the water supply exists, or for which water can be obtained at reasonable expense without irrigation?

Mr. SMOOT. I understand that an entryman can not take up that class of land, and the bill does not provide for his doing so.

Mr. CARTER. Then the amendment——

Mr. SMOOT. Nor under the provisions of the bill could a man take up 320 acres of such land.

Mr. CARTER. Then the amendment will do no harm.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think the amendment will do any good, and I ask that the Senate disagree to the amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, just a word before this amendment passes. Unless the bill has been amended since I last saw it, I think it meets fully every contingency that the Senator from Montana desires to meet by his amendment. Of course, I can not assume that his amendment, in his knowledge, would have the logical result that it has in my mind, to wit, to defeat absolutely the entire purpose and operation of this measure.

Now, it is said that it will not do any harm. I regret, for my part, Mr. President, that we should put into the laws we pass here things that will not do any harm. We did that three or four days ago, when, in passing the employers' liability act, both Houses of Congress put in a provision that an employee of a railway company should not lose any of the rights he had under a law that is already dead and buried under a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States. Inasmuch as this amendment adds nothing to the safeguarding of the lands of the nation, and inasmuch as I fear that it will require the settler, before attempting to make his entry, to have it definitely determined by the Department of the Interior, or some other body of men, or some other authority, as to the character of the land, I hope the amendment will be defeated.

The purpose of this bill is for the entryman to go upon the land as he goes upon any other portion of the public domain. Then if, when he comes to make his final proof, he is not able to establish the fact that this land is land that properly comes within the scope of this bill, his entry is denied. That is all there is of it. It seems to me that is all that should be required of the entryman.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I very much dislike to in any way appear antagonistic to the amendment offered by my colleague [Mr. CARTER] to this bill. I very much approve of the remarks of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK]. I can not see how it is possible, when this bill expressly states in the first paragraph that no lands can be entered except nonirrigable lands—which means expressly lands that can not be irrigated—to follow that up with a clause which says lands may be entered which can not be irrigated at a reasonable cost. It to me nullifies the plain, express provision of the first section of the bill, which embodies the intent of the Senators who have been interested in its passage by expressly eliminating any lands which can be irrigated. We have already provided for that in the first section of the bill. Why is it necessary to cloud its purpose in the last section of the bill by saying that lands which can not be irrigated at a reasonable cost can be entered? The amendment of the first section of the bill is, to my mind, very plainly antagonistic to the purpose of the bill; and when we have already substantially legislated that no lands which can be irrigated can be entered, why is it not a safer proposition, if we want to protect entries so that they can only apply to nonirrigable lands, to let the plain adjective stand without the qualifying clause?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER].

The amendment was rejected.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill is in the Senate, and the question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RECLAMATION OF SWAMP AND OVERFLOWED LANDS.

Mr. FLINT. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 4855) appropriating the receipts from the sale and disposal of public lands in certain States to the construction of works for the drainage or reclamation of swamp and overflowed lands belonging to the United States, and for other purposes. The bill is now on the Calendar under Rule IX.

Mr. KEAN. I hope the Senator from California will not ask to take up that bill this evening.

Mr. FLINT. I certainly desire to have the bill taken up at this time. I think there is no objection to it.

Mr. KEAN. It is a very large proposition.

Mr. FLINT. It will take but a moment to pass the bill. It is a very important measure.

Mr. KEAN. It may be important, but it is a very large subject.

Mr. FLINT. It is a very large subject, but I think that all those who are interested in this subject have studied the bill carefully and are favorable to its passage.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

The first amendment of the Committee on Public Lands was, in section 1, page 1, line 3, after the word "That" to insert "a sum equal;" in line 8, after the word "and," to insert "and all moneys hereafter received from the sale and disposal of public lands in said State;" on page 2, line 4, after the word "hereby," to strike out "reserved, set aside, and," and in line 5, after the word "appropriated," to insert "and set aside;" so as to make the section read:

That a sum equal to all moneys received from the sale and disposal of public lands in the States of Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Louisiana, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Ohio, and Wisconsin, beginning with the fiscal year ending June 30, 1901, and all moneys hereafter received from the sale and disposal of public lands in said States, including the surplus of fees and commissions in excess of allowances to registers and receivers, and excepting the 5 per cent of the proceeds of the sales of public lands in any of the above States set aside by law for educational and other purposes, shall be, and the same are hereby, appropriated and set aside as a special fund in the Treasury, to be known as the "drainage fund," to be used, under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, in the examination and survey for, and the construction, operation, and maintenance of, works for drainage or reclamation of swamp and overflowed lands belonging to the United States, either absolutely or in trust, including lands within ceded Indian reservations, and for the payment of all other expenditures required in connection therewith, including the payment for services of persons employed in the city of Washington and elsewhere, and for other purposes provided herein: Provided, That in case the receipts from the sale and disposal of public lands other than those realized from the sale and disposal of lands referred to in this section are insufficient to meet the requirements for the support of agricultural colleges in the several States and Territories under the act of August 30, 1890, entitled "An act to apply a portion of the proceeds of the public lands to the more complete endowment and support of the colleges for the benefit of agriculture and the mechanic arts, established under the provisions of an act of Congress approved July 2, 1862," or other appropriations from the receipts of the sale of public lands for the support of schools of mines or other educational institutions, the deficiency, if any, shall be provided for from any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, section 5, line 4, after the word "applicable," to strike out "which" and insert "as," so as to make the section read:

SEC. 5. That where there are lands in any State not owned or held by the United States which are swamp or overflowed lands, and it shall be made to appear to the Secretary of the Interior that reclamation works by drainage can be advantageously constructed and maintained by local authority under the laws of such State, and that the drainage of such lands is feasible and conducive to public health and the general welfare, the Secretary of the Interior, in his discretion, is hereby authorized, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, to loan out of the drainage fund to such State or to any municipality of such State, corporation, or drainage district authorized by the laws thereof to construct and maintain such improvements the funds necessary to construct the same, in order that such lands may be drained and reclaimed. Such loan shall be upon the bonds of such State or a municipality, corporation, or drainage district thereof issued under the laws of such State, secured by a first and paramount lien upon the land benefited by the improvement, shall run not exceeding ten years, the same to be due in installments to be determined by the Secretary of the Interior. Before granting such a loan the Secretary of the Interior shall require that the land proposed to be reclaimed shall be subdivided into lots of an area satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior, not to exceed a quarter section, and held for sale for a prescribed period to actual settlers, at a price to be fixed by him and upon such terms and conditions as he may prescribe, to the end that such reclaimed land may eventually be occupied by actual settlers and home builders. When any loan under this act is repaid the amount shall be put into the drainage fund and may be again loaned the same as the original sum: Provided, That any drainage project covered by said bonds shall be constructed, operated, and paid for under the same conditions and regulations, so far as applicable, as are required and imposed upon drainage projects constructed and operated by the Secretary of the Interior under sections 2, 3, and 4 hereof. Any private corporation seeking to obtain the benefits of this section must first show to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Interior that such corporation is empowered to act under this section.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator in charge of the bill some questions with reference to it. It is rather a long bill. If I understand it correctly it involves two propositions, one of which is to take the money collected from the sale of public land and improve lands belong to the United States. The other is to take that money and loan it upon lands that do not belong to the United States. As to the first section of the bill, I want to ask if it includes all of the lands in all of the States that are not arid or semiarid—that is, all of the public lands except those embraced in the arid or semiarid land States?

Mr. FLINT. It does.

Mr. WARREN. It does not include any lands in the so-called "arid or semiarid States?"

Mr. FLINT. It does not include any of the arid or so-called "semiarid" States or States that are within the terms of the reclamation act.

Mr. WARREN. Then, if I understand it aright, this is very much such a bill as that for the reclamation of the arid lands, except this bill aims to withdraw water and drain lands rather than to irrigate the lands. If I heard correctly—and the Senator will correct me if I am wrong—this bill proposes to go back to the same date as the one mentioned in the reclamation act, in which the money was set aside for the arid-land States, and take all the money that is left in the Treasury of the fund realized from the sale of public land in the States mentioned, after paying the fees of the several land officers in the several States and the money for the agricultural colleges. Am I correct in that?

Mr. FLINT. The Senator is correct in his statement.

Mr. WARREN. And it proposes in the future to take all the money that may be received from the sale of these lands, less the same deductions, and, as I understand, should the amount received run short of being sufficient to provide the money for the agricultural colleges, then that deficiency is to be paid out of the General Treasury.

Mr. FLINT. It is to be paid out of the General Treasury. It does not come out of this fund.

Mr. WARREN. Does not the Senator think that the sale of these lands—I suppose they are to be sold after they are reclaimed and drained—will replenish the fund sufficiently to cover it?

Mr. FLINT. The sum that will be appropriated under this bill, while it is a very large sum, is a very small sum to carry on this great work. It is nothing like the sum that was appropriated for the reclamation of the arid lands, and the sum that will be received yearly will not be nearly so great as that which has been paid into the reclamation fund year by year.

Mr. WARREN. But the Senator expects that all the money that is received from the sale of the reclaimed lands will go into that fund, does he not?

Mr. FLINT. The bill so provides—that it shall go in and be a revolving fund, just the same as that provided by the reclamation act.

Mr. WARREN. Under the second feature, as I understand, the United States is to loan its credit to the States, under proper security, for the drainage of these lands. Does that apply to any corporation or individual or to lands other than State lands?

Mr. FLINT. It provides that a drainage district may be formed in any of the States, and when such a drainage district is formed it is submitted to the Secretary of the Interior for his approval. If he is satisfied that this drainage of the land in the district can be carried out so that the land will sell for a sufficient sum to pay for the land and for its reclamation, he then purchases the bonds of that district, these bonds to be paid in in ten annual installments. In other words, the Government buys the bonds of the drainage district, provided the Secretary of the Interior is satisfied that the bonds are good security for the amount to be advanced.

The bill further provides that when a drainage district is formed or organized in the State the land in the drainage district must be offered for sale to the people in tracts of not more than 160 acres and not less than 5 acres.

Where land is held in private ownership, before the Government will advance any money to purchase the bonds three conditions are necessary: First, a drainage district must be organized, under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior; second, the owners of the land must agree to sell the land at a price that will be satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior, in tracts of not more than 160 acres; and third, a satisfactory showing must be made that the land can be sold for a sufficient amount to pay the cost of the drainage and the price of the land.

Mr. WARREN. One more question right here. I understand this is to include in the drainage district the land of private individuals and corporations, as well as land of the State. Does the Senator in the bill provide for condemnation, providing there should be lack of cooperation on the part of any property owner?

Mr. FLINT. As far as it is possible to do so, this proposed act gives the right to condemn, but so far as concerns lands within a State not owned by the Government it is left for the State to form the district and acquire the land or have options obtained, so that it can be submitted to the general public and the land offered for sale in tracts of not more than 160 acres to any one settler.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator is a lawyer, and a good lawyer. Does he think that the States generally would have authority to condemn the land and complete these districts? Of course we can not legislate for that. I want to get the Senator's idea as to whether, following this, he has sufficient assurance that the States will legislate as the States had to do under the arid-land reclamation act, so that where there is lack of cooperation there may be condemnation of some pieces of land that may stand in the way.

Mr. FLINT. At the meeting of representatives from most of the Southern and Western States interested in this subject the general sentiment was that any State whose statutes did not provide for the formation of a district or for the acquisition of land by condemnation to carry out the terms of this bill, they would see that such legislation was enacted. These representatives stated that the sentiment is almost overwhelming in these States that a bill such as this should be enacted into law, and that they were assured that their States would enact any legislation necessary to carry this act into effect.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill to what States this bill will apply.

Mr. FLINT. The money can be used in any State in the Union.

Mr. TELLER. What States has the committee in view that are to be benefited by this bill?

Mr. FLINT. The States that will be benefited are most of the Southern States. I have here a list of the States. I will include it in the RECORD.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., March 1, 1907.

The SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR.

SIR: I am in receipt, by your reference for a report, of a letter from Hon. FRANK P. FLINT, United States Senate, dated February 23, 1907, requesting to be furnished with available data regarding the following matters:

"Location and area of lands in the United States that are swamp and overflowed and susceptible of being drained and made fit for agriculture.

"The effect of drainage on such land and on the public health and upon agriculture.

"The area of land which has been drained under the laws of the different States and the benefits which have resulted therefrom.

"The summary of the legislation of the different States and of the legal and business methods under which drainage works have been constructed and maintained.

"A review of the drainage laws and policies of the leading agricultural countries of Europe and their results."

In answer to the first question, this Office can furnish no information except as to the States which have been granted the swamp lands therein. The annual report for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1906, shows that title to the following amount of land has passed to the different swamp-land States, viz:

	Acres.
Alabama	418,520.14
Arkansas	7,685,135.88
California	2,038,931.68
Florida	20,121,559.56
Illinois	1,457,084.68
Indiana	1,254,110.73
Iowa	871,599.49
Louisiana	9,307,749.13
Michigan	5,655,533.16
Minnesota	4,356,485.39
Mississippi	3,282,070.50
Missouri	3,345,514.51
Ohio	26,251.95
Oregon	252,678.19
Wisconsin	3,251,102.34

There still remain unadjusted claims in the State of Florida, Louisiana, and Minnesota for quite a large amount of land.

This Office has no means of ascertaining how much of the above amounts of land can be drained and made fit for agricultural purposes.

This Office has no data bearing on the matter included in the second and third questions.

The States of Illinois, Iowa, and Missouri donated their swamp lands to the counties in which they are situated. The other swamp-land States dispose of their swamp lands to individuals or corporations. I have no information as to the legal and business methods adopted by any of the States for the drainage of swamp lands.

This Office has no data as to the policies of the different countries of Europe regarding the drainage of swamp lands, or the results of such drainage.

The letter of Senator FLINT is herewith returned.

Very respectfully,

W. A. RICHARDS, Commissioner.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. What kind of land is the Senator reading about?

Mr. FLINT. I am talking about swamp lands.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. That table is not at all correct. The Senator has been misinformed, whoever furnished him with that list. Practically all of the swamp and overflowed lands in the State of Arkansas were donated to the State under the swamp-land act of 1850.

Mr. FLINT. I so understand it.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. They have passed into private ownership.

Mr. FLINT. I so stated.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I thought you said it was public land.

Mr. FLINT. On the contrary, I said the State the Senator represents——

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. You mean that the 7,000,000 acres to which you have referred were at one time swamp lands?

Mr. FLINT. They are swamp lands now. These are lands which were given to the States with the understanding that they would be reclaimed, and they have not been reclaimed.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. You call them swamp lands now, notwithstanding that they have been reclaimed under the laws which have been passed and which exist for their improvement?

Mr. FLINT. No. I would not want to say this list is absolutely correct, for there has been no estimate made by anyone going upon the ground as to the number of acres of swamp land that have been reclaimed.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. By whom?

Mr. FLINT. Permit me to finish. But the general statement was made that in most of the States—I know it is so in my own State—where these lands were donated to the States and by the States granted to individuals, they have not been reclaimed, and, in my opinion, it is impossible for private individuals to reclaim them, and it will take some great Government enterprise to reclaim the land.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I should like to ask the Senator from what source he got the information he is now presenting to the Senate from that paper?

Mr. FLINT. I am reading from a letter of Mr. Richards, the Commissioner.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. Richards, the Commissioner?

Mr. FLINT. Yes; the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. I only want to say there is no such amount of land unreclaimed in the State of Arkansas at this time. In 1850 there may have been such swamp and overflowed lands. I have not opposed the passage of this bill, but I do not want it to be passed upon a misapprehension as fundamental as that.

Mr. FLINT. So that the Senator may not misunderstand me, I want to say to him as clearly as I can that the number of acres of land that have been reclaimed and are not swamp lands I have not been able to ascertain, and I do not think the Senator has the information. As a matter of fact, there were 7,000,000 acres of swamp land in Arkansas, and as far as I can ascertain, there are no figures to show what amount of that land to-day is reclaimed and what is still swamp land. If the Senator has the information, I should be glad to have it.

Mr. CLARKE of Arkansas. We are considering a bill to reclaim swamp lands, and I supposed the Senator in charge of the bill had some reliable data which would show the extent to which the beneficence of this bill would go. He goes back to 1850 with respect to our State, before the land was improved by levees and drainage. My personal knowledge of the State is such that I feel perfectly safe in saying that there is no such number of acres of land in that State that need the benefit of drainage. The State has about 50,000 acres of the original grant undisposed of.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. TELLER. Certainly.

Mr. CULBERSON. The Senator from Colorado asked what States were affected by the bill. I call his attention to the first section of the bill, which provides:

> That a sum equal to all moneys received from the sale and disposal of public lands in the States of Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Louisiana, Michigan, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Ohio, and Wisconsin—

Those are the States to be affected.

Mr. TELLER. Some of the States there mentioned have not had any public lands for a good many years. The State of Illinois has not had an acre of public land for more than fifty years.

I simply want to draw out the fact that this is an attempt on the part of the Forest Reserve Committee, whatever it may be, and the forest-reserve people to adopt a system of drainage by loaning the money of the Government to the State, individuals, or corporations to do the drainage. I do not care to enter into any controversy about this bill, and will merely say that I shall not be able to vote for it. If it should be carried out, it will doubtless enlarge the ground upon which the people may live and earn a living, and in that respect it is better than most of the suggestions that come from that Bureau. Most of them come here with a determination to restrict the opportunities of the people to get homes. This will enlarge them, but whether it will do it under law properly or not, I do not know.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, this is certainly a very far-reaching bill, and one almost so far-reaching that it is difficult to anticipate the ultimate limits of it. If I correctly understood the Senator from California in reply to the inquiries of the Senator from Wyoming, the bill practically disposes of the proceeds of all the public lands of the United States. If I understood the Senator from California correctly in replying to the inquiry of the Senator from Wyoming, the public land States are divided into two great divisions—one of them the States in which the arid lands are situated, and the other in which the lands not arid are situated. If I understood him correctly further, the proceeds of all of the public lands in any State in which arid land is situated have been practically disposed of by the arid-land act. I say "disposed of." While under the operation of that law the fund is ultimately to find its way back into the Treasury, so far as present disposition goes it may be said that the proceeds of all of the lands in the arid States have been put beyond the power of disposition by Congress, unless it undoes what it has done.

I understand further that under the provisions of this bill all the proceeds of the lands situated in States not arid are disposed of, and therefore it is for the present, at least, a practical disposition. The former act and the proposed act will dispose of all the proceeds of all the public lands of the United States.

If the bill stopped there, it would certainly be a very serious proposition to me. The public lands of the United States are not lands in which only the States in which they are situated are interested. They do not constitute a property which belongs peculiarly to those States. It is true that in the organization of new States Congress has been very liberal with those States; but it is nevertheless the fact that all the public lands in the States are the common property of all the States. Those States in which there are no public lands have contributed that which was necessary to secure those lands and are equally interested in and equally entitled to all the benefits from the proceeds of those lands.

The Senator from Florida [Mr. TALIAFERRO] says to me sotto voce that this bill gives that. I do not so understand it, and I want to state why I understand otherwise. If I understand the provisions of this bill, all the proceeds of lands not situated in States having arid lands in them will go to the redemption of overflowed lands in those particular States. Whether it means that the funds arising from the sale of lands in each State are to be devoted to that particular State, or whether all of the funds arising from the sale of such lands must be put in a common fund and distributed pro rata among those States, does not, as I understand, appear by the bill.

But there is nothing in the bill, if I have read it correctly—and of course I have read it hurriedly—which distributes a portion of this fund among those States in which there are no public lands; but the only provision as to that is that Congress may loan money to them out of the general fund in the Treasury for the purpose of the redemption of overflowed lands in their States.

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. FLINT. One of these reclamation projects can be entered upon in any State of the Union.

Mr. BACON. By the loaning of money——

Mr. FLINT. No; if they have public swamp lands in the State——

Mr. BACON. Whether they have public lands in the State or not.

Mr. FLINT. If they have any Government land that is swamp land.

Mr. BACON. Of course, we know the fact that in the older States the Government has no land of any kind.

Mr. KEAN. Section 5 provides——

Mr. BACON. Section 5 provides for the loaning of money, and I think that is the most objectionable part of the bill.

Mr. KEAN. I think so, too.

Mr. LODGE. That covers land not held or owned by the United States.

Mr. BACON. Of course. That is more objectionable than the other, I think, although my State could be one of the recipients of its benefits. I am not in favor of loaning money from the Treasury of the United States for the purpose of redeeming any land belonging to individuals, and I understand that is what section 5 proposes to do—one of the most stupendous and unlimited projects for emptying the Treasury that I ever heard of, and I may say that since I have had the honor of a seat on the floor of the Senate there has never been here a proposition which I would denominate to be so absolutely wild and unjustifiable as this.

But, Mr. President, to come back to the question of public lands, I repeat the proposition that it is a mistake to suggest that the proceeds of these lands constitute a fund from which the States in which they are situated have any peculiar right to benefit; that the public lands constitute a property the funds resulting from which should be equally enjoyed by all the States, because it was not without the devotion of the efforts and the treasure, to say nothing of the blood, of all of the States, that this common property was obtained.

Mr. President, it is not true, even if we are about to enter upon the field of the distribution of funds arising from the sale of public lands, that the redemption of the overflowed lands is the most important subject to which that fund should be devoted. There are other interests in this country which rise far above the question of the redemption of overflowed lands to which this fund can be properly applied if we propose to apply it.

Mr. FLINT. What became of the proceeds of the sale of lands in the State of Georgia?

Mr. BACON. Do you mean the public lands?

Mr. FLINT. Yes.

Mr. BACON. The Senator from California is a most widely informed Senator, but he forgets I am sure—I will not accuse him of not knowing the fact—that the Government of the United States never owned a foot of land in the State of Georgia. The State of Georgia was one of the States that made the Government; not one that received anything from the Government. The State of Georgia was one of the thirteen original Colonies, and the Federal Government never owned an inch of land in the State of Georgia, except such as it has owned under a concession by the State permitting the Government to buy for public purposes.

Mr. FLINT. In other words, the land in the State of Georgia was used for the benefit of the State of Georgia, whereas the lands in the State of California were used for the benefit of the entire nation.

Mr. BACON. Well, Mr. President, I should like to know how the public lands in California were acquired? They were acquired as a result of the Mexican war. Who paid the expenses of the Mexican war? Who waged the Mexican war? Who sent the men to the field? Who fought the battles that won the public lands in California? Did the present inhabitants of California do it? Why, Mr. President, it was wild then except for a few men who had gone there as adventurers and a few men who had there represented the Mexican Government.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I should like the Senator from Georgia to allow me to interrupt him long enough to state, in answer to the Senator from California [Mr. FLINT], that Georgia is one of the original thirteen States that did not derive any title to anything from the General Government, but had helped to create it. He could also say that she gave to the General Government the States of Alabama and Mississippi without any cost to the General Government whatever.

Mr. BACON. I thank the Senator from Mississippi for having rendered that proper tribute to my State. I want to say another thing that I was coming to. If we are going to devote the proceeds of the public lands to public purposes and public uses, the rescue of a few acres of overflowed land are not the high and commanding objects of our beneficence. If we are going to devote the proceeds of the public lands to public purposes, there is a vast field of illiteracy in this country to which that money can be devoted, and one which cries aloud.

Mr. FLINT rose.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will pardon me for just a moment. I am not one of those who favor taking money out of the Public Treasury for the purpose of education in the different States. Do not let me be misunderstood about that. If there were a bill to-day for the purpose of taking money out of the Public Treasury to be given to the States for public education, I would oppose it; but when it comes to the proceeds of the public lands, that is another matter. The proceeds of the public lands are a proper fund to be devoted to education in the different States, if we are going to use the proceeds for any public purpose. We have already gone in that direction, and the result has been one most gratifying and most beneficial in the land-scrip fund and matters of that kind.

Now, I want to say, in connection with what my friend from Mississippi [Mr. MONEY] said in regard to the donation by the State of Georgia, or the cession by the State of Georgia, of the vast territory which now constitutes the two States of Alabama and Mississippi, that when Georgia ceded that territory it prescribed that a certain amount of the proceeds of the public lands of those Territories should be devoted to public education and to the establishment of universities; and, if I am not mistaken, certainly a fund, the proceeds of those lands, is to-day enjoyed by both the States of Alabama and Mississippi as a result of that stipulation on the part of the State of Georgia.

The Senator from Mississippi says to me, the sixteenth section. I have forgotten exactly the terms, but I know it was prescribed by the State of Georgia. We have had no public lands in the State within a long number of years, and they never were sold as public lands. They were allowed to be taken up as homesteads for the people, and in that way have become the farms and villages upon which our people have settled and from which there has grown a population to-day of two million and a half.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. BACON. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me while he is on that matter, the public lands of the whole of that vast Western territory, as the Senator well remembers, were given to the United States by the thirteen original States.

Mr. BACON. Undoubtedly.

Mr. LODGE. The Northwest Territory was so given. Virginia was the largest giver. She gave a larger territory than any other State; but Connecticut, Massachusetts, New York, and New Jersey all gave, and they ceded all that immense region west of the Alleghenies and east of the Mississippi to the United States.

Mr. BACON. Undoubtedly; and the United States has received the benefit of it.

Mr. LODGE. Those States have no public lands, because they gave them to the United States.

Mr. BACON. That territory west of the Mississippi River which is now within the area of the United States may be found in three great divisions. One great division came with the Louisiana purchase, for the $15,000,000 paid by the people of the United States as it then existed, contributed by each man in his proportion, according to his means or according to the laws that then existed which raised revenue, each man bearing his part of the burden——

Mr. WARREN rose.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me until I finish this sentence—another division is the part which came from Mexico, which is also a trophy of war, a trophy won by the treasure and effort and sacrifice and blood of the people of the United States, and for which also, as the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] very properly says, money was paid. Another division is the great State of Texas, which we did not win as a trophy, but which came to us as an independent country, and the independence of which we succeeded in putting beyond the shadow of a doubt by that war. There is still a fourth division about which there is some difference of opinion as to what is the origin of our title, and that is the Oregon country, and whether or not it came as a part of the Louisiana purchase or whether it is ours by right of discovery. I myself think it came through the Louisiana purchase. Senators disagree with me, I know, and I know maps are so made now, but that is the impression that is on my mind. Now I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. I do not want to interrupt the Senator, except to say that all that money that was invested has come back a great many times over from the land itself to the United States.

Mr. BACON. Certainly, Mr. President.

Mr. WARREN. It was simply an investment on the part of those older States in certain lands which by our settling there we have made worth something, realizing tenfold and a hundredfold. It was simply a Government investment.

Mr. BACON. Nevertheless, it was common property. I want to call the attention of the Senator from Wyoming to the fact that the people who are on these lands now, the people who make up the great States of Colorado, California, Wyoming, and all the other States within that territory, both the territory gotten through the Louisiana purchase and the territory acquired by war——

Mr. WARREN rose.

Mr. BACON. I hope the Senator will permit me to finish the sentence—those people are not the people who lived there then and to whom we gave anything. They are the people who went there, the people who acquired these lands as a part of the consideration which the present States have and for which they are indebted to the country at large—the vast number of valued citizens which we have sent out from the eastern part of this country and from the older States to the new States, one of whom is the distinguished Senator [Mr. WARREN] now upon the floor seeking to interrupt me. That is the debt they owe to us. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] is another, and there are others. The Senator from California [Mr. FLINT] is one. He is so young a man that I do not know whether he is a native of California or whether he is one of those that we contributed to it, who have built up that great valuable country in the West.

But, Mr. President, do not let me be misunderstood. I am simply contending, and I do not see how there can be any possible doubt about the question, that when it comes to the distribution of funds arising from the public lands they are not funds which belong to the particular States in which the lands are situated, but they are funds which by every reason belong in common to all the people of the United States.

Mr. WARREN. May I interrupt the Senator now?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. BACON. With pleasure.

Mr. WARREN. I do not quite understand whether the individuals who went out from the older States after having their share of this purchase and settled there are now indebted to their fellows who remained East. Is that the contention?

Mr. BACON. By no means; but if the Senator and others paid for land the money they paid for the land went into the Treasury and is the common property of the people of the United States, and not the property of the people of Wyoming.

Mr. WARREN. They have not ever claimed that.

Mr. BACON. Of course not, but in the proposition as maintained here, that the proceeds of these lands now must be devoted to the reclamation of lands in those States, and those States alone, there is a recognition of the fact that they have a superior claim upon this fund, a claim in which the people at large do not participate.

Mr. WARREN. I do not seek to enter into the merits of that case, but I want to say that if the Senator thinks the settlers of those Western States are indebted to the States from which they went, or if he thinks that those States that are organized there and pay their taxes year after year, while the United States has kept its ownership and not paid a sou, and that property has been made three or four fold as valuable and that money has come back to the older States—if they think we are still in debt, I should like some Senator to state the amount of that debt and the manner in which he figures it up.

Mr. BACON. I do not know of any greater compliment to a public speaker or for any speaker than for some one to set up a man of straw and knock him down, rather than address himself to the particular proposition the speaker has presented.

Mr. WARREN. I am sorry the Senator does that, then.

Mr. BACON. Nobody has claimed that the Western States owe anything to us or to the other States.

Mr. WARREN. The claim has been that we would not have had the States except that they were bought out of the purse of the Eastern States. As I have said, the Government made investments there of a small sum and received it back again tenfold, a hundredfold, and a thousandfold in some cases. That is all there is to it.

Mr. BACON. The Senator from Wyoming is a resident of a part of the arid country receiving now a very large part of the benefit from the proceeds of the public lands.

Mr. WARREN. It is not receiving one single cent except what it pays back into the Treasury.

Mr. BACON. I stated that myself.

Mr. WARREN. It pays it directly before it can get any benefits. It can not spend an acre of land until it pays the United States for its investment.

Mr. BACON. I think I stated that fact; so the Senator does not correct me in any particular. I said the fund would ultimately come back to the Government. It is a part of the scheme. There is no doubt about that, and there is no doubt about the fact that, so far as the present is concerned, we are developing the country and irrigating it. I voted for it, I will say to the Senator. Whether I did right or wrong is a question which I am not prepared to discuss, but I voted for the reclamation of those lands. However, there is a limit. You can not say if I voted for that measure I ought to vote for this measure. I do not think that is correct logic by any means. There are differences between the measures.

Mr. PILES. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. BACON. I will yield to the Senator for a question.

Mr. PILES. I just want to correct the Senator's statement in respect to the Oregon country.

Mr. BACON. Well, that is not material.

Mr. PILES. As to its being a part of the Louisiana purchase. I simply wish to say that there is absolutely no evidence upon which that claim may be founded. The Oregon country——

Mr. BACON. I do not wish to be diverted to that, Mr. President.

Mr. PILES. If the Senator will not yield, of course——

Mr. BACON. I stated that as far as I knew there was a division, and my opinion is one way and the opinion of the Senator from Oregon is another way. I think Mr. Jefferson sent the two explorers there to explore what he understood we had acquired in the Louisiana purchase. That was my view of it, but I am not going to discuss that; it is not material.

Mr. TELLER rose.

Mr. BACON. Does the Senator from Colorado desire to interrupt me on that question?

Mr. TELLER. I wish to say a word after the Senator gets through.

Mr. BACON. Very well; I am nearly through. I will not occupy the Senate further than to state that I am opposed to the bill for two reasons. In the first place, I am opposed to it on the ground I have argued, that it is a disposition of the public lands which now remain and a devotion to particular purposes confined to particular States; that if the funds arising from the public lands are now disposed of they should be disposed of in a way that the States of the Union should have an equal participation pro rata in them; and, in my opinion, there is a much higher purpose to which these proceeds can be devoted than the reclaiming of swamp lands, to wit, the purpose of education. I am opposed to it on that ground, and I am opposed to it on the further ground——

Mr. FLINT. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. BACON. I will yield for a question. I have nearly concluded.

Mr. FLINT. I simply want to say that if the bill passes and is carried out like the act for the reclamation of arid lands, there will be no need of an appropriation for educational purposes, because there will be farmers there producing from the soil who will be able to contribute their own money for education.

Mr. BACON. That is a speculative matter, though I think it is very wise in its scope.

I will conclude, without detaining the Senate further on this matter, by stating that I am opposed to the bill, in the second place, because I am utterly and irreconcilably opposed to the proposition contained in the fifth and sixth sections of the bill, that the Government of the United States shall, upon security of bonds or any other security, lend money to individuals or to communities for the reclamation of private lands within the States, even though my State would be one that would be largely benefited, because we have a large amount of land of that kind.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia says that the use of the proceeds of the public lands in the States would indicate that the States were making some claim on it.

Mr. BACON rose.

Mr. TELLER. I understood the Senator to say that because the money was to be used in the State under the Reclamation Service we made some claim, because it was collected in Colorado and Nevada, and so forth, that we were entitled to have it expended there.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me, if I said the States were making that claim, I was not careful in the use of language. I mean that that would be the effect if there was given to the States in which it was situated the exclusive benefit of the appropriation, so far as it was a Government appropriation.

Mr. TELLER. The Reclamation Service proceeded upon the theory that the Government of the United States owned a large area of arid land, unproductive land, land that could not be sold in its then condition. The Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Kansas v. Colorado held that it was only upon the theory that the Government could improve its own lands that the Government could constitutionally go into the State. The court held in that case that the Government could not go into a State and improve lands that do not belong to the General Government. How far that will affect some of the States—for instance, like Texas—I do not now care to go into.

Mr. MONEY. The Government has no land in Texas.

Mr. TELLER. The Government has no land in Texas, but we have an extension of the Reclamation Service to Texas. It seemed to me that the court rather disturbed the theory that we might do something in Texas with the consent of Texas. The Government does not lend any money to Colorado or any other Western State. It takes its money and invests it in the improvement of its land. Then it adds the expense of that improvement to the land and sells the land to the people of that country.

Mr. President, everywhere the people of the West have recognized that the proceeds of the land when sold is the property of the Government of the United States. We have never made any claim on it, and until the Reclamation Service we never had any benefit of it.

Mr. Webster once made a speech in the Senate in which he said that Virginia had given to the Government land for the disposal of which the Government had already received $80,000,000. He said that if it continued in the same way, in time the donation of Virginia to the Government would amount to $200,000,000. Mr. President, it amounted to a good deal more than $200,000,000.

As the Senator said, Georgia ceded to the Government without any compensation whatever a very large area of Mississippi and Alabama. The Government owns the land, and it has been the theory of the Government always to sell the land and then that each State had its proportionate share; that it went into the common fund and has been used for the common benefit.

A good many years ago, I should say twenty-seven or twenty-eight years ago, the Senate voted by a very narrow majority to devote the proceeds of the public lands to the education practically of the colored people of the South. That was reconsidered and an amendment put on that practically defeated the bill. We had for years before this body what was called the "Blair educational bill," proposing to donate the proceeds of the public land to educational purposes in the country; and the defeat of the bill really grew out of the difficulty in the administration of it. It was difficult to say how we should distribute the money so as not to interfere with the States. The representatives of many of the States that would have benefited largely by it voted against it because they feared that the Government might interfere in some way and disturb their school system.

Mr. President, the public land belongs legally to the Government of the United States. Properly it belongs to the people of the United States. The Supreme Court has repeatedly said that the Government holds the land in trust for the people, and when the trust has been completed by the conveyance of the public property in the way of lands to persons then the trust of course ceases.

Mr. President, I do not fancy this bill. I do not fancy that part of it that loans money. I recognize the right of the Government of the United States to go into a State where it has land of the character that is mentioned in this bill and drain it just as much as it would have a right to go on land that it owned that was dry or watered. I can not see any distinction. So much of the bill as provides for that I am in absolute sympathy with. To so much of it as proposes to loan money to either individuals or corporations or even States I shall not be able to give my vote.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no further amendments proposed as in Committee of the Whole, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

Mr. BURKETT. Is it the intention of the Senator in charge of the bill to finish it to-night?

Mr. LODGE. I do not understand that the purpose of the Senator in charge of the bill is to press it this evening to a vote. I understand that there is still a good deal of debate to be had on the bill.

Mr. FLINT. As there seems to be some desire to have further debate on the bill, I move that the bill be taken up and that it be made the unfinished business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from California moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the pending bill. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from California.

The motion was agreed to.

ADJOURNMENT TO FRIDAY—BUSINESS OF THE SESSION.

Mr. HALE. This bill will clearly give rise to debate, but it is the unfinished business and will come up whenever we have a session. All the committees are at work now. There is a general purpose to adjourn early. Several conference committees are at work and want the day to-morrow. I have been requested by several Senators to take the sense of the Senate by moving that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Friday.

Mr. CULBERSON. Mr. President——

Mr. HALE. I have also been requested by several Senators to make it Saturday, and I would do it, but on Friday morning the Committee on Appropriations will be ready to report an appropriation bill, and I think it is the sense of the Senate that when we have any business of that kind to do, we should be here.

Mr. CULBERSON. Before the Senator insists upon his motion, I ask him if he will not withhold it until we can pass a short bill here, to which I think there is no objection. I understand the Senator rose to move to adjourn now, but it will take only a moment. It is a bill in which there is great general interest, a short bill, to which, I think, there is no objection. It is in charge of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN]. It is the bill (S. 3732) regulating injunctions and the practice of the district and circuit courts of the United States. It contains only half a dozen sentences.

Mr. HALE. I am very glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President——

Mr. CULBERSON. Then, as I happen to have the floor, I ask, on behalf of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN], unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 3732.

Mr. KEAN. Let the bill be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas asks for the present consideration of a bill, which will be read for the information of the Senate.

Mr. BURKETT. I wish to say to the Senator from Texas that I have a bill which I introduced on the same subject and that I am going to move to offer as an amendment to this bill. I should like to have the bill come up at a time when I may have ten or fifteen minutes (certainly I do not want to take the time this evening at this hour) to present the reasons why the substitute I propose to offer should be adopted instead of the bill. I do not think the Senator wants to hold the Senate here at this time of the day, and I certainly do not want to proceed with a discussion of the subject now.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the bill is going to provoke a discussion at this late hour, I shall not insist upon its consideration now. I thought perhaps we could pass the bill without any discussion. If the Senator from Nebraska desires to speak on it at some length and wishes to have it go over, of course I will not insist on proceeding with it at this time.

Mr. BACON. If I can have the attention of the Senator from Maine a moment, I wish to make a suggestion in connection with what he said about the way in which the Senate would be occupied on Friday, if we adjourn over until that day. There are some matters of legislation upon which we desire to have the consideration of the Senate. According to the suggestion of the Senator, if we adjourn over until Friday those measures can not be considered on that day, because the Senator will then be ready with an appropriation bill.

I did not make the suggestion until there was some objection interposed to the consideration of the bill to which attention was called by the Senator from Texas. I want to say that that is a matter in which the people of my section are most deeply interested, one in which I myself feel a very great interest, and one upon which I myself have introduced a bill the substantial features of which are embodied in the substitute which has been brought forward here by the Committee on the Judiciary; in fact, it is almost absolutely and entirely the same bill in practical effect. If we can have the consideration of this bill to-morrow, for instance, we would not be in a position to be still further postponed when Friday came and the appropriation bill came up.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me a moment, I have no objection to the recess of the Senate, provided it is so adjusted or arranged that consideration of certain bills will not be entirely precluded, which will be the case, so far as this week is concerned, if we adjourn over until Friday, under the statement of the Senator from Maine that on Friday there will be an appropriation bill which will occupy that day.

Mr. HALE. If the Senator will allow me, I think it is not his fault, but mine; but I did not state clearly what the Committee on Appropriations desires to do on Friday. It is not to confiscate that day for appropriation bills, but to give the committee an opportunity to report a bill so that it may be in order afterwards, but not to take it up that day.

Mr. BACON. The Senator does not propose to take it up that day?

Mr. HALE. No; but the Senator sees the importance——

Mr. BACON. I see I am in error.

Mr. HALE. With the condition we are in and the desire for an early adjournment, the Senator—an old Senator here—will see the importance of our pushing the appropriation bills as fast as possible. The committee has so pushed the bill that they will be ready to report it on Friday morning, and then that day will be, of course, at the disposal of the Senate.

Mr. BACON. I understand the Senator. I wish to say in this connection that we are not in favor of pushing appropriation bills so rapidly that Congress will adjourn prior to action by the Senate upon certain important measures which we think should have the consideration of the Senate. I do not offer that as an objection to the present suggestion, but I would not desire that it should be understood that appropriation bills are the only measures which are to be considered the balance of the session. I think there are a number of measures the Senators on that side of the Chamber favor which possibly might with propriety be taken up at this time.

I do not wish to be misunderstood now as to what those measures are. There are some which have been agitated in certain places which I do not favor, and I have no allusion to them; but there are some those of us on this side of the Chamber very earnestly favor, and we at least desire to have the opportunity to have the Senate pass upon them before the session shall have been adjourned.

Mr. HALE. I have no doubt the Senator will have that opportunity. The appropriation bills—I think Senators will bear me out in the statement—are not either by the Committee on Appropriations or the other committees that have them in charge unduly prolonged in the Senate. They do not confiscate the time of the Senate. Considering the amount of money that is involved in them, all the expenditures of the Government, it is remarkable how little time they take and how small is their encroachment upon other bills.

But, at the same time, it is necessary for the Committee on Appropriations and the other committees that have them in charge to get them before the body, because they have to run through the Senate; then they have to go to the House for the amendments to be acted upon, and then pass the crucible of conference reports, and there has to be, in the last month of every session, a good deal of vigilance in seeing that the appropriation bills are presented as fast as possible to the Senate. Then they are out of the way. In fact, the rules are based upon the idea that they shall have preference.

I never have known a time when complaint was made that the appropriation bills take undue time. So far as I am concerned, I do not encroach, nor do any of my associates on the committee, nor do the chairmen of the other committees having them in charge encroach upon the time of the Senate.

I made the suggestion because the desire was expressed by several Senators. The first suggestion, as I said, was to adjourn until Saturday, but it seemed to me that we had better devote Friday to business, and I especially was interested, because we have an important appropriation bill to be reported on that day. I leave it entirely, of course, to the Senate to decide the matter.

Mr. BACON. I have no doubt that the suggestion of the Senator from Maine will be favorably acted upon by the Senate. I wish to say that no one has ever accused the Appropriations Committee or the committees which have appropriation bills of unduly occupying the time of the Senate in their consideration. My observation has been the other way.

Mr. HALE. I was going to say, it has been rather the other way.

Mr. BACON. I think we ought to give a little more consideration to them. As I suggested the other day, when the Senator was protesting against some very large expenditures which were recommended, it would be well if the Appropriations Committee would take the balance of us in their confidence a little and tell us a little more about these appropriation bills when passed, and take a little more time in their consideration.

But I rose simply to say, in response to the Senator in connection with my former suggestion as to a desire upon our part for some legislation, that while it is true, as stated by the Senator, that it has been universally the case that not much time has been occupied by the Senate in the disposal of appropriation bills, it is equally true, universally true, that when the appropriation bills have been passed Congress adjourns regardless of other legislation. Therefore we desire to have some legislation before all the appropriation bills are passed.

Mr. HALE. I ask that the question be put on my motion, that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet on Friday next.

The motion was agreed to.

COMPANIES B, C, AND D, TWENTY-FIFTH INFANTRY.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I desire to give notice that on Monday, after the conclusion of the morning business, I desire to make some remarks upon the bill (S. 6206) for the relief of certain former members of the Twenty-fifth Regiment of United States Infantry.

INDIAN ALLOTMENTS IN OKLAHOMA.

Mr. GORE. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 6525) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to remove restrictions on Indian allotments in Oklahoma for school-site purposes.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments, on page 1, line 7, after the word "prices," to insert "to be fixed;" and on page 2, line 4, after the words "full bloods," to insert "and minors," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to sell for school purposes to school districts of the State of Oklahoma, from the unallotted lands of the Five Civilized Tribes, tracts of lands not to exceed 2 acres in any one district at prices to be fixed and under regulations to be prescribed by him, and proper conveyance of such lands shall be executed in accordance with existing laws and regulating the conveyance of tribal property; and the Secretary of the Interior also shall have the authority to remove the restrictions on the sale of such lands, not to exceed 2 acres in each case, as allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes, and allottees under the jurisdiction of the Osage and Quapaw Indian agencies, including full bloods and minors who may desire to sell for school purposes.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. KEAN. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 6 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Friday, April 17, 1908, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, April 15, 1908.

[Continuation of the legislative day of Monday, April 6, 1908.]

The recess having expired, at 11 o'clock and 30 minutes a. m. the House was called to order by the Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The question recurs on the pending motion of the gentleman from Illinois that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. WILLIAMS) there were—60 ayes and 30 noes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I respectfully ask for tellers.

Mr. PAYNE. I make the point that the motion is dilatory.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that when one asks for tellers, after a division which shows the absence of a quorum, that that certainly can not be considered dilatory.

The SPEAKER. Evidently a quorum is not present, but there are twice as many voting "aye" as voting "no." There are other ways of ascertaining, but the Chair is inclined to sustain the point of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I was afraid that the Chair would be so inclined, and I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, evidently no quorum is present, and in order to have the yeas and nays under a call of the House under the rule, I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I make the point of order that the gentleman's suggestion of no quorum is dilatory.

The SPEAKER. On the contrary, the Chair is of opinion that it is the most speedy way to get a quorum.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I was afraid that the Chair would so hold.

The SPEAKER. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant-at-Arms will notify absent Members, and all those in favor of the motion will, when their names are called, answer "yea," and those opposed "nay;" and those present and not voting will answer "present." The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 263, nays 6, answered "present" 16, not voting 102, as follows:

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The doors were opened. Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 20471, the naval appropriation bill, with Mr. MANN in the chair.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD rose.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. At what stage of the bill are we, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 75, line 17.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, I ask now to return at this time to the paragraph that was passed by consent yesterday that I may offer an amendment to that paragraph.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Pending that, Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment here which I would like to have voted on now, if it is agreeable to the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. Before the Clerk commences to read, the committee will return to the portion of the bill that was passed for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will not do that now. The paragraph involves the expenditure of a large amount of money on a great many ships, and I know that Members would like to have some information in regard to the necessity for these repairs and the character of them, in order that we may have a record of them and of what is asked.

Mr. PADGETT. Then, Mr. Chairman, I will pass that matter for the present.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I now offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 75, after line 16, insert:

"That so much of the act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1897, and for other purposes, as reads, 'And provided further: That hereafter no payment shall be made from appropriations made by Congress to any officer in the Navy or Marine Corps on the active or retired list while such officer is employed after June 30, 1897, by any person or company furnishing naval supplies or war material to the Government; and such employment is hereby made unlawful after said date,' be amended by striking out the words 'or retired.'"

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order on that.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order.

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Pending the point of order, I would like to state briefly what this amendment means. I suppose, Mr. Chairman, that this amendment would have come more appropriately at another stage of the bill, but I did not happen to be on the floor when that part of the bill was passed. Now, this will correct some legislation that became a part of the naval appropriation bill in 1897, which very grievously discriminates against retired officers in the Navy. It prohibits any retired officer in the Navy, young or old, and for whatever purpose he may have been retired, whether on account of physical disability or age, from getting employment or taking employment in connection with the persons who deal with the Government of the United States. There is no such restriction applying to the retired officers in the Army, and it operates as a very grievous burden to many of the men who are now on the retired list. Many young men have left the Navy—retired necessarily under the rules on account of physical incapacity or disability—who are perfectly able to render valuable service to men in private life, and this prevents them from rendering such service where their employers are furnishing material to the Government.

There are many men on the retired list, retired for age, who are perfectly capable of rendering valuable service and taking valuable compensation therefor who are prohibited by this provision, which went through on an appropriation bill in 1897, from receiving such compensation as retired officers if they render such service, and no legitimate reason, in my judgment, can be suggested why the rendering of such services is in any way disadvantageous to the Government. Now, I will send to the desk and ask to have read, as a further explanation of this proposition, an editorial from the Washington Post, after which I hope the gentleman who raised the point of order, taking into account the obvious merits involved in this proposition, will feel as though he might withdraw it and let this become a part of this bill. I do not ordinarily believe in legislation on appropriation bills, but this particular legislation that this undertakes to correct went through in the first instance on an appropriation bill, and if there is any excuse for such legislation, there is certainly reason why this also, for the purpose of correcting that, should become a part of this appropriation bill. Now I will ask that the Clerk will read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read in the gentleman's time.

The Clerk read as follows:

[Editorial Washington Post, February 10, 1908.]

AN UNJUST LAW.

A contemporary records the interesting fact that, a few days since, a naval surgeon on the retired list, now engaged in private practice, was called upon to perform a serious operation for appendicitis at the home of a wealthy butcher. The operation successfully performed and the patient fully recovered, the latter asked the surgeon for his bill, and received this surprising reply: "My charge would ordinarily be $200, but, inasmuch as you occasionally supply the navy-yard with beef, I am forbidden by law to accept a cent."

This recalls an equally ludicrous case in which a junior lieutenant on the retired list of the Navy, at present practicing law, defended before a police court a captain of a sand scow charged with having assaulted one of his crew. After securing the acquittal of his client, and as he was about to receive a much coveted fee of $15, it developed that the captain had a contract for supplying the local navy-yard with $100 worth of sand. "Nothing doing," replied the lawyer, as he dejectedly pushed back the bills offered by his client. "I'm a junior lieutenant, placed on the retired list of the Navy because of heart disease contracted in the line of duty, and the law forbids my taking any compensation from you."

These incidents, incredible as they seem, are based upon an amendment to the naval appropriation act of 1897, as follows:

"Hereafter no payment shall be made from appropriations made by Congress to any officer in the Navy or Marine Corps, on the active or retired list, while such an officer is employed, after June 30, 1897, by any person or company furnishing naval supplies or war material to the Government; and such employment is hereby made unlawful after said date."

The intent of this act is very plain. It is to prevent the improper employment by contractors of officers in the Navy and Marine Corps. It should apply to Army officers also. But, as it stands, it works an injustice to the officers affected, and it should be amended so that officers in any branch of the service may honestly perform services for civilians and accept pay for them. The precautions against possible grafting ought to be made in such fashion as to avoid working a hardship to men who have no desire to graft, and who ask only a fair opportunity to utilize honorably the ability and experience they may possess.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. Does the gentleman from Illinois insist upon his point of order?

Mr. MADDEN. Yes, sir. In the first place, Mr. Chairman, I think it is bad policy to legislate on an appropriation bill. This amendment is not germane to the part of the bill to which it is offered as an amendment. The policy of allowing retired officers to enter the service of people who are engaged in furnishing the Government supplies is a bad policy and ought not to be tolerated, and hence I insist upon the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maine desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. No; I concede I am entirely at the mercy of my friend from Illinois. There is no question of its being legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. CROCKETT, its reading clerk, announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution and bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. R. 66. Joint resolution providing for additional lands for Wyoming under the provisions of the Carey Act;

S. 5657. An act to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a building thereon at Westerly, R. I.;

S. 4692. An act providing for the purchase of a site for a public building at Poplar Bluff, Mo.;

S. 1762. An act for the relief of the trustees of the Davenport Female College; and

S. 1385. An act to authorize the sale and disposition of a portion of the surplus and unallotted lands in the Cheyenne River and Standing Rock Indian reservations, in the States of South Dakota and North Dakota, and making appropriation and provision to carry the same into effect.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 17305. An act to regulate the establishment and maintenance of private hospitals and asylums in the District of Columbia.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following concurrent resolution, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed and bound at the Government Printing Office 10,000 copies of the preliminary report of the Inland Waterways Commission, with illustrations, of which 5,000 copies shall be for the House of Representatives, 2,500 copies for the Senate, and 2,500 copies for the use of the Commission.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. WILSON of Illinois, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 15653. An act to increase the pension of widows, minor children, etc., of deceased soldiers of the late civil war, the war with Mexico, the various Indian wars, etc., and to grant a pension to certain widows of the deceased soldiers and sailors of the late civil war.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total under quartermaster, Marine Corps, $2,316,999.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. An all-important question is before this House to-day. Shall we abandon our traditional policy maintained since the very foundation of the Republic and become involved in the antagonisms and conflicts of other nations? Shall we take a step which the world will interpret as one of militant ambition for empire? We can not explain this ambitious programme by the claim that we desire to become the peacemaker of the world. If we make such a claim, the judicious will say it will prove ineffective, the skeptical will term it a dream, and the unfriendly will call it a specious pretense.

In the discussion of this proposition for the enlargement of our fleet of battle ships I wish to emphasize an undeniable fact. Our country has enjoyed an unprecedented growth and has attained a position in the very fore front among nations, not by the strength of armies or navies, but by our unique position and by the confidence in our impartiality and justice. This does not mean that we have not achieved most notable triumphs on the land and on the sea. American valor is entitled to the highest praise, and we may congratulate ourselves that whenever the Republic is in peril tens of thousands will rise up ready to defend our country with the last drop of their blood. We have relied more upon the efficiency and quality of our armies and navies than upon numbers or even preparedness.

Especial attention should be given to that which is the most prominent feature of our diplomatic relations—the Monroe doctrine. It is easy to prove that this has been maintained and has gained the acquiescence of all nations not by reason of military armament at all. At first we had the friendly suggestion and then the support of England in the enunciation of this principle. What is the basis of the Monroe doctrine? It is this: That the Western Hemisphere is not merely geographically separate from the Eastern Hemisphere, but politically distinct as well. We have here separate interests, different political conceptions and ideas. So from the days of President Monroe, and even before—for we may find traces of the doctrine in the days of Washington—we have asserted our title to the predominant power in this hemisphere. That claim has come to be, if not a rule of international law, nevertheless, by the comity of nations and by universal consent, a settled doctrine or principle.

In every instance it has been sustained without any exercise of physical force. Not a single gun has been fired, not a sword has been raised in support of the Monroe doctrine at any time. The most strenuous assertion of it was in the years 1895 and 1896. The United States insisted that, in a boundary dispute between Venezuela and Great Britain, the decision should be left to arbitration. Whatever may have been the relations of the nations of Europe with Great Britain, the political opinion of all those countries was against us.

Mr. HOBSON. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Yes.

Mr. HOBSON. Would the gentleman, in the present state of arbitration in the world, leave the vital interests of the nation to depend upon arbitration when there is no arbitration for vital interests?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I would leave them to arbitration if I could, and, if not, to our prestige as a nation and the world's desire for peace. [Applause.]

Mr. HOBSON. To our strength?

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Our strength not only in our Navy and Army, but in our resources and our position in the world. There is no country, strong or weak in military armament, which desires the ill will of the American nation. [Applause.] This contention of ours was promptly acquiesced in.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for, say, five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Now, what was the relative strength of the two countries at that time? We had three first-class battle ships and two second class—five in all. Great Britain had over thirty, and, as I said, the political opinion of Europe, whether friendly to Great Britain or not, was against us. Is not this an absolute demonstration that it was not by the strength of our Navy or by any dependence upon it, but because of our standing among the nations and the acquiescence in that doctrine, that arbitration was obtained? I could refer to a score of instances, but I will mention only one or two more. France, Great Britain, and Spain made a quasi alliance in 1861 for the collection of debts in Mexico. At the very beginning they signed an agreement that they should not seek to acquire any territory. When France seemed to show designs for colonial acquisition, or for the setting up of a dynasty under the control of Emperor Napoleon, Great Britain and Spain promptly withdrew. We were at that time engaged in the bloodiest civil war in the history of nations. But what was the result? France failed to obtain a permanent foothold in that country, and the Monroe doctrine remained unshaken.

And so it will be in the future. Nations are not now allowed to acquire additional territory without the consent of the rest, except in the case of barbarous tribes occupying territory such as that of Africa or some of the outlying portions of the earth; and their so-called "spheres of influence" are defined. There is a concert of action among them, a balance of power to be preserved, so that no acquisition shall be made by one without general approval. And if this doctrine has been maintained when we had a weak Navy, when we had no Navy, and at times when political rivalries and contests were rife in the world, how much more will it be maintained in these early days of the twentieth century, when every tendency is toward a community of interest among nations, when disturbance of the world's peace awakens universal disapprobation, and when the strong are not allowed to impose upon the weak? [Applause.] We can not be compared with China. We are not in the same class. [Applause.]

Mention has been made of those who have migrated to this country from foreign lands and of the oppression practiced upon those of their kindred or race by foreign governments. There is not one of us who has not the most heartfelt sympathy for the downtrodden Jews of Russia, and for all others who suffer wrong in other lands; but do we mean that we are to take up the sword on behalf of all those who dwell in any nation represented by immigrants in this country? If so, we have all Europe to contend with, and not four battle ships, but fifty, is what our programme should be. And again, we have accomplished much more for the oppressed and unfortunate citizens of the Old World in other ways. It has been by remonstrance, by the influences of diplomacy, by holding up a higher ideal of the relation between rulers and peoples, an ideal which looks toward the equality of all men before the law. [Applause.]

When you abandon these helpful policies and say that not by moral forces, but by means of a navy, with which we shall become involved in conflicts with them all—then shall we lose our opportunity and fail to accomplish such triumphs of amelioration as were achieved under Secretary Hay, under Secretary Root, and under a long line of their illustrious predecessors. If there were time I should be glad to exhibit the utterly illogical nature of the argument in favor of four new battle ships. What is sought? Are we to have a preponderating navy? Why, if we build more battle ships, Great Britain, which seeks to have a navy equal to the maximum of any two powers, will prosecute her naval programme, keeping just as far in advance as now.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, with the kind consent of the committee, I should like to have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. No ministry in Great Britain, Conservative or Liberal, could abandon this policy of a navy as great as that of any other two nations. There is a strong sentiment there for peace, but not strong enough to prevail against that long-cherished plan. We would then be still further involved in the mad race for naval expansion, in expenditures which have already become too burdensome for endurance. We may safely say that, just as it is always darkest before day, so light is already beginning to peer through the darkness. Under more enlightened policies, which will surely prevail, the limitation of armaments will come by necessity in the very near future.

Now, as regards our becoming the world's peacemaker. What does the task of a peacemaker involve? It requires that when two countries are in or near to a conflict, we will say to them: "You must settle your differences." If they do not agree upon a settlement such as we approve, then we must take the side of one or the other. That means war. It not only means war between us and one or the other, but it means that other nations will be involved in the conflict.

I want to call attention in this connection to a destructive argument in regard to the Monroe doctrine. It is said that we must have a larger navy. It is said that we could have prevented the trouble in Manchuria if we had possessed more battle ships. Anyone who will pause and reflect must realize that such intervention would mean an absolute abandonment of the Monroe doctrine. Its very fundamental principle was and is that the Old World must keep out of the New, because it does not belong to it, and the New World must keep out of the Old, because it does not belong there. So that when we begin to talk of a larger navy to compel nations to do our bidding to make peace, then we are getting away not only from the ancient moorings, from our policy of peace and nonintervention, but from our greatly prized Monroe doctrine.

The argument has been even carried so far as to suggest that it is necessary for us to have a larger navy in order to encourage the spread of the Gospel. How absurd that is! It would be saying to the peoples that do not embrace Christianity, "You have not accepted our religion. Now, we have a navy. We can burn your towns, slay innocent women and children; you had better accept our religion or a worse thing will come to you." Can anything be more contrary to the spirit of Christianity?

No. Let us continue our traditional policy, not indeed one of weakness, nor yet of nonresistance, but one of confidence in our strength as a nation. Our military strength, though mighty in its possibilities, is but a part; our material strength is much more; but most of all can we rely upon those great moral and political principles which have made our country what it is, the eternal principles of justice to all, the equality of man. Those great ideas are stronger than battle ships. Along those lines lie our destiny and our glory. We can already claim the position of the proudest and most progressive nation on the globe. How much more, in the coming years, by promoting peace and justice, can we conserve all the influences of the past and gain, in ever-increasing measure, the confidence, the good will, and the cooperation of all the nations of the earth! [Loud and long-continued applause.]

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that I may be allowed to proceed for fifteen minutes.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I shall not object to the gentleman proceeding for fifteen minutes, but after that I shall object to any further discussion until we reach that paragraph in the bill upon which this discussion is more appropriate.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the gentleman from New York is recognized for fifteen minutes.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I was on my feet. I am disposed to object unless we are allowed——

The CHAIRMAN. There are no conditions in an objection. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. KEIFER. Well, I will withdraw my objection, with the understanding that I may have some time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not have any such understanding.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, with the entire argument of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] I am in the most hearty accord. The message of the Commander in Chief, however, it seems to me, has placed a new aspect upon this entire question, which I desire to place before this House. As to a large part of that message—its arguments, the conclusions it draws from the facts of history—I take the position so ably stated by the gentleman from Ohio; but in that part of it where the Commander in Chief declares upon his solemn responsibility that the exigencies and requirements of the national defense demand the construction of these four battle ships, a question is submitted to us which it seems to me must be considered at closer range than that occupied by the gentleman from Ohio.

On every deduction that can be drawn from general historical facts I think the duty of this House is imperative to reach its own conclusions, giving to arguments proceeding from any source—whether it be the White House, this floor, or the Chamber at the other end of the Capitol—exactly the weight which in our judgment they deserve. But when the national defense is affected, we then reach a ground of vastly greater delicacy and much greater parliamentary difficulty. When the Commander in Chief declares that anything is essential to our defense, he being charged with peculiar responsibility for it, with sources of information largely denied to us, it becomes our pressing duty to inquire whether there be anything in our situation, foreign or domestic, that justifies or even lends plausibility to his recommendation. If it be purely fanciful, we must of course dismiss it as the fruit of fanciful fears and apprehensions should be dismissed; but if there be anything in our situation that gives it point and effect, then, it seems to me, we are bound to remember the constitutional responsibility placed on him and our own duty to provide him with the means by which this the most important of his duties may be effectually discharged.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman permit an interruption?

Mr. COCKRAN. I have very little time. If the gentleman will wait until I conclude, I will welcome any questions.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. It is right in that connection.

Mr. COCKRAN. No; I have only fifteen minutes at my disposal. I must ask the Chair to protect me from interruption now. I will answer the gentleman as fully as he may wish at the conclusion if he will get me additional time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, I fully agree with the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] that there is no reason to apprehend danger from any foreign government. I repeat my profound regret that we ever abandoned the policy of peaceful, imposing isolation which the gentleman lauds in terms which it richly deserves.

I regret that we ever undertook the establishment of a permanent fighting force and abandoned that peaceful attitude from which we won a consequence in this world without parallel in the history of nations, when our word carried a weight vastly greater than ever armaments enforced, when we wielded an influence far beyond any that could have been established by force, entirely through the good character that we enjoyed. But we have undertaken the construction of the Navy, and I am sorry for it. While I would resist every attempt to increase it, but would gladly get rid of it if there were nothing but ordinary foreign complications to be apprehended, there is another aspect of the question which forces me to wholly different conclusions.

I agree that we have no possessions which any other nation covets. I agree that no other nation possesses anything which we desire, but none the less I discern a cloud upon our horizon which may easily grow until the entire sky over our heads be darkened. It is not a danger arising from anything that any foreign government plots or plans or meditates. It is a difficulty which I believe both the governments concerned are most anxious to avoid. Nevertheless it remains a serious menace to peace. I certainly would not vote for an appropriation that would launch us upon the ambitious mission of enforcing a world-wide peace sketched by the gallant gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] last Saturday. I deny that we have any right to enforce our notions of justice upon another country in a matter with which we have no direct concern. We have all that we can do in keeping ourselves from injuring others. Nations and men exhaust their capacity for good when they do justice themselves. [Applause.] Should we undertake to enforce our notions of justice on another country in a matter foreign to ourselves we would be attempting to establish complete authority over it.

If we directed Russia to vacate Manchuria, as was suggested here on Saturday, we would be asserting complete sovereignty over her. We could not do more than that if we had actually disarmed all her fighting force, demolished all her fortifications, taken possession of all her seaports. No nation could tolerate such pretensions on our part and maintain even a simulacrum of independence. I will never cast a vote for a policy that might launch us on such an enterprise of waste, ruin, and desolation, none the less disastrous in its fruits because it may be undertaken with lofty ideas of justice and morality.

But, Mr. Chairman, without engaging in foreign adventures, we have here upon our soil a question, a burning question, one that may involve us in the gravest difficulties at any moment in a most unexpected manner. We have two races dwelling on the Pacific coast.

The history of the world is absolutely without a single break in teaching the lesson that where two races come in contact there must be conflict unless one admits superiority of the other. We have had two races here in the South. There is peace, because one acknowledges superiority of the other, or at least superiority was asserted by one and the other has submitted. Wherever it is not conceded peacefully it will be asserted by one, and asserted by violence, until the other acknowledges it. I regret this myself. I had hoped that the virtues which the Japanese displayed before and after the Russian war, their moderation in victory, their tender care for the captured and wounded, would establish a new footing for them in the eyes of their white brethren. I had even hoped respect for their qualities might have led to some plan or basis by which those highly intelligent laborers would be welcomed here, or at least suffered to come in contact with us for industry, they improving our resources by their labor, while vastly improving their own condition by the wages earned in this land. But recent events on the Pacific coast have dispelled these hopes finally, completely, irretrievably.

This country is the El Dorado of the Japanese. Their eyes are turned toward it. Many of them are here—many more are eager to come. But the people of the Pacific coast will not allow them to dwell there—at least on a basis of equality, and they accept no other. Now, everybody recognizes that. The President of the United States recognizes it. Everybody concedes there is only one peaceful outcome, and that is exclusion of the yellow man. But Japan refuses to make a treaty of exclusion, though it is an open secret that the Japanese Government has undertaken to prevent emigration of Japanese laborers to these shores. Practical exclusion is promised us, though the Japanese authorities do not venture to make a formal arrangement for exclusion, through fear of public opinion in their own land.

The President, I think, believes that if this practical exclusion can be secured it will meet all the requirements of the situation, because there being few women of that race in this country—if further influx can be prevented—at the end of nine or ten years the number of Japanese must become so diminished by natural causes that they would be a negligible quantity. But if the measures taken by the Japanese Government informally be not effective and the number of Japanese in this country continues to increase, then there must be an exclusion bill. The sentiment of the Pacific coast demands it. No other solution is possible. These yellow men will not be suffered to dwell upon the terms of equality on which they insist side by side with white men. Now, the passage of an exclusion bill, everybody knows, would be deemed an unfriendly act by the Japanese Government. Their ambassador would probably be withdrawn, and what is meant when the Japanese Government holds an act to be unfriendly and withdraws its diplomatic representative the world has learned through the experience of the last few years.

Mr. Chairman, here is a situation sufficiently grave to justify me in complying with any reasonable demand of the Executive for additional measures of defense. [Applause.] But that is not all. Hitherto we have been considering measures that the Government can control. Conceive this situation in some of its aspects that no government can control. To talk about peace being secure while that question remains acute on the Pacific coast is about as sensible as to assume that a man can be perfectly safe while standing over a powder magazine with a lighted torch in his hand. I can conceive a condition which every gentleman from the Pacific coast will tell you is neither unreasonable nor improbable and which might involve us overnight in the gravest complications.

Suppose a native of Japan should offer an indignity to a white woman on the Pacific coast. Does anybody doubt that, whatever might be the penalty demanded by local laws against that offense, public opinion would be satisfied with nothing less than a capital expiation? Does anybody believe that public opinion would even brook the delay incidental to judicial process? And that is not all. Suppose some person guilty of such a crime should escape and obtain shelter in a settlement of his own countrymen, who might seek to conceal him from judicial pursuit. Is it not conceivable that before the fury which would assuredly be awakened by such a crime and the apprehension that it might go unpunished the settlement itself might be exterminated?

I see a smile of incredulity upon the face of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. TAWNEY]. Has he forgotten what occurred in New Orleans fifteen or sixteen years ago, when a number of Italians, white men, members of our own race though of a different family, who had been acquitted by a jury on a charge of murder, were taken by the populace and hanged?

Does the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] doubt if a white woman were outraged by a yellow man that vengeance prompter than that of the New Orleans populace would follow swiftly, inexorably? Would not a more violent outbreak, in all probability, be provoked by this darker crime, for in this country the purity of woman is held sacred, even above human life. [Applause.]

Now, conceive such a catastrophe as I have suggested to have occurred. It is not an extravagant conception. Do you believe it impossible that there would be reprisals in Tokyo or Yokohama? Do you think there is no danger of such a calamity? The Italian Government, after the New Orleans lynchings, withdrew its minister, practically breaking off diplomatic relations with us, until the question was settled by Mr. Blaine, and its settlement was one of the triumphs of his administration. But does anybody think Italy would have been satisfied with the tardy compensation made to the families of the victims if she had been strong enough to demand prompter and more radical reparation? And if the Italian people believed their Government strong enough to cope with us, is it impossible that they would have indulged in riotous demonstrations, possibly sacrificing American lives in Italian cities? Do you think the question would have been settled as peacefully and as consistently with civilization as Mr. Blaine succeeded in settling it if our superior strength had not rendered aggressive measures unthinkable?

The danger here is that this yellow race, jealous of its equality, believing itself to be quite on a par with the best of the white race, if such a disaster should supervene, would at once undertake reprisals—possibly for the purpose of forcing their own Government into hostilities. A Japanese mob might lay violent hands on some of our citizens—not American laborers, for there are none in Japan, but upon American citizens of consequence, possibly on our consul or our ambassador—and if violence were done to one of our representatives, do you think it would be possible then to undertake peaceful negotiations? The only way that danger can be averted is to satisfy the Japanese multitude by such a display of superior force at our command that we are too strong to be assailed, that violence under any circumstances to American representatives would but entail fresh humiliation on the perpetrators. Then there would be opportunity for reflection, negotiations, settlement on some basis of justice consistent with equity and our own dignity. I assume the President had this situation before his eyes when he penned this message.

At least, it is before my eyes, and realizing its importance, its gravity, all the tremendous possibilities involved in it, when the Commander in Chief declares that we need four additional ships of this character to maintain our security, I deplore the fact; I regret it. But I recognize the chief responsibility is his, as the exclusive knowledge is his, and I shall cast my vote to shift that burden of obligation from us, where it rests now, to his shoulders by affording him all the means of defense which he considers essential to the security of the country. [Applause.]

Mr. RAINEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I listen, Mr. Chairman, always with pleasure and often with great profit to the remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN].

Mr. FOSS. I would like to ask what is pending before the committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. A motion to strike out the last word.

Mr. RAINEY. The last two words.

Mr. FOSS. I understand that this has been discussed fifteen minutes upon each side, and I will have to object unless there is——

Mr. RAINEY. I have the floor, I believe, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted. Without objection, the motion to strike out the last word will be withdrawn. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY].

Mr. RAINEY. I move to strike out the last two words. As I said, I often listen with great profit to the eloquence of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN]. I admire his ability in the space of time of a few months to occupy exactly opposite positions upon the same subject. [Applause.]

Two years ago, sitting here in the House, I listened to a speech by the gentleman from New York. On the 16th day of May, 1906, there was pending here in the House the matter of building the first great American Dreadnought, and at that time the gentleman from New York spoke most eloquently against that proposition. Nothing has happened since then to change the status of affairs. There were just as many yellow men on the coast of California then as there are to-day. We were established in the islands of the sea then just as we are to-day. Since that time the President has sent to this House at least 150 messages [laughter], and not one of them affected the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] in the least, except the message that reached the House on yesterday advocating four battle ships. The gentleman for some reason was so much impressed by the fact that this one man out of the 85,000,000 of men in the United States had declared in favor of four battle ships that he at once reached the same conclusion. Now, I can not make a better speech against this proposition than to read from the gentleman himself—from his remarks delivered in the House on the 16th day of May, 1906. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I read on page 6975 of the RECORD of the first session of the Fifty-ninth Congress, from the speech of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN]. I never can hope to equal in eloquence the gentleman from New York, and therefore on this occasion I adopt his own speech.

> The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BUTLER] published a speech in the RECORD of the 10th, which had for its caption, "The man with the gun; is he an evil?" where, in rhetoric that is almost rhapsodical, he is painted as the hope of progress, the rampart of peace, the bulwark of civilization.
> Reading that interesting effusion, I was struck with what seems to be a glaring injustice perpetrated, though quite unconsciously, by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Why has he lavished all his praises on one exponent of force while excluding from the scope of his panegyric all other agents of violence? While he rejoices in the activity and hopes for the permanence of the man at the gun, why does he not lament the disappearance of "the man with the tomahawk," who may have been of less actual efficiency, but who was certainly of equal enthusiasm in the destruction of human life?
> [Applause.]
> Why does he begrudge a word of praise to "the man with the bludgeon," whom people less enlightened than the gentleman from Pennsylvania send to jail or the scaffold when in the exercise of his activities he beats or kills a traveler on the public highway? Why is the gentleman forgetful of "the man with the brass knuckles," who, though he does not rise to the dignity of homicide, is yet deeply convinced that peace is demoralizing, and who, though he does not often destroy his neighbor's life, yet always does his humble but diligent best to reduce the pulchritude of his neighbor's countenance?
> [Laughter and applause.]
> Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that notwithstanding the carefully studied language employed by its supporters it is the spirit of savagery that has been let loose in support of this proposal to construct the biggest engine of destruction in the world.
> [Applause.]
> Not one single argument has been advanced to the reason or intelligence of this House. There is but one redeeming feature in all this rhetoric. It shows that this country is still governed by a strong love of peace, since the men who favor building this battle ship pretend it is intended not for aggression, but for defense. But, sir, this assertion is more creditable to their ingenuity than to their candor.
> [Applause.]
> Defense against whom? Where is the foe that menaces us? The transparent character of this pretense becomes obvious the moment we examine it. In the face of this action, any attempt on our part to take the lead in a movement for peace becomes extravagant and farcical. How can we pretend to be sincerely desirous of peace while we are taking the lead in constructing machinery of war? The gentleman from Missouri apparently believes that we can establish peace upon the basis of eloquence; that while we are multiplying the engines of war we can become effective agents for peace merely by professing attachment to it. If peace can be established upon the basis of eloquence, we have but to send him to attend an international conference and the white dove will spread her wings over this continent and all the civilized world.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAINEY. I hope I may have leave to read the remainder of this.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. COCKRAN. I hope there will be no objection.

The CHAIRMAN (after a pause). The Chair hears none.

Mr. RAINEY. I continue to read from the speech of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN]:

> Does anyone suppose that in view of our experience any nation of the world would take these islands from us as a gift? If they ever do go to another power, then I pray it may be to mine enemy. What else do we possess which any other power would accept even as a free gift? Does anyone suppose that if we offered to present a State of this Union, or one of our Territories, to any nation in the world, the offer would be accepted? And if there be nothing on the surface of this globe which we possess that any other nation desires, is there anything possessed by any other nation that we covet, that we would take by force of arms, or that we would be willing to accept? About what, then, can we ever go to war? On what ground can anyone assail us, or are we likely to attack any other power? What, then, in the name of common sense, becomes of the pretense that this increase of armament by the addition of an enormous battle ship is necessary to our defense? I admit a certain force in the appeal to imagination and national pride when we are urged to place among our possessions anything which is the biggest of its kind on earth. Mr. Chairman, I am somewhat sensible to an appeal of that character myself. This is the biggest country in the world, and the biggest things proper to the sphere in which she moves are her natural possessions and her suitable adornment.
> I want the biggest things on earth in every field where our history, our tradition, our civilization invites us to compete for preeminence. I would like to see the largest engine of production developed by American genius. I abhor the thought that we would engage in a competition to produce the most effective engine of destruction. What is there that would justify us in arming against our neighbors? I ask once more, gentlemen on the other side, especially the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT], since there is no thirst for territory on our part to gratify or on the part of any other nation that we are concerned to resist. I pause for an answer. There is none and there can be none. Some gentlemen talk vaguely about an open door in China, as though we could institute an active and prosperous commerce with a 12-inch gun. Some gentlemen seem to think that if we want to sell goods in the East an American war ship must be near by, but I don't think anyone seriously believes war ships can be turned into vessels for transporting freight.

Mr. COCKRAN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. RAINEY. Yes, sir.

Mr. COCKRAN. Had the trouble about the schools in San Francisco taken place before that speech was made or since?

Mr. RAINEY. I do not think there ever was anything in the trouble about the schools.

Mr. COCKRAN. But the race question was accentuated by that very disturbance.

Mr. RAINEY. We have had a race question on the Pacific coast ever since the first Chinaman landed there and taught Americans how to play poker [long continued laughter], and it is no more serious now than it has always been.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. PADGETT. I ask that the gentleman may have time to read one other sentence.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. RAINEY. I read again from the same speech:

Does anybody believe that force can play any part in peaceful commerce? Do not gentlemen realize that to the extent we waste our national treasure in constructing these destructive engines we withdraw it from the productive enterprises which are the legitimate fields of peaceful and profitable competition between civilized men?

Before sitting down I ask any gentleman on the other side to point out one single tangible, comprehensible reason why our Navy should be increased. Now, Mr. Chairman, I believe that we have to-day a navy far in excess of our needs; certainly a navy far in excess of any need that has been pointed out upon that side. I would like to know if there be any reason which this debate has not disclosed that could justify such an increase as the one proposed by this bill in our naval armament?

And again I read from the speech of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN]:

Mr. VREELAND. I desire the gentleman to state during the remainder of his time how large a navy, in the opinion of the gentleman, the United States ought to maintain, if any.

Mr. COCKRAN. I will answer very frankly, Mr. Chairman, that a navy equal to that which was strong enough to force arbitration upon reluctant England after the close of our civil war, when our credit was so low that gold commanded a high premium in our currency, would be, in my judgment, a big enough navy now, when we have no question to settle and no powerful country to coerce, either by moral or physical force.

I regret that I do not have the time to read this entire speech, but I have read enough of it to show that the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] has without much provocation changed his mind on this question. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I move to close debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto in ten minutes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask the gentleman to make it fifteen minutes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves that all debate upon the pending paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in ten minutes.

Mr. FOSS. I will make it fifteen minutes. I wish, first, to say that we have not yet reached the paragraph for the increase of the Navy. When that is reached there will be opportunity for more debate. I renew my motion to close debate in fifteen minutes.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, neither I nor any other man in the United States acquainted with recent history was at all astonished at the reading of the President's message. He has taught the doctrine that war develops manlike virtues and that peace is a sloth breeder. It is nothing new for him to speak in this vein. None of us is, of course, astonished at the position occupied by my young friend and colleague, Captain HOBSON. We expected that. He is a young enthusiast. He is an expert along certain lines. His mind has been entirely absorbed in thought along those lines, and he is entirely absorbed in them yet. He is like an agrostologist or entomologist in the Department of Agriculture, who could prove to you any hour of the day that all the money spent by the Department might be properly spent in the encouragement of grass growing—and the man believes it.

And, moreover, in a certain sense, if the world had no use for any money for any other reason, what he says would be true, too. Men of that sort, Mr. Speaker, always remind me of the story of the man who came home a little the worse for wear, and his wife awakening him later in the night when, hearing a great rush of winds upon the outside, became fearful that a cyclone was approaching. After succeeding in waking him, she requested him to go to the door and look out and report what the weather appearances were. By mistake, instead of going to the door that opened upon the gallery, he went to a door that opened into a closet in which some limburger cheese had been placed. His wife still interrogating him, he finally replied: "Betty, I don't know what is the matter, but everything is as dark as the dickens and smells like cheese." [Laughter.] Take one of these enthusiasts of that description and of course everything is pessimistic to him. We have not got a perfect navy, and he wants one. He is like an eye specialist. God never made an eye to suit an eye specialist. God never made a nose to suit a nose specialist. God never made a throat to suit a throat specialist, and God never built a navy big enough and good enough to suit an enthusiastic young retired lieutenant. [Laughter and applause.] But, Mr. Chairman, while I was astonished at neither of these gentlemen, I must confess myself somewhat appalled by the speech I just listened to from "the grave and reverend signior" who is now a Representative from the State of New York, my friend Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. COCKRAN says that "the Commander in Chief" having recommended that, therefore we ought to take his advice. The gentleman from New York is mistaken about the President's title. The President is "Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States," not Commander in Chief of the Congress of the United States. [Laughter and applause.] He says that the President having declared on his solemn responsibility that the national preservation does require four battle ships, he concludes himself, as a Representative, by that. I declare "upon my solemn responsibility" that the preservation of the United States does not require four battle ships. What is the difference between the solemn responsibilities of the two, Have not I a right to be solemn and have not I a responsibility as well as the President of the United States? [Applause and laughter.] Why do I declare it? Because all this picture, evoked from the misty clouds, is nothing in the world but the product of a frightened imagination: that is all. You can get to thinking about the danger of anything——

Mr. COCKRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Just a moment. You can get to thinking about the danger of anything until you can not see anything but that. Go out and study what the white plague, tuberculosis, is doing, and think of nothing else, and see how much you want to appropriate to prevent it.

[The time of Mr. WILLIAMS having expired, by unanimous consent, at the request of Mr. MADDEN, it was extended ten minutes.]

Mr. COCKRAN. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. COCKRAN. Does the gentleman really contend that if the exclusion of the Japanese be not established by some way or other, that a very serious question is not before us?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am coming to that in a minute. I had not reached it yet. I preferred to discuss this question first. But, Mr. Chairman, I am not bound by the President's opinion as to what constitutes a sufficient national defense. These gentlemen, who are advocating four battle ships, arrogate to themselves the rôle of being those who "wish to provide a sufficient national defense." Why, there is nobody on the other side of that proposition. The only proposition is what constitutes a sufficient national defense, and in answering that question they consider nothing but our Army and Navy; but I, like the gentleman from Ohio, consider our 85,000,000 people, our broad land, our continental isolation, the necessity of our food and textile stuff to all Europe, our resources, and the facts that we not only have them, but the fact that all the world knows that we have them, and that any ministry in England or upon the Continent would be composed of fools that would seek a quarrel in any manner with the great reserve powers of this great Republic of Republics.

Why, Mr. Chairman, I suppose according to the logic of the gentleman from New York, if the President sent word here "upon his solemn responsibility as Commander in Chief" that we needed a million men for national defense there could be no sitting in judgment on his opinion. You and I would simply have to say, "Of course, Cæsar having said it, and Cæsar being Commander in Chief, that settles it." [Laughter and applause.]

That will not lead me to burden the farmers and mechanics of this country with this great additional taxation merely to provide avenues of promotion for gentlemen in the Navy.

Now, I come to the question of the Japanese immigration. We can keep out Japanese immigration better than by virtually declaring on the floor of the House of Representatives, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] this morning has done, that we are providing expenditures in preparation of war with Japan. Do you want to put her on notice that we are expecting war with her and tell her that she had better get ready, too, because we are getting ready? You ask me how we are going to stop Japanese immigration. It is being stopped now by the sagacity and good sense of the Japanese Government and its people. Japan wants no trouble with the United States. Why, some gentlemen seem to think that she has designs on us in the Philippines and elsewhere. Some gentlemen seem to think that she is merely waiting for a pretext to declare war, to take advantage of any mob or even a rape and a lynching, as we have heard this morning, that might possibly occur in California, or a quarrel about school children. I say that if she had been seeking that pretext she had it and could have embraced it before our Navy was in the Pacific Ocean, and when she knew that she was far superior to us there in every respect.

What is Japan's problem? She has lately taken over Korea, and her problem is now to consolidate her sovereignty and fix her power in the country by Japanese industrial colonization and build it up and also act as a safety valve that it may at some time relieve her of her surplus population. What is then her policy? It is to sacrifice nearly everything, except national honor—and then only when brought nearly to the straining point—to keep peace with the two great English-speaking people of the world, one, Great Britain, which has the largest navy in the world, and the other, ourselves, having the second largest navy in the world. [Applause.]

She must keep open communication between her island empire and the mainland; she must have time to work out these new problems. She has already effected an alliance with Great Britain, and she knows that we never propose to be absurd enough to interfere with her programme on the mainland in China. Nobody in the White House, if we selected one out of a lunatic asylum, would be absurd enough to think that he could transport across the miles of watery waste of the Pacific Ocean men enough of the American Army to contend with the Japanese army on land there. So we by force of circumstances will be quiescent unless we are forced into trouble, and so she is working out her problems which will be replete with great benefit to civilization when they are worked out.

But some things in the President's message strike me as curious. In substance he says now we have nothing to fear from anybody and nobody has anything to fear from us and therefore we ought to load up our hip pocket with a six shooter. [Laugher.]

We ought to go on, because nobody has anything that we want and we have nothing that anybody else wants; we ought to go prepared for war because we are expecting peace. I am tired, anyhow, of this everlasting nonsense that the best way to maintain peace is to prepare for war. [Applause.] This has ever been the pretense of militarism. I am tired of hearing that the best thing to do in times of peace is "to prepare for war!" I will tell you the best thing to do in times of peace. It is to prepare for more and longer and better and more stable and more intelligent peace. [Applause.] Away with this jingoism and the jingoes that go as incidents with it. Revert to the real American character and principle. The Monroe doctrine needs a fleet to support it! Where did the Monroe doctrine spring from? From a British cabinet. It was suggested to America from the British cabinet. Why? Because Great Britain wanted the United States to stand as lords protectors against changes of sovereignty in America, and against the reconquest by Spain to free peoples in South and Central America. She was working for her selfish interests while she put to us our selfish and national interests of hegemony in the matter also, and now we do stand there saying to the world, "We will permit no new conquests on American territory, and we will permit no changes of European sovereignty there." Thus the Monroe doctrine protects every island that Great Britain, or France, or Denmark, has in the Western Hemisphere, and if the United States threw it up to-morrow and said "We will have no more of it," Great Britain would have to assert it in her own interests.

Mr. HOBSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. HOBSON. Would the gentleman stand for having America abandon the Monroe doctrine?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Why, how could the gentleman arrive at that conclusion from anything that I have said? I have merely said it did not take ships to defend it. I have merely said that as an ally in protecting it we necessarily have Great Britain herself, that has now and will for long have the largest sea power of the world. We have protected it hitherto because other peoples were not afraid of the little American Army and the little American Navy, but they were afraid of the great American people, with their enormous resources and undoubted courage, genius, and determination. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this paragraph has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn.

Mr. HOBSON. If the gentleman would not——

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order. Debate has expired.

Mr. HOBSON. I ask unanimous consent for one minute to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this paragraph has expired.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am perfectly willing to answer it if I had the time, provided I could.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I call for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The pro forma amendment will be withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

INCREASE OF THE NAVY.

That, for the purpose of further increasing the naval establishment of the United States, the President is hereby authorized to have constructed, by contract or in navy-yards, as hereinafter provided, two first-class battle ships to cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not exceeding $6,000,000 each, similar in all essential characteristics to the battle ship authorized by the act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 76, line 2, strike out the word "two" and insert the word "four," so that it will read, "four first-class battle ships."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. TAWNEY. For the purpose of offering an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama, to strike out the word "two," in line 2, and insert the word "one."

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama is entitled to the floor.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask unanimous consent that general debate may be had upon this paragraph and all pending amendments thereto for two hours and a half. I will put it in this form. I will ask that all amendments on this paragraph may be considered as pending, and move to close debate thereon upon the paragraph and all amendments thereto in two hours and a half.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. For the purpose of asking the gentleman from Illinois whether if consent be given as now requested by him——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman understands that he is proceeding by unanimous consent?

Mr. FOSS. Entirely.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, I will ask the gentleman from Ohio to let me complete the question that I was about to put to the Chair.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I make that motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman moves that all debate close on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto in two hours and a half.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. If the motion now put to the Chair is debated, will that prevent my offering an amendment that I desire to offer to the pending paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. It will not. Amendments may be offered and there will be no debate upon them after the two and a half hours.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, another parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. If the debate upon the proposition offered by the gentleman from Alabama should take up the two and a half hours will there be opportunity to discuss an amendment which I now propose to offer, that one battle ship be built in one of the navy-yards of the Government?

The CHAIRMAN. If the motion of the gentleman from Illinois prevails all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto will expire in two and one-half hours.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SHERLEY. I desire to ask whether if consent is given to the request of the gentleman from Illinois——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman does not ask unanimous consent——

Mr. SHERLEY. Well, if the motion prevails, I desire to know if debate will proceed under the five-minute rule?

The CHAIRMAN. It will.

Mr. FOSS. And the Chair will have the disposal of the time.

Mr. KELIHER. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KELIHER. I want to inquire of the Chair if the motion of the gentleman from Illinois prevails and this paragraph is amended will an amendment to the amended paragraph be in order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state if the motion of the gentleman from Illinois prevails, this paragraph will be pending for discussion in the House under the five-minute rule for two hours and a half. Any gentleman may in his time, if he secures the floor, read an amendment and have it pending, but at the expiration of two and a half hours any amendment that is offered will be voted upon without debate.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I call for a vote.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I am the junior member of this body. I have made no pretense as to any merits, any virtues whatsoever. I believe that the gentleman from Mississippi might perhaps wait to judge me by my actions before he begins his patronizing, and I believe the gentleman from Ohio might wait similar action before he begins his rebukes. Just four years ago, almost to the day, in the city of Jasper, Ala., the then senior Democratic member on the Committee on Rivers and Harbors told the woodpecker story, and said that young man reminded him of the woodpecker that lit on an oak tree and a storm came and blew the oak tree down, and the woodpecker went out, with his tail cocked up, believing that he had blown it over. I ventured to suggest to the gentleman to wait to be sure and find out whether instead of its being the woodpecker it was not the storm that was after him.

I venture to ask the gentleman from Mississippi to wait and see whether he went into the closet or actually went out into the cyclone, and I begin by asking him and the gentleman from Ohio to do me the justice to discuss what I propose in my amendment, and not attribute to me things which I have not given them the authority to attribute. The proposition here in this amendment is not for a navy that can conquer and dominate the world. The proposition is for four first-class battle ships. The proposition before the German Parliament, which has been adopted, is for four first-class battle ships—that is, three battle ships and one great armored cruiser. The proposition before the French Chamber of Deputies is for six great battle ships, and the proposition before the Chamber of Japan is for an addition to the two laid down this year of seven more.

Will those gentlemen tell me whether, with this nation already far behind the others—only two building when Germany has five building, only two building when France has six building, only two building when Japan has completed two and is building two more; that with this nation that controls seventeen billions of the world's banking capital as compared with only about five billions for the British Empire all told, and that is the richest of the other nations; this nation with 50,000 miles of coast line on the Atlantic Ocean compared with the British with 2,200, the French with 1,700, and Germany with 800 miles; this nation with nearly 40,000 miles of coast line on the Pacific as compared with 13,000 of Japan; this nation that has thirty-seven billions of its property within gunshot of the water, more than all the rest of the world combined—whether I am rushing headlong, pellmell, going out to conquer and dominate the world, when I introduce an amendment here which not only does not maintain our nation at its present relative strength but which will make our nation go backward, even if there were no other ocean but the Atlantic Ocean to take care of? [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for fifteen minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for fifteen minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I want to know whether that is coming out of the two hours and a half or not?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the consent has been granted. The Chair waited a reasonable length of time for objection.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, to authorize four new battle ships would mean an increase for naval construction of $48,000,000 and $4,000,000 annually for maintenance when these vessels are placed in commission. The authorization of two battle ships would mean an increased expenditure for new construction of $24,000,000 and $2,000,000 annually for maintenance. The addition of the proposed four new battle ships would make our aggregate expenditures on account of the Navy next year greater than the expenditures of any country in the world for that purpose in any one year. This is no exaggeration and is not made for the purpose of exciting alarm. I have carefully analyzed the Army and Navy budgets of the United States, England, France, Germany, and Japan, and I am able, by a comparison of the expenditures for the purpose by each country named, to show that in proportion to the size of our Army and Navy we are expending this year more than 100 per cent in excess of the expenditures of any other country in the world for the same purposes, and that no nation in the world approaches our expenditures on account of wars past and wars to come.

Mr. HOBSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAWNEY. I must decline to yield now. I will yield later to the gentleman.

But the House and the country should understand that the opposition to this ambitious, mistaken naval policy of four battle ships, or two battle ships each year, is not based entirely upon the aggregate cost in either case. While I shall vote for one battle ship, there is much that could be said in opposition to the authorization of that one.

Navies are built and maintained for national defense. They are not intended and can not be justified upon the ground that they are necessary to satisfy an ambition, either personal or national, to compete with other nations in time of peace in size and number of fighting machines. In this country the prestige and power of the nation does not depend upon the size of our Army or the size of our Navy. There is no policy of our Government, either foreign or domestic, to enforce which the size of either is the first or the only essential. We have 80,000,000 of patriotic people. It is in them and their patriotism that the strength of our nation exists, and not in our standing army or our permanent naval establishment. In the future, as in the past, the strength of our policies and the ability of our Government to enforce them will be measured by ourselves and by foreign nations, not by the size of our Army or our Navy, but by the resources, the patriotism, and the loyalty of our people, who are known throughout the world to be ready and willing at any and all times to sacrifice their property, aye, even their lives, in the defense of their Government and its beneficent institutions.

We should not, therefore, encourage our people to surrender to militarism that self-reliance, that consciousness of superior individual national strength upon which as a nation they have always relied, by teaching them to rely upon a standing army and a navy in time of peace large enough to be capable of successfully competing with the armies and the navies of the world, or any one of them, in time of war.

If it is not to gratify an ambition to excel other nations in the size and number of big battle ships that we are now asked to depart from the policy declared two years ago of authorizing but one big battle ship each year, what, then, is it that prompts this proposed change in that policy? Will anyone claim there is reason to apprehend war with any foreign nation within the next decade? If there is, the information upon which that apprehension is based has been carefully withheld from the legislative branch of the Government. [Applause.] If there is, then why is our magnificent fleet of sixteen battle ships, with its foreign auxiliary ships, now sailing in the Pacific, soon to start upon a naval parade around the world, leaving our Pacific and our Atlantic coasts exposed and defenseless for a period of almost a year? [Applause.] This fact proves not alone that the proposed competitive naval policy is prompted by an ambition to excel other nations in the size and number of our big battle ships, but it also proves that those who advocate this policy realize the tremendous advantage we enjoy by reason of our magnificent geographical isolation. [Applause.]

Are we, in appropriating the money of the people for our national defense, to entirely ignore our splendid geographical isolation? Are we to entirely ignore the physical facts that make it practically impossible, with the modern means of warfare, for any nation to invade our territory or come within range of our coast line without being intercepted by the means of defense we now have at our command? If our isolation enables us to dispense with our Navy as a means of national defense for almost a year, why are we not justified in relying upon that isolation and the Navy we now have, when that Navy is at home and available as an additional means of defense. [Applause.]

The transport service of no European nation is sufficient, even without opposition, to land upon American soil an army of 100,000 men at a given time. There is no country in the Orient that has a naval base within reaching distance of our Pacific coast, and no oriental nation would be so reckless of its own interests as to risk the loss of its navy or its fleet by attempting to send it past the Hawaiian Islands for the purpose of attacking us upon the Pacific coast. It would know what is plain to every mind, that without having a naval base between its home ports and the object of its attack, and without its vessels being able to stop somewhere and coal and repair they would never return. In time of war the ports of every country in the world are closed to the navies of the contending nations, and each one of the combatants is driven to rely upon its own ports for supplies and for the means of carrying on naval warfare.

Mr. TALBOTT. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question there?

Mr. TAWNEY. I decline to yield. Men talk about the thousand miles of American coast line and the danger which threatens us in consequence of its extent, as though that coast line were marked by an old worm fence and our enemies in time of war would occupy the land on the opposite side and invade American soil with all the ease with which the cows of one farmer break into the pasture of another. [Applause.] Why, gentlemen, our geographical isolation is an asset of our nation far more valuable as a means of national defense than all the navies we can build. No nation, European or oriental, would be reckless enough to risk the loss of its army and navy by attempting to invade our soil or come within range of our coast batteries.

But, Mr. Chairman, recent events have demonstrated that we have in the past pursued a bungling naval policy, one that is absolutely inexcusable. Notwithstanding the hundreds of millions of dollars we have expended during the last decade in the construction of our Navy, we to-day know that because our lack of auxiliary vessels our Navy is woefully deficient as a practical fighting organization. We seem to have proceeded upon the theory that all our nation demands or expects is the building of the biggest battle ships in order to gratify a boyish ambition to have something other nations do not possess, or we have proceeded on the theory that the mere building of these great fighting machines would have the effect of affording protection by scaring the other fellows.

Every Amercan citizen who has been looking upon the growth of our Navy with patriotic pride has recently been humiliated by the fact that our splendid fleet of sixteen battle ships could not even start or successfully make the voyage in which it is now engaged, and which it might be called upon in time of war to make, without the aid of at least twenty-eight auxiliary vessels flying a foreign flag. A more disgraceful national spectacle was never witnessed by our people than this. It is the result of our pursuing the policy in respect to the upbuilding of our Navy, of giving almost exclusive attention to the building of battle ships and cruisers, and entirely ignoring the fact that in time of war they are valueless unless they have a full complement of auxiliary vessels to accompany them and supply them with the means absolutely essential to their existence and their effectiveness in time of war. It may be that this mistake is due to the fact that the necessary auxiliary vessels, though as essential to the efficiency of the Navy as a battle ship, are not so attractive, do not involve the expenditure of so much money, and do not afford the opportunity for the same pyrotechnic display upon the ocean or at the summer resorts along the coast. [Applause.] Mr. Chairman, for that reason we have made the mistake of building a Navy that to-day, in order to make the voyage from ocean to ocean, is obliged to rely upon auxiliary vessels belonging to foreign nations. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I have prepared a statement of the annual expenditures of the United States, England, France, and Germany in preparation for war, including the size of the army and navy of each country, the expenditures for their army and navy, administration, maintenance, and new construction; also a statement of the amount of revenue collected in 1907 by England, France, Germany, and the amount of revenue collected and estimated in the United States for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, which I desire to present for the information of the House. It is only fair that I should say that the details upon which this statement is based were prepared by Mr. A. P. C. Griffin, the chief bibliographer of the Congressional Library, one of the ablest statisticians in the public service, from the military and naval budgets of the countries named, which are on file in that Library.

Mr. Chairman, this statement is a very interesting one to those who are paying some attention to the amount of money our Government is to-day expending in preparing for war and on account of past wars. It shows that this current fiscal year we are expending $204,122,855 on account of preparations for war, or about twenty-nine millions more than we have expended in the construction of public buildings since the beginning of the Government, exclusive of public buildings in Washington.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BURTON of Ohio. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Minnesota have five minutes further.

There was no objection.

Mr. TALBOTT. Will the gentleman yield for a question? Is it not a fact that England——

Mr. TAWNEY. I will state, Mr. Chairman, that in five minutes——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Minnesota yield to the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. TAWNEY. Having but five minutes, I must decline to yield. I can not go into the full details, but I have a summary of these expenditures, which I will read, and I think I can do it in five minutes' time.

A comparison of the amounts expended by the United States this year on account of preparation for war with the amounts expended for the same purpose by England, France, Germany, and Japan, together with a statement of the relative strength of the army and navy of these countries, is worthy of most careful consideration on the part of every Member of this House, and should also be considered by the people whose money is thus appropriated and expended for destructive purposes.

Expended by the United States on account of preparation for war, fiscal year 1908.

Number of men in the Army	52,000
Total appropriations for American Army	$101,599,462.22
Number of men in Navy	42,000
Number of vessels in Navy	51
Total appropriations on account of American Navy, 1908	$102,523,393.35
Total to be expended by the United States on account of preparation for war	$204,122,855.57
Actual and estimated revenue (exclusive of postal receipts) for 1908	$574,000,000.00
Percentage of revenue for 1908 expended by United States on account of preparation for war	36.5

Expended by England on account of preparation for war, 1906.

Number of men in British army, exclusive of those serving in India	204,300
Appropriations on account of English army	$121,232,201.15
Number of men in navy	129,000
Number of vessels in navy	185
Appropriations on account of English navy	$149,364,556.75
Total expenditures by England, 1906, on account of preparation for war	$270,596,757.90
Total revenues for 1906	$704,737,686.26
Percentage of total revenue for 1906 expended by England that year on account of preparation for war	38.4

Expended by France on account of preparation for war, 1906.

Number of men in army, and authorized, including metropolitan and colonial troops	550,000
Appropriation on account of French army	$138,707,340.23
Number of men in navy	56,285
Number of vessels in navy	77
Appropriation on account of French navy	$62,732,182.88
Total expenditures by France, 1907, on account of preparation for war	$201,439,523.11
Total French revenues, 1907	$715,883,610.08
Percentage of total revenues for 1907 expended by France in preparation for war	28.00

Expended by Germany, 1906, on account of preparation for war.

Number of men in Germany army and authorized	600,000
Appropriations on account of Germany army	$176,842,187.20
Number of men in navy	48,000
Number of vessels in navy	62
Appropriations on account of German navy	$63,165,747.40
Total expenditures by Germany, 1907, on account of preparation for war	$240,007,724.60
Total German revenues, 1907	$617,941,200.80
Percentage of total revenues for 1907 expended by Germany on account of preparation for war	41.4

From the Secretary of the Navy I have obtained the following information regarding the Japanese budget for 1907–8:

Total ordinary, extraordinary, and supplemental budgets for years 1907 and 1908, 616,440,000 yen or approximately	$308,220,000
Of this amount the ordinary and extraordinary expenditures on account of the army were 111,616,000 yen or approximately	55,808,000
And for the ordinary and extraordinary expenditures on account of the navy department, 82,481,000 yen or approximately	41,240,500
And for the war and navy departments combined, 194,097,000 yen or approximately	97,048,500

Total expended by these countries in preparation for war:

United States	$204,122,855.57; per cent of revenues, 36.5
England	270,596,757.90; per cent of revenues, 38.4
France	201,439,523.11; per cent of revenues, 28.0
Germany	240,007,724.60; per cent of revenues, 41.4
Japan	97,048,500.00

Statement of the aggregate annual expenditure by the United States, England, Germany, and France on account of past wars, including all objects for which expenditures are made on that account and the percentage of the revenue of each country expended for these purposes in the years 1906 and 1908:

United States, 1908	$180,678,204.00
Percentage of revenue, exclusive of postal receipts	31.00
England, 1906	$29,329,063.92
Percentage of revenues	0.41
France, 1906	$30,501,600.00
Percentage of revenues	0.42
Germany, 1906	$8,725,496.02
Percentage of revenues	0.015

Total expended by these countries in preparation for war and on account of past wars:

United States	$384,801,059.57;	per cent of revenues, 67.5
England	299,925,821.82;	per cent of revenues, 42.5
France	231,941,123.11;	per cent of revenues, 32.2
Germany	248,733,220.62;	per cent of revenues, 42.9

These figures show that on account of preparation for war the United States, with an Army of 52,000 men and a Navy of 42,000 men, is expending this year only $66,473,701.18 less than England, with an army of 204,300 men and a navy of 129,000 men.

That the United States is expending for this purpose only $35,884,869.03 less than Germany, with her army of 600,000 and her navy of 62,000 men.

That the United States is expending for this purpose in excess of the amount expended by France, with her army of 550,000 men and her navy of 56,285 men, $2,683,332.46.

A further comparison of the sums expended by these countries on account of preparation for war and on account of past wars shows the startling fact that we are expending more than any other nation in the world for both objects named. We are this year expending $84,975,238.75 more than England, $136,067,838.95 more than Germany, and $152,859,936.46 more than France.

Mr. HOBSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I can not yield now.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. TAWNEY. Now, Mr. Chairman, how long will the American people acquiesce in this extravagant expenditure for destructive purposes? We are to-day excelling any nation in the world. If we adopt the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON], our naval budget authorized at this session of Congress will exceed in amount the naval budget of any other country in the world. And let me say here that for the past three years England has been reducing her expenses both in respect to the army and in respect to her navy. The Admiralty have recommended or estimated this year for only one Dreadnought——

Mr. LITTLEFIELD. Instead of four?

Mr. TAWNEY. Instead of four, as stated by the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HOBSON rose.

Mr. TAWNEY. That statement is not made upon hearsay or upon newspaper information, but it is made from the naval estimates submitted at this session of Parliament, a copy of which I hold in my hand, having obtained it from the Congressional Library. And in addition to that, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has again expired.

Mr. BURLESON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have five minutes more.

Mr. HOBSON. I ask that the gentleman's time be extended in order that I may ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Minnesota may be extended five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. TAWNEY. In support of the proposition that this policy of increasing the Navy by the building of nothing but big battle ships is the result of an ambition on the part of the great naval powers of the world to excel each other, I will quote what the premier of England said last month in the debate on the naval budget in the House of Commons:

> Mr. Asquith on Monday pronounced, perhaps unwittingly, a solemn condemnation of what was done three years ago—

It was at that time when they laid the keel of the first great Dreadnought—

> when he said: "We do not wish to take a lead, but we want to do everything in our power to prevent a new spurt in competitive shipbuilding between the great naval powers."

Mr. Chairman, from this statement of the premier of England, when discussing the naval budget for the next fiscal year, which is now under consideration in the Parliament of England, we see that the greatest naval power of the world practically admits, through its premier and by proposing to authorize only one battle ship for the next year, its mistake when it adopted the policy five years ago of establishing a new standard in the size of great battle ships, and that now that nation proposes to do everything in its power to prevent the further extension of this policy of competitive shipbuilding between the great naval powers of the world. If England, situated as she is geographically, with all of her great interests extending through other European countries, can afford to do this, how much more can the United States afford to do the same, instead of doing as is proposed by the Naval Committee and by the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON], taking "a new spurt in competitive shipbuilding" as between ourselves and other nations, and thus check the tendency, not only in our country but in other countries of the world, toward this extravagant expenditure in preparation for wars which, in my judgment, will never come.

I submit that neither the revenues of the Government nor the necessities of our national defense demand any increase whatever in our Navy or demand any change in the policy adopted a year ago of authorizing but one battle ship each year. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, if we adopt and continue this ambitious competitive naval policy, how long will it be before the American people, in order to meet the increasing expenditures on account of this policy and the maintenance of our Navy, will be compelled to change their system of Federal taxation by adding to the indirect system, which has always obtained in time of peace, the system of direct taxation. Our national expenditures are increasing by leaps and bounds. Only sixteen years ago the country was startled by the fact that our expenditures had reached $500,000,000 annually, while to-day our national expenditures are at the rate of almost $100,000,000 a month, or a billion dollars every year.

In view of this fact and in view also of our diminishing revenues under our present system of indirect taxation, and in view, too, of the entire absence of any danger of war with any foreign nation as well as of our splendid geographical isolation, I submit that the representatives of the people here upon this floor are not justified in adding $50,000,000 more to this naval appropriation bill for the purpose of gratifying either an individual or a national ambition to excel other nations in the size and number of great battle ships. [Applause.]

Mr. HOBSON. Will the gentleman yield? The gentleman has taken a large portion of the time that was yielded to him for the purpose of my asking him a question.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HOBSON. I want to ask the gentleman if last year he did not predict a deficit of $100,000,000?

Mr. TAWNEY. I did.

Mr. HOBSON. And didn't the gentleman miss it by about $190,000,000?

Mr. TAWNEY. In answer to that——

Mr. HOBSON. There was a surplus of $90,000,000——

Mr. TAWNEY. One moment. The gentleman can not put a question into my mouth and answer it at the same time. In answer to the gentleman from Alabama I will say that the prediction of one hundred millions deficit was made long before the close of Congress, upon the theory that if the appropriations asked for were granted there would be that deficit. I am glad to say that all these appropriations were not granted. We managed to keep them down, so that instead of a deficit appearing at the end of the last session we showed an estimated surplus of about $25,000,000, based on estimated revenues. But, Mr. Chairman, while I estimated at the close of the last session a surplus of $25,000,000, and was justified in doing so on the basis of the receipts of the Government at that time, we are to-day confronted with a deficit of $60,000,000 at the close of this fiscal year. If the naval policy proposed by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] prevails, our deficit at the end of the next fiscal year will reach the enormous sum of $150,000,000. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD detailed statements of war expenditures by the United States and the other countries I have named.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by the insertion of certain tables. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Invalid pensions, etc., since the war of 1870–71 for administration of the imperial army	36,571,000
Invalid pensions, etc., since the war of 1870–71 for administration of the Emperor's navy	16,618
Sum of expenditures	[c] 36,661,748

In order to meet the expenditures made necessary by the law pensioning and otherwise providing for persons who had served in the army or navy during the war of 1870–71, as well as their surviving families, the sum of 187,000,000 thalers, 561,000,000 marks, or about $133,000,000, was set aside by law out of the French war indemnity. This fund is called the "imperial invalid fund," or fund for the disabled (Reichsinvalidenfond).

[c] Equals $8,725,496.02.

This fund was to be invested in such wise that there should be a return therefrom in the way of interest, and, in order to cut off the possibility of speculation in these moneys the law fixed the nature of such investments. The beneficiaries were specified in the military pension law of June 27, 1871, to which reference has already been made, and which was supplemented by the laws of April 4, 1874; April 21, 1886, and May 22, 1893, transferring to this fund the payment of certain costs hitherto laid on the Imperial treasury. WAR EXPENDITURES.

The financial burdens.—Article 53, clause 3, of the imperial constitution provides that "the expenditure required for the establishment and maintenance of the navy and the institutions connected therewith shall be defrayed out of the imperial treasury." Article 62, clause 3, provides, in like manner, that the expenses of the army are to [be] paid out of the imperial treasury, and that such expenditures shall be fixed by law.

So far as the income of the Empire is not sufficient to meet these expenses they are to be met by means of a contribution made by the several States in the ratio of their population.

* * * * * * *

The expenditures for military purposes are made by the States having their own military administration, and are made in conformity with the items fixed in the budget and with the provisions of the laws and ordinances on the subject.

All such expenditures, being in fact imperial disbursements, are under the control of the imperial auditing court, and must be submitted annually by the imperial chancellor to the Bundesrath and to the Reichstag for their discharge. (Howard's "The German Empire," pp. 390–392.)

JAPAN'S GENERAL BUDGET, INCLUDING ARMY AND NAVY EXPENDITURES.

On pages 358 and 360 of the Japanese Year-Book for 1907 it is stated that the total ordinary and extraordinary and supplementary budgets for the year 1907–8 are 616,440,000 yen, or about $308,220,000. The ordinary and extraordinary expenditures for the navy department are 82,481,000 yen, or about $41,240,500, and for the navy and war departments, 194,097,000 yen, or about $97,048,500.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, I shall vote for the proposed amendment offered by my colleague from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] for the authorization of four battle ships. I shall make this vote, Mr. Chairman, from a sense of duty to my country. I recall here the fact with a great deal of pride and gratification that it was a distinguished Alabamian, a brave and gallant Confederate soldier, who was very instrumental in laying the comprehensive basis for the growth and improvement of our Navy—commensurate with the growth, development, and responsibilities of our country. I refer, Mr. Chairman, to the Hon. Hilary A. Herbert, who was Secretary of the Navy in the last Administration of President Cleveland. I believe, Mr. Chairman, that it is an axiom in all the civil affairs of life that the men who prepare for reasonable contingencies and difficulties in the future that by reason of that precaution they frequently escape many of these responsibilities and difficulties.

I believe that policy applies more strongly and decidedly to nations than it does to individuals. In the earnest and unprecedented struggle that is going on to-day among the great powers of the world, including our own Government, for commercial supremacy, and certainly for the acquisition of trade, I do not think that I yield to any effeminate or unmanly fear when I say that I apprehend, midst the jealousies and rivalries of this great struggle that is going on for supremacy of commerce, that some friction may arise in the future that will lead to a clash of arms. No man on this floor doubts the fact that if that clash of arms comes in the future by reason of any friction that involves our Government that it will be settled on the high seas by the navies that are involved.

I say, Mr. Chairman, that if such a conflict comes and our Government is found to be vacillating, timid, weak, by reason of being unprepared, the patriotic people of this country will hold the Congress to a terrible responsibility for so grave and serious a dereliction of duty. It is useless for me to recall here to-day the great national events that have taken place in this country in the last few years that have altered and changed our relations to the great powers of the world. These great national events, in my judgment, will be classed in the future as one of the great eras of this country. It is idle, too, for us to bemoan the mistakes, errors, and blunders that, as a Government, we have made that have brought about these conditions. To defend and protect the Philippine Islands from the grasp of a foreign power, whether it be Japan, Germany, or any other foreign power, is a part of our national honor and pride. We can not escape it if we would. Our flag is there and we will maintain it. [Applause.] I do not undertake by words or thoughts to criticise any man who is going to vote differently from what I vote on this subject. It is a question, in my humble judgment, of how we look at what the future may bring to our country. I was glad to hear the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. GREGG], a member of the Naval Committee, frankly say that this question of battle ships was in no sense or manner a political or party question. That is certainly true. But I do say that the Democratic party has always stood for a navy sufficient to meet the demands and responsibilities of our country. I would be, and am, as mindful of the expenses of our Government as reason requires. I would not favor any useless expenditure of public moneys on any proposition, but it seems to me that we ought not to hesitate to provide such a navy as would make foreign governments respect our rights, and thereby help us maintain peace throughout the world.

I am certainly not an alarmist. I see no specter of war with lowering clouds in our immediate future. I am not ambitious to have our country rank with the great navies of the world, but merely to have it prepared to defend our rights when assailed. I do not share the prevailing public distemper called "hysteria," "mania," or "frenzy," used so freely as an argument against the building of four battle ships instead of stopping on two. Even should this be true, it is only measured by degrees, for the Naval Committee favors two and the naval board, the Secretary of the Navy, the President, and a large number of Representatives on both sides of this Chamber say, instead of stopping at the building of two battle ships, we should, for the sake of safety and reasonable precaution, build four.

Take the Manchuria incident, that occurred but a few days since. In the Portsmouth treaty Russia acknowledged that it had no concessions or claims in Manchuria of such nature as tended to impair the sovereignty of China. Yet our consul, Mr. Fisher, at Harbin protested in an earnest and diplomatic manner against Russia establishing Russian municipalities in the railway zone independent of the sovereignty of China. Our consul had been instructed by our State Department to recognize no sovereignty but that of China in Manchuria. It is undoubtedly true that our Government, in the interest of the "open-door" policy, will resist encroachments on Chinese rights in Manchuria by either Japan or Russia. I do not hesitate to say that no section of this Union is more deeply interested in maintaining this "open-door" policy than the cotton-growing States of the South. Our hope for the expansion and enlargement of our cotton-goods trade—especially the coarser grade of cotton cloth, chiefly made in our Southern mills—depends on the "open-gate" policy, so that we can have a chance to reach China, as well as Japan, with our cotton fabrics. This is a great and important policy. Yet our Government must stand unalterably for the "open door." It is most earnestly the hope of every patriotic citizen that our known policy for peace in all our relations with foreign powers will enable us to maintain the "open-door" policy, but we can not, from a reasonable standpoint, leave all to successful diplomacy. We ought to have such a navy as will fairly represent our Government in its position and relation to the other governments of the world. I do not at all subscribe to assertions made in this debate that the voting for four battle ships is to enter the race with other nations to surpass them in naval armaments. Our battle ships are not built for the purpose of aggression or conquest, but to enable our country to guard, defend, and assert its rights when assailed improperly by a foreign power.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, withholding for a moment the objection which I may not make, I would like to know how much of the time that was allowed for this debate has been consumed.

The CHAIRMAN. Thirty-five minutes have been consumed.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, one other question. Can the Chair give to the committee an idea of how much time has been requested, according to the memorandum that he has?

The CHAIRMAN. Very much more than the time allowed by the committee for debate.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask a question, and that is whether or not if five minutes additional are granted the gentleman, it would come out of the two hours and a half fixed by the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. It would come out of the two hours and a half, and the time that is now running comes out of the two hours and a half.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I shall insist on the five-minute rule until we can see that there is distribution of time sufficient to go around.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman objects.

Mr. LASSITER. Mr. Chairman, in the few moments I can obtain I wish to protest against projects which I conceive to involve an undue increase in the Navy. Certainly no one can accuse the present Committee on Naval Affairs as niggardly or lacking in enthusiasm for the brilliant exploitation of the Department which it controls. One might even scrutinize carefully a programme which it might recommend.

But on Monday last I listened to the distinguished gentleman from Alabama delivering an oration which may fix his place as a farseeing strategist and certainly has established his fame as one of the few brilliant orators that adorn this House. But when I realized his extravagant proposals and knew he was a member of the party I revere, Mr. Chairman, I was grieved; I was alarmed.

From the first session of the Federal Congress, when Nathaniel Macon, grandest of North Carolinians, who for nearly forty years stood here in his place advocating a liberal Navy, while he preserved his character as the severest type of Democratic simplicity and economy, to the administration of William C. Whitney, who first gave to the country an effective modern fleet, the Democratic party has fostered the Navy. But the record of Democracy has been for a Navy consistent with our peaceful needs. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I shall vote for one battle ship, more as an experiment in the most modern type than for any apprehension of its necessity.

My objection to these proposals is threefold—economic, as tending to fix the griping hold of tariff taxes by the constant demand for a bulging Treasury to meet indefensible contracts. Practically all of our present enormous expenditure is affected by tariff taxes on the articles consumed and is poured into the maw of ever more rapacious trusts. Behind the whole programme is the shadow of trusts—those "infant industries," which, like the Arcadian babes of Juvenal, grasp the pendulous breasts of redundant mothers and drink, not suck.

Another economic objection, subordinate only because it is a condition and not a principle, lies in the misapplication of funds to military objects at a time when our own favored isolation and the condition of the civilized world render transoceanic wars a remote contingency. Had we money to spare, Mr. Chairman, I submit we might better look to domestic objects—the development of our waterways and the impassable condition of the common post-roads of the country. A deafening appeal comes up to us every year from our constituents demanding these immediate necessities of convenient living. Such public works have been the primary care of all nations, reducing the transportation tax on the necessities of life, giving employment to thousands of native labor, both skilled and unskilled, and like the great highways of Rome, France, and England, erecting imperishable monuments to the civilizations which constructed them.

We Americans are an emotional people after all. Naval warfare and naval pomp have in themselves for us something peculiarly heady. Since the conclusion of that lamentable Spanish imbroglio we have had several instances, beginning, perhaps, with that frenzied reception in New York Harbor, of our gentlemanly old admiral. He had returned from an achievement which, apart from its unlucky civil sequellæ, represented little more than exceedingly bad gun practice.

When the ashes of the great Napoleon were transferred from St. Helena to rest on the brink of the Seine, under the golden dome of the Invalides, surely Gallic enthusiasm, spurred on by the interests of a new monarchy, did not surpass American fervor.

This leads up to my third objection to the creation of these enormous armaments. It rests upon the inevitable aggrandizement of the central power wielded by the President.

It is a fact recognized by all foreign students of our political system, laid down a thousand times by our own highest judiciary, and become the elementary truism of every school boy and orator, that the safety of our Government rests upon the separate and coordinate power of the legislative, judicial, and executive departments. Yet, in the last few years, since militarism and imperialism have run riot, we have had a Chief Magistrate half a demagogue and half a king. We have seen the people caressed and paternalized. We have learned to hear the judiciary denounced and told their duty. More often (with malicious amusement) we have seen the majority party in these Halls driven like a flock of school boys, with loud words. Is it unnatural, Mr. Chairman, that a single man, who can by his sovereign word punish a pilot or a chauffeur for deeds done in the royal presence or send the greatest fleet of history around the globe, while he treats directly with crowned heads—is it unnatural, I say, that a single strong man shall arise at no distant day with the sublime conviction that led Louis XIV to say "L'Etat, c'est moi!"

There exists already two naval pictures which strike the eye of every beholder. You have seen "Nelson on the Victory," sealing in death his devotion to country. "Napoleon on the Bellerophon" needs no comment to tell the despair of a conqueror, once master of the world.

On the 15th of last December the President of these United States stood covered and alone on the bridge of his yacht, sending to their distant fates sixteen of the mightiest engines of destruction man ever made. Each monster flaunted the standard from top and peak; each manned the rail with frenzied cheers, and sixteen times the deep guns thundered the full tale of his due salute. What were the meditations of the central figure who had willed this embodiment of world-wide crisis? Shall this figure be painted? If so, I fear it needs no superscription to read:

Theodore Roosevelt, committing his devoted country to imperialistic chaos.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr Chairman, reserving the right to object, I shall have to object unless that right is extended to all who speak.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Washington that the committee has no power to grant general extension.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I do not know that I will want to extend my remarks, but I will object unless it is extended to me.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, is it in order to ask that this privilege be extended to all who speak on this——

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order. Does the gentleman object? [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What is the request?

The CHAIRMAN. There is no request pending before the committee.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that the opposition has consumed four out of every five minutes used up to this time, I ask that I may be permitted to proceed for ten minutes.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I regret exceedingly that I shall be obliged to object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I desire to read a letter which I received yesterday. I especially desire to call the attention of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] to this letter. It is as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, April 13, 1908.

MY DEAR CONGRESSMAN HUMPHREY: The inclosed memoranda explain themselves. You will see that the dock can be completed within three years. It can certainly be so completed if you secure the insertion of the clause permitting us to construct the dry dock by contract or otherwise, as may be necessary.

Let me say again what I said to you and your colleagues from the State of Washington, that it is urgently necessary to authorize these dry docks for Puget Sound and Hawaii and provide for their early completion, and that it is no less necessary to provide for four battle ships. I am unable to understand objection to building these four battle ships by any good American who loves the peace of justice, who loves the honor of his land, and who looks into the future.

Yours, sincerely,

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

Hon. WILLIAM E. HUMPHREY,
House of Representatives.

That letter is from the man who ought to know more about the necessity for four battle ships than any other. No man doubts his honesty, patriotism, or intelligence. I am proud, as one man, to stand upon the floor of this House and indorse the sentiments contained in that letter in regard to the building of four additional battle ships. I know that the people of this country indorse that sentiment.

For many days we have been told often and loudly by the leader of the minority that he is not filibustering to kill time, but that he is filibustering to compel the majority to enact certain legislation, and especially certain legislation desired by the President. He proclaimed in tones most dramatic that if the majority would furnish him twenty-five votes, the legislation recommended by the President would pass the House. The President has urged this legislation for the four battle ships more earnestly and more insistently, perhaps, than any other. If the leader of the minority is inspired by patriotism and not by politics, if he is filibustering for the good of the country and not for the good of his party, as he claims, if he really wants to enact the legislation desired by the President, here is his opportunity. If he will now stand by the President, I assure him that the twenty-five votes from this side of the House will be forthcoming, and we will pass the amendment for four battle ships, even if we have to demand the ayes and nays to do it.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] just finished a long argument urging economy as a reason why the authorization of the four battle ships ought not to be permitted. If there is any one argument that does not command my respect nor appeal to my judgment, it is the campaign argument of economy. Every four years from time immemorial it has made its appearance, being used by both parties. There is no argument so often appealed to that has so little of merit and so much of demagogy. The people of this country are not paupers. They are not beggars. The people of this country do not want this nation run on any niggardly plan. The people of this country are intelligent enough to know that to refuse to appropriate money for proper purposes is the greatest and most inexcusable of extravagances. The people care not how much the appropriations are if the money is properly expended. The people of this country want appropriations made in keeping with the needs and the greatness of the country. The gentlemen who make this argument of economy deceive no one but themselves. Everyone else knows that at the bottom it is inspired by politics.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman does not want to make that statement, does he? Does the gentleman want that statement to go upon the record?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. If the gentleman desires to correct my statement let him do so. He heard what I said.

Mr. MADDEN. I heard it. Do you believe that we should expend more money than we get?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. No; I do not believe that we should spend more money than we get. Neither do I believe in standing upon the floor of this House and playing the demagogue by talking about economy when every man knows it is done largely for campaign purposes.

As one man from the Pacific coast, I desire to go upon record as saying that I do not believe that we are in any immediate danger of having war with Japan. A war between Japan and the United States would be a crime against humanity, it would be one of the greatest calamities that ever afflicted the world. I hope and I believe that the friendship that has so long existed between these two countries will continue unto the end. But no man can read the future. No man knows what a day may bring forth. And while I do not believe that we shall have war, yet, if it should come, then I want my country to be prepared. I believe that the best guaranty of peace is to be prepared for war. I believe in the doctrine of the "big stick," as advocated by the President, in the way that he stated it and not in the way that he is quoted by the yellow papers, when he made use of the old proverb, that "he that talks softly and carries a big stick will travel far."

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] said that, in case of war, among other things upon which we could rely was our Army. I regret to say that so far as protecting our Pacific possessions is concerned, our Army under present conditions would be entirely useless, and this would be true, however large an army we might have, for however many troops we might possess, we could not get them to Hawaii or the Philippines.

According to a recent report of the War Department, in case of war the Army would require 228 merchant ships of various kinds. If we were to face an emergency to-day, we could not even furnish the 28 vessels, let alone the 228. The Department, in the same report, declares that in case of war, 38 vessels should be ready to carry troops in fifteen days. If every American vessel was in her home port on the day that hostilities were declared and every one of them should be voluntarily offered to the Government, we could not assemble that many on both oceans combined in double that time. We could not do it in fifteen months, let alone fifteen days. We could not furnish that number of vessels upon the Pacific Ocean in time to be of service in any contest with a foreign nation. These vessels could not be purchased from foreign nations, even if international law permitted it, which it does not, because practically every first-class ship on the ocean to-day flying a foreign flag is receiving a subsidy that places it under a contract to its home government that would prevent us from purchasing it.

So far as transports are concerned for our Army and vessels as an auxiliary for our Navy, we are in a worse condition to-day than we were when war was declared with Spain. Then it took us twenty days to get enough vessels to carry 10,000 men to the near-by coast of Cuba. And the vessels we did purchase at enormous prices were unsuitable for the purpose and utterly unfit to make such a voyage as the one to the Philippines or Hawaii would be. For these antiquated and dilapidated vessels we expended $13,000,000 in purchasing and refitting, and then the War Department declared that by the use of these transports we exposed our troops to greatest peril. The Department declared in a printed report "that the safe arrival of this expedition was entirely due to chance, and the only thing that justified its starting was its safe arrival."

We are as helpless upon the Pacific Ocean as was Russia at the beginning of her war with Japan. If war should come upon the Pacific, the fate of Russia would be our fate. All the events of the present indicate that our next combat will be upon that ocean. If it should be with Japan and we remain in our present condition, she could put half a million men in the Philippines and a hundred thousand men into Hawaii before we could get 10,000 men ready to embark from any point on the Pacific. Not only has she a magnificent navy, but she has to-day 550 vessels suitable for transports on the Pacific; the United States has not more than 15. Japan can carry 200,000 men at one time. The United States on the Pacific can not carry 15,000. Japan has over 500,000 men engaged in her deep-sea fisheries—the best trained seamen in the world—from which to draw crews for her battle ships. There are not to-day upon all the Pacific Ocean a thousand American sailors, native-born and naturalized. We could not, even in time of peace, taking no account of the enemy, using American ships, as we would be compelled to do in time of war, place 50,000 troops in the Philippines in a year. We must depend entirely upon the Navy in any contest upon the Pacific. Our Army, even if we had one, would be useless.

The only guaranty of peace upon the Pacific in the future is a great navy. This is the one object and purpose of a navy on that ocean.

One of the purposes of a navy, theoretically, I know, is to protect our commerce, our merchant vessels in time of war. When the Atlantic fleet finally joined the Pacific Squadron we witnessed the magnificent spectacle, and gave to the wide world a picture never before approached in the annals of men—we have 19 battle ships, 7 cruisers, and a large number of smaller vessels to protect what? Eight merchant ships, the cost of the 8 being little more than the cost of a single battle ship.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] spoke of the deplorable condition of our merchant marine. I agree with him fully in all that he has said upon that proposition. For five years, upon the floor of this House, upon the stump, and in the newspapers and the magazines of the country I have been doing what I could to call the attention of the country to the shameful condition of our merchant marine and pointing out that the fatal weakness of our Navy was the same as that of Russia—our failure to have merchant vessels that could be used as an auxiliary to support it and from which sailors could be secured to man it. This discreditable condition was emphasized and brought to the attention of the public as never before by the trip of the Atlantic Squadron to the Pacific. Yesterday I spoke briefly upon that subject and called attention to the fact that this great country of ours was unable to move its battle ships from the Atlantic to the Pacific without employing foreign ships to carry the coal; that this fleet was to continue its way around the globe, and that in order to do so, it would still be compelled to employ foreign ships, and that while making this trip it becomes helpless as soon as it leaves the Pacific coast, and if a declaration of war was to be made against us, these foreign ships would immediately abandon our vessels, and then our battle-ship squadron, of which we are so proud, could neither continue on their way nor return home. And, as I said then, I say now, that as this fleet continues its way around the globe it advertises to the world our national weakness and our national disgrace.

I do not, however, agree with the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY], that because we have no merchant marine we should stop building a Navy. I believe that we should build up a great navy and at the same time that we should build up a great merchant marine to support it. Russia and the United States are the only nations that ever committed the stupid folly of building the one without at the same time building the other. But it would also be an inexcusable folly for this great country not to build either.

I want to stop here long enough to discuss further the proposition of the foreign ships carrying our coal. When the Government called for bids to carry 133,000 tons of coal to supply the fleet on this long voyage only four American firms were able to respond with American ships. There was no combination among these few American ships, however, as has been charged. Those who make this statement do not give the facts. The bids submitted by these American vessels varied greatly. One American ship offered a bid of $8 per ton and was accepted. It was enabled to make this offer because the vessel was to remain on the Pacific coast. Its bid was not 50 per cent higher than the bids of the foreign ships, as has been charged. The lowest bid submitted by any foreign vessel was $6.15 per ton. The American vessels could not get a return cargo. Herein was the great difficulty. But the British ship could go to British Columbia after it had delivered its coal, where it would be favored by its own country—as it should be—over an American ship. Here the British ship could get a cargo for Australia or the British ports of the Orient, and from these ports another cargo could be obtained for Europe. But the American ship must make the 13,000-mile return voyage in ballast. Even if all American ships offered had been accepted, they were not sufficient in number to furnish only a portion of the coal required. All that were offered could carry only sufficient coal for the use of the fleet at San Francisco. The real reason why American ships did not carry our coal was because there are practically no American ships.

PRESENT CONDITIONS ON THE PACIFIC.

Only eight vessels still fly the American flag on all the great Pacific. Last year the commerce of this greatest ocean amounted to over $3,000,000,000. This is the fleet that we, the nation having the greatest coast line upon that ocean, have to participate in that mighty carrying trade. The line of the Pacific Mail, consisting of five vessels, runs from San Francisco to the Orient. This line runs in direct competition with a Japanese line of inferior vessels that has just been awarded a subsidy by the Japanese Government of $500,000 annually in gold. Three vessels run from Seattle to the Orient, and two of these vessels go to the Philippines. These vessels run in direct competition with an inferior Japanese line of three smaller vessels, and this line has just been awarded an annual subsidy of $327,000 in gold by their government. These vessels from Seattle also run in direct competition with a line of British steamers from Vancouver and Victoria that receive $300,000 annually of government subsidy. In each of these lines the American vessel costs from 25 to 50 per cent more than the foreign vessel. The American vessel pays higher wages to its officers than does the foreign vessel. If these lines were subsidized, character of ships considered, in proportion to the foreign lines the San Francisco line would receive $700,000 annually and the Puget Sound lines $500,000 annually. With these great handicaps it takes no prophet to tell what the fate of the few remaining vessels upon the Pacific will be. Unless the Government comes to their assistance the only element of uncertainty in the problem is the time when they will cease to run. Foreign subsidized ships have already driven every unsubsidized American ship from the Atlantic, and the same powers, working in the same way to the same end, will, within the next two years, drive our flag off of the Pacific unless the Government gives assistance.

NAVAL AUXILIARY.

How can we obtain a naval auxiliary and transports for our Army? To argue that this is necessary would be as absurd as for me to stand here and argue that we should have guns on our battle ships. This could be done in two ways. First, by the Government owning its own vessels; second, by paying private enterprise to provide these vessels. In considering this question, remember this great fact: The years of peace are many, the years of war are few, but in all the years of peace we must be prepared for the few years of war. Consider the first way—ownership by the Government. We know that in all business the Government way is the most costly way. We know that to build a ship by the Government would cost more than if built by private parties. We know that the maintenance and the operation of a ship by the Government would cost vastly more than it would if it was maintained and operated by commercial companies. If we needed any proof of these assertions it is amply furnished by the extravagant and disgraceful record of the few Government transports which we now own. A sufficient number of these old, antiquated vessels, mostly purchased from abroad, to carry 10,000 troops over to Cuba cost this nation $13,000,000 to purchase and refit. Even then they were unsuited for their purpose and exposed our Army to greatest peril. Since the war every pound of freight they have transported for the Government and every soldier that they have carried for the nation has cost the country at least 25 per cent more than the same service would have cost if done by private lines. They have always been largely used as private yachts by Department officials and their friends. Scandal and extravagance have been and are now interwoven with their operation. So far as the nation is concerned, the best thing that could happen to it in relation to these old transports would be to have them sunk in the sea. If such is the record of the few we now have, what might be expected if we owned the great number sufficient to meet the requirements of our Army and Navy?

But suppose that the Government could construct these vessels and operate them as economically as private enterprise. What of the cost even then? To meet even our present requirements it would take an investment of $150,000,000. On this investment the interest would be $3,000,000 annually, the depreciation $7,000,000, maintenance at least $30,000,000; or, in other words, outside of the investment it would cost the Government $40,000,000 annually. I am convinced from a long study of the question that this estimate is conservative; in fact, I feel certain that the red tape and the poor business methods and the favoritism always practiced by the Government would almost certainly increase this sum. This is the one way. What of the other? To induce private enterprise to undertake to carry this burden for the Government is the plan that every other nation that has ever possessed a navy thought wisest and best, except only the United States and Russia. It is not pleasant in this relation to compare our country with Russia, but my hope is that our country may not, as did Russia, learn her lesson in a most humiliating and irretrievable defeat. A naval auxiliary being for the benefit of the whole country the entire country should bear the burden. Why should the nation not pay for a naval auxiliary out of the National Treasury as well as for the Navy itself? They are both for the one and same purpose—the general good. The Government can get the same service from private enterprise for $4,000,000 annually that she can get from her own vessels for $40,000,000 annually. In other words, she can get the same service by subsidizing private lines for one-tenth of what it would cost her to own her own ships. Why is this true? The long period of peace and the short period of war. The certainty of peace; the uncertainty of war. Private enterprise can speculate on these years. The Government can not. Private enterprise will run the vessels in the long time of peace. The Government would demand their use only in the short time of war. Not only can the Government, for these reasons, get the same, and in many respects better, service for one-tenth the money from private enterprise, but during the long period of peace the merchant vessels are doing the commerce of the country, increasing our foreign markets, and carrying the products of the American people into all the markets of the world. We are the only nation of earth that makes pretense of being civilized that does not devote the profits of their foreign mails to aiding their shipping. If we would do this, this profit alone would give us a splendid naval auxiliary. Last year this profit was $3,600,000, and this sum is rapidly increasing.

PHILIPPINES.

May 1, 1898, marked a new epoch in American history. On that beautiful May morning, away on the farther shores of the Pacific, just as "rosy-fingered dawn" had first tinted the soft tropical sky, a line of battle ships bearing the Stars and Stripes moved slowly among the sunken and concealed engines of destruction and death into the entrance of Manila Bay. Then the roar of red-throated cannons startled the nations of the earth. The map of the world had changed in an hour; the Stars and Stripes had moved forward half way around the circuit of the earth; the Philippines were a part of the great Republic. By the fate of war, by the unseen hand of destiny they came to us, and they brought many new, great, and perplexing problems. There is no probability that you and I will ever see the flag depart from these islands. As they stand there to-day, a rich prize, with our weakness on the Pacific, they are a constant menace to the peace of the nation. It may be that many of our people to-day, if it could be done consistently with national honor, would like to see us part with the Philippines. There are doubtless many that regret that fate ever gave them to us, but no American worthy of his country, no American citizen in whose veins courses one drop of patriotic blood would ever consent that any nation should take them from us by force as long as we had a ship that could carry a gun, a soldier who could fire a musket, or a dollar in the National Treasury. Our flag went there in honor and victory, and 90,000,000 American people stand behind the declaration that it shall never be lowered in retreat or trailed in the dust of dishonor. National peace, national safety, national pride, and national honor all demand that we take immediate steps to protect them from themselves and from the rest of the world. When they have learned sufficient to govern themselves they will have learned sufficient to know the advantage of having us protect them. When they know enough to govern themselves then they will know enough to want to remain a part of the Republic. When they are sufficiently civilized for independence they will no more want it than does Alaska to-day.

The American people will never consent to play the coward's part. We will do our duty. We must and we will prepare to protect the flag wherever it floats.

The only way to protect our possession in the Pacific is by a great navy. The only certainty of peace on the Pacific is to be so prepared for war that no nation will dare unjustly to attack us. The honor, the peace, and the safety of this nation imperatively demand that a mighty battle-ship squadron be kept upon the Pacific as well as upon the Atlantic. Therefore I shall stand by the President and do what I can to assist him in his efforts by voting for the building of four battle ships. It is better to build battle ships than to pay pensions.

FOREIGN SHIP TRUSTS.

I now wish to present another side of this question—our need of a merchant marine—the commercial side.

Four years ago, in a speech upon the floor of this House, I said, "unless all history is at fault, unless human nature is to change, just as soon as the foreigner dominates our trade sufficiently to make it safe for him to do so, that moment combinations will be formed between foreign ships, and our freight rates will be raised." I had no doubt of the truth of that prophecy, but I did not so soon expect its fulfillment.

A trust exists upon the Pacific Ocean. It is called the "Shipowners International Union." It represents more than 1,300,000 tons—practically all the sail tonnage on the Pacific Ocean. It is composed of English, German, and French ships. It is open and frank in its purposes. It makes no attempt to conceal its objects. Its rules and regulations have been printed and can be easily obtained. A year ago I inserted a copy of this agreement in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. As set forth in the agreement, the principal object of this ship trust is to raise freight rates from American ports. In its declared purpose it has been most successful. It has raised freights on the Pacific more than 400 per cent. It has increased the freight on a ton of wheat from Seattle to Europe from $1.25 to $5.62 per ton. Any ship is free to charge such rates as it may think best for carrying freight from Europe to this country, but any vessel that charges less than the minimum price fixed by the trust for carrying freight from an American port is subjected to the heavy fine of 5 shillings per ton on the dead-weight capacity of the vessel.

There is another trust on the Pacific Ocean, on the other side, over at Manila. This is a combination of foreign ships and British merchants. When an American vessel goes into Manila Harbor, immediately freight rates drop 10, 20, or 30 per cent, or to any extent to make it unprofitable for the ship to carry a cargo. No sooner does the American ship, on leaving, disappear below the horizon than freight rates go back to their normal condition. This trust has driven every American vessel from Manila except two, and these are able to go only because they very largely carry Government supplies.

Upon the Atlantic there is a combination of foreign ships preying upon our commerce with South America. There is another preying upon our commerce with Europe. These combinations within the last two years have greatly raised freight rates. This raise has not been justified by conditions and has been accomplished only by combination. Not only has the Hamburg-American Packet Company—the name of the foreign ship trust controlling our carrying trade between here and Europe—raised freight rates, but if we can rely upon complaints recently filed with the Interstate Commerce Commission this combine tells the American merchant when he shall send his goods, how he shall ship them, and what amount he shall send, and if any house dare violate these demands or patronize an independent line that house is discriminated against and crushed and driven out of business. This company last year paid a 10 per cent dividend upon ninety-six millions of capital. This vast tribute was levied upon the commerce of this country. It came from the American people.

SOUTH AMERICAN TRUST.

There is a trust preying upon our commerce with South America. This trust has resorted to all the infamies known to organizations of this kind to strangle and kill our South American trade. It is using the rebate, discriminations, and boycott. This trust raises and lowers rates at will, sometimes changing them daily. It promises rebates to those who patronize it for a year or more, but it demands that the full amount be first paid, and then if the parties patronize another line or in any way violate any of its edicts the rebate is withheld. This trust so controls the situation that it has compelled American ships to actually return to this country in ballast. No matter if American ships would offer to carry freight for nothing, they could not get a cargo. One illustration is given where the combine compelled a large coffee firm to refuse to give a cargo to a vessel outside of the trust, although the freight rate was just one-half less than the trust offered to carry the cargo for. It compelled this firm to give it their business at its own price or be destroyed. This trust is composed of English and German ships. Its management, however, is dictated by the great English firm of Lambert & Holt. This firm manages and runs over a hundred vessels.

All firms pool on freights and all meet and divide the spoils. Every American plow, every bag of coffee, every article carried between this country and South America must pay unjust tribute to this gigantic combine. Through its manipulation the American merchant to-day pays double the freight for the same distance upon the same article upon old and antiquated vessels of from 8 to 10 knots that his European competitor pays on fast and modern ships. The freight rates between this country and Brazil are to-day the highest in the world. One of our consuls in South America was amply justified when he said in one of his reports that the—inadequacy of the transportation service between this country and South American ports is nothing short of a crime, which must be laid at the doors of Congress. Religiously protecting our interests in every other way, fostering and encouraging our manufacturers, and developing home industries for domestic consumption, it make no provisions for markets for surplus products, and thus paves the way for future industrial stagnation.

There is not a more rapacious, more open, more cold-blooded trust, either on land or sea, than this one of English and German ships that is feeding and fattening upon American trade at the expense of the American people.

Recently Brazilian merchants, who had long been robbed and plundered by this combine, in an attempt to be free, started a line of slow steamers between this country and Brazil. On the 16th of last month a dispatch came from Europe containing information that this foreign trust had already captured or destroyed the line started by the Brazilian merchants. All competition is again destroyed. A meeting was held on that day by the representatives of the various companies in the combination, and freight rates were agreed upon. There is to be no competition. The rate is satisfactory to all in the combine, and all have entered into the pool, and all will participate in the spoils. It is interesting to note that Herr Ballin, director-general of the Hamburg-American Company, the trust that is fattening upon our commerce between this country and Europe, was chairman of that meeting. This is the same Herr Ballin that, in answer to the suit brought against his company before the Interstate Commerce Commission, charging it with rebating and boycotting, has said that this country has no jurisdiction over the matter and that his combine has a right to prey upon American commerce as it pleases, and in this contention I think he is right. This is the same Herr Ballin that came to this country a short time ago, when shipping legislation was pending before Congress, and gave out an elaborate and carefully prepared interview, advising the American people against doing anything to help American shipping. It is needless to add that this interview was republished in the free-trade, subsidy-opposing, subsidized papers of the country with laudatory comments. This is the same Herr Ballin whose company, when war was declared with Spain, withdrew two of its fastest and best vessels and sold them to Spain to "sink, burn, and destroy" American commerce. This same Herr Ballin sits in a meeting in Europe and fixes the freight rates that the American merchant, the American manufacturer, and the American farmer must pay to send his products to Europe or to South America. We have been told ten thousand times by the Democratic party that the price of wheat and cotton in this country was fixed by the price paid in Liverpool. If this Democratic doctrine be true, then Herr Ballin fixes the price of cotton and wheat in this country. Herr Ballin fixes the freight, but the American people pay the freight. We are presuming far upon the patience and intelligence of the American people when we sit here and, either through cowardice or ignorance, permit these things to continue.

These trusts are preying upon our commerce. They are to-day violating the very principles for which President Roosevelt and the American people have been contending. These foreign trusts are to-day doing the same thing in the same way for the doing of which domestic corporations have been enjoined, dissolved, and fined, and their agents prosecuted, convicted, and sent to prison. These trusts are beyond our laws. We have no way to control them. We have no ships to compete with them, and the tribute we must pay is measured only by their greed.

How these outrages, this octopus preying upon the American people, should vex the virtuous soul of Democracy. But it will not. The sympathetic soul of Democracy should, by these things, be touched to tears. But it will not. These foreign trusts were not mothered by the Dingley tariff. There is no opportunity here to exhaust the vocabulary of denunciation upon the system of protection. Therefore, that ever tender and solicitous self-appointed guardian of the people—in campaign times—the Democratic party, will possess its soul in patience and defend the plundering by a foreign trust that it would denounce with vehement declamation if done by an American trust. But after the Republican party has placed a law upon our statute books, as it will, that will place our flag once more on the sea and will loosen the grip of these great combines now destroying our commerce, then the Democratic party will declare that they always favored such legislation and that the Republican party stole it from them.

The hypocrisy of the Democratic party is further demonstrated, if any further demonstration was necessary, by their actions in this matter, when they say that they are opposed to trusts, and that they are supporting the President. They will not support the President in his policy for a larger navy. They will not support the President in his policy of building up our merchant marine in order to furnish us a naval auxiliary and in order to free the American people from the tribute levied by these foreign ship trusts. The Democratic party supports the President, and the Democratic party fights trusts with their vocabulary always, but never with their votes.

I shall insert in the RECORD some statements relative to these combinations of foreign ships, our South American trade, and our need of a merchant marine.

RECENT CONGRESSIONAL ACTION.

Benjamin Harrison when President, with all the logic and force of his great intelligence, urged Congress to do something for our merchant marine. President McKinley sent several messages urging immediate action for the same purpose. For years every Republican national convention has promised to do something to build up this great industry, but that promise, I regret to say, has not been kept. Both parties are at fault upon this question. Both parties have been moved more by love of party than by love of country upon this question. I blame the Republican more than I blame the Democratic party. It has had greater opportunities than the Democratic party to pass such legislation. And then I blame the Republican party more, for I think we have a right to expect more from the Republican than we have from the Democratic party. President Roosevelt has urged legislation favorable to our merchant marine more insistently than any other statesman in our history. He sent a special message to Congress urging the passage of the bill last winter. When it failed he declared that it was a real blow to our country, and that it was deeply discreditable to us as a nation that our shipping should be driven from the high seas. President Roosevelt has told me on more than one occasion that he regarded the three most urgent questions before the country, in the order of their importance, as follows:

First. The control of great corporations.

Second. The construction of the Panama Canal.

Third. The rehabilitation of our merchant marine.

In accordance with the recommendation of President Roosevelt, a law was enacted in the Fifty-eighth Congress creating the Merchant Marine Commission. The duty of this Commission was to investigate the conditions of our merchant marine and report to Congress. This Commission consisted of five members of the Senate and five Members of the House of Representatives. The members from the Senate were appointed by the presiding officer of that body, and the Members of the House by the Speaker.

I had the honor to be one of the members of that Commission. We held meetings in every important seaport in the United States. We accumulated a vast fund of most valuable information. At the last Congress this Commission reported a bill to that body. This bill, slightly modified, passed the Senate. It then came over to the House and after considerable modification was passed by the House and sent to the Senate for its concurrence. The great majority of the Senators were anxious to pass this bill as amended by the House. It had practically the indorsement of every board of trade, every chamber of commerce, every commercial and business organization in the United States. The majority of the Members of Congress in both Houses favored its passage. The people of the country favored it. The President was waiting and anxious to sign it. But when it came back to the Senate it was in the closing days of the session. But few hours remained. Then two Democratic Senators, already defeated for reelection, repudiated by their own people, standing discredited with their own constituents, unaccountable to anyone, on their way to private life and oblivion, by filibustering prevented a vote—that is, they talked the bill to death. What little good, if any, these Senators ever did is interred with their political bones, but the evil they did lives after them. Further paraphrasing Shakespeare's lines—nothing in all the public life of these two Senators so benefited the people as their quitting it.

What followed the failure of the last Congress to do anything for our merchant marine? The great Oceanic Line, running from San Francisco to Australasia, a line paying the highest wages of any in the world, a line that was training American boys in seamanship, with ships that had been so built as to be used as an auxiliary for our Navy, was immediately abandoned, and these great vessels no longer run. These magnificent ships are to-day lying idle in San Francisco Bay, and unless the Government comes to their aid, the American flag has disappeared from them forever. Yet this nation, since these American vessels stopped running, has paid to foreign vessels for carrying the same mail over the same route that these American vessels would have carried it, practically the same amount that was asked as aid to these vessels in the defeated bill, and the service of the foreign ships is in every way inferior to what would have been given by the American ships.

The amount of money that we are now paying to foreign vessels for carrying our mails would not only have kept these three American vessels running, but for that amount this line would have added two more new vessels. The three vessels of the Boston Towboat Company, running from Seattle to the Orient and Philippines, as soon as they were satisfied that the bill would be defeated, gave up the unequal struggle and yielded the field to their foreign competitors. The fleet of American ships on the Pacific has been reduced within the past year from fifteen to eight vessels. Only two vessels now go regularly to the Philippines, and these are to be sold as soon as a purchaser can be found. The Government has given notice that it must send its mails for South America twice across the Atlantic in foreign vessels. We have been humiliated by being compelled to employ foreign ships to carry coal for our Navy. We have been discredited in the eyes of the world by being forced to employ foreign vessels to carry our soldiers to Cuba. We have been reduced to the pitiful condition where we can only communicate by foreign ships with our naval stations and our garrison in Samoa. Surely, no American citizen can contemplate these conditions to-day without a feeling of shame, humiliation, and regret, without feeling, as did President Roosevelt, that the defeat of the subsidy bill last winter was discreditable to us as a nation.

I have given you only a few of the evils that followed immediately the defeat of that bill. There is now pending before Congress another bill. It was introduced in the Senate by Senator GALLINGER and in the House by myself. It consists of only a few lines, but it means much to our merchant marine, and it means much to our country. This bill is an amendment to the subsidy act of 1891, a law that has been in successful operation in this country for many years, a law that is directly responsible for every American vessel upon the Atlantic Ocean now flying the American flag. Many of the men who have been denouncing the subsidy system do not even know that this nation has been practicing that system with remarkable success, without protest or objection, for more than fifteen years. In the bill referred to it provides that the Postmaster-General may pay second-class American vessels—that is, vessels of 16 knots or more—for carrying the mails the same rate now paid to first-class vessels. Understand that the classification has nothing whatever to do with the character of the vessel except as to its speed.

The second-class vessel in all other particulars is required to be equal to that of the first-class vessel. This bill means that the Postmaster-General shall pay to second-class vessels $4 per mile for outward voyages of 4,000 miles or more for carrying the mails. This $4 is to be paid under the same terms and conditions as are now imposed upon first-class vessels—that is, all vessels must be constructed in accordance with plans approved by the Navy, and they must carry American boys and train them in seamanship. They must be ready to answer the call of the Government at any time in case of war, to be used as naval auxiliaries. This bill proposes to pay American vessels a subsidy, a little less than that paid by other nations to their vessels. It simply means that our nation will assist our merchant marine in the same way that every foreign nation assists its merchant marine. If the bill now pending should become a law, it will mean on the Atlantic Ocean four great lines of new, modern, up-to-date ships of six vessels each, running from this country to South America. It means the death of the foreign shipping combination now on the Atlantic that is preying on our commerce between here and South America. It means that our mail will be in South American ports as quickly as it now reaches Europe on its way to South America. It means that the producers of this country can send their products directly to South America in fast, regular ships that will not in every way discriminate against them. What does this bill mean on the Pacific? It will give one line of four vessels from this country to South America, one line from San Francisco to Australasia, two lines from the Pacific coast—one from Seattle and one from San Francisco—to the Orient and the Philippines. All these lines would have to have six vessels each, and all these vessels would be new except possibly four. This would mean that we could send our mails to our own possessions in our own vessels. It would mean that we will no longer be under the disgraceful necessity of sending our mails, our diplomatic correspondence, our ammunition, and even our soldiers to our own possessions under a foreign flag. It means that we will, to a large extent, retain the great and rapidly developing trade of the Orient. It will prevent the complete disappearance of our flag on the Pacific. The passage of the pending bill would mean adding forty new, great, modern vessels to our merchant marine. It would mean that forty new, great American vessels would be constructed in our yards.

These vessels would cost $80,000,000 and all would have to carry American boys and all would be at the call of the Government in time of war. It will mean forty new American vessels that will be a glory to the sea and an honor to the nation. It will cause the Stars and Stripes to be carried in many places where it has long since been forgotten. It will add 350,000 tons to our foreign shipping. It will give employment to 200,000 American workmen. It will keep at home a quarter of a million dollars each day now sent to Europe. It will give a million dollars in work and a million dollars in wages each day to American labor that is now given to the foreigner. It will widen our markets. It will increase our exports. It will reduce our freights. It will increase the price of what we sell. It will decrease the price of what we buy. It will build up our shipyards. It will increase the demand for labor. It will increase the wages of those who work. It will benefit all sections, all classes, and all trades. It will give us an auxiliary for our Navy. It will give us transports for our Army. It will give us crews for our battle ships. It will make us independent of every other nation. It will make our Flag more revered at home and more respected abroad. It will protect us in war and add to our wealth in peace. It will make the great Republic truly a world power, the mightiest nation in all the history of the world. And what will all this cost? One-half the price of a first-class modern battle ship each year perhaps, not more; $4,000,000 annually perhaps, not more. The profits on our foreign mails perhaps, not more. Is it worth the price?

I am proud to say that upon this question in the Senate patriotism triumphed over politics, love of country over regard for party; and this bill passed that body a few days ago without a dissenting vote. This action in the same body, where a year ago it was talked to death, shows the growth of public sentiment on the question.

I desire to quote two recent statements upon the proposition of mail lines, indorsing the pending bill, made by two men whose utterances, I believe, will have as much weight and carry as much conviction with the people as any two men in America. The first is from the message of President Roosevelt on December 3, 1907. He said:

> I call your especial attention to the unsatisfactory condition of our foreign mail service, which, because of the lack of American steamship lines, is now largely done through foreign lines, and which, particularly so far as South and Central America are concerned, is done in a manner which constitutes a serious barrier to the extension of our commerce.
> The time has come, in my judgment, to set to work seriously to make our ocean mail service correspond more closely with our recent commercial and political development. A beginning was made by the ocean mail act of March 3, 1891, but even at that time the act was known to be inadequate in various particulars. Since that time events have moved rapidly in our history. We have acquired Hawaii, the Philippines, and lesser islands in the Pacific. We are steadily prosecuting the great work of uniting at the Isthmus the waters of the Atlantic and the Pacific. To a greater extent than seemed probable even a dozen years ago, we may look to an American future on the sea worthy of the traditions of our past. As the first step in that direction, and the step most feasible at the present time. I recommend the extension of the ocean mail act of 1891. That act has stood for some years free from successful criticism of its principle and purpose. It was based on theories of the obligations of a great maritime nation, undisputed in our own land and followed by other nations since the beginning of steam navigation. Briefly those theories are, that it is the duty of a first-class power, so far as practicable, to carry its ocean mails under its own flag; that the fast ocean steamships and their crews required for such mail service are valuable auxiliaries to the sea power of a nation. Furthermore, the construction of such steamships insures the maintenance in an efficient condition of the shipyards in which our battle ships must be built.
> The expenditure of public money for the performance of such necessary functions of government is certainly warranted, nor is it necessary to dwell upon the incidental benefits to our foreign commerce, to the shipbuilding industry, and to ship owning and navigation which will accompany the discharge of these urgent public duties, though they, too, should have weight.
> The only serious question is whether at this time we can afford to improve our ocean mail service as it should be improved. All doubt on this subject is removed by the reports of the Post-Office Department. For the fiscal year ended June 30, 1907, that Department estimates that the postage collected on the articles exchanged with foreign countries other than Canada and Mexico amounted to $6,579,043.48, or $3,637,226.81 more than the net cost of the service exclusive of the cost of transporting the articles between the United States exchange post-offices and the United States post-offices at which they were mailed or delivered. In other words, the Government of the United States, having assumed a monopoly of carrying the mails for the people, is making a profit of over $3,600,000 by rendering a cheap and inefficient service. That profit, I believe, should be devoted to strengthening our maritime power in those directions where it will best promote our prestige. The country is familiar with the facts of our maritime impotence in the harbors of the great and friendly Republics of South America. Following the failure of the shipbuilding bill, we lost our only American line of steamers to Australasia, and that loss on the Pacific has become a serious embarrassment to the people of Hawaii and has wholly cut off the Samoan Islands from regular communication with the Pacific coast. Puget Sound in the year has lost over half (four out of seven) of its American steamers trading with the Orient.
> We now pay under the act of 1891 $4 a statute mile outward to 20-knot American mail steamships, built according to naval plans, available as cruisers, and manned by Americans. Steamships of that speed are confined exclusively to trans-Atlantic trade with New York. To steamships of 16 knots or over only $2 a mile can be paid, and it is steamships of this speed and type which are needed to meet the requirements of mail service to South America, Asia (including the Philippines), and Australia. I strongly recommend, therefore, a simple amendment to the ocean mail act of 1891 which shall authorize the Postmaster-General, in his discretion, to enter into contracts for the transportation of mails to the Republics of South America, to Asia, the Philippines, and Australia at a rate not to exceed $4 a mile for steamships of 16 knots speed or upward, subject to the restrictions and obligations of the act of 1891. The profit of $3,600,000 which has been mentioned will fully cover the maximum annual expenditure involved in this recommendation, and it is believed will in time establish the lines so urgently needed. The proposition involves no new principle, but permits the efficient discharge of public functions now inadequately performed or not performed at all.

The other is from an address before Chamber of Commerce, at Trenton, N. J., March 23, 1908, by Secretary William H. Taft. He said:

> With our immense coast line on the Pacific, with the deep interest that we have in the Chinese trade, certainly we ought to take steps to assist the reconstruction and maintenance of steamers carrying the American flag from our west coast to the Orient. The bill which offers inducements for the construction of ships to earn the mail subsidies proposed will be an experiment in this direction, and if it proves to be successful it ought to be followed by greater and greater Government contributions to the building up of our merchant marine. I can not understand any difference in principle between Government assistance to our merchant marine and our protective-tariff system, our system of improvement of internal waterways, or any other method by which the general welfare is promoted through the Government's assistance of particular industries, in which all may engage. Let us hope that the mail-subsidy bill will lead to the establishment of direct lines between New York and South America, on the one hand, and between the Pacific coast, Japan, China, and the Philippines, on the other, and that it may be the means of pointing out how a wider system of maintenance of the marine may be inaugurated in the public interest.
> We are expending from $200,000,000 to $250,000,000 to build a canal across the Isthmus of Panama. Can it be that this canal is to be built solely for vessels of other countries than the United States? Is it true that the flag of the United States will fly over but few merchantmen passing through this great conquest of nature? The work of the canal is going on. The dirt is flying at the rate now upward of two and one-half million cubic yards a month. We have every hope that six years from next July our battle fleet may be able to ascend through the locks to the new-made lake and to descend on the other side through the locks to the sea. Ought we not in the six years which lie between the present and the completion of the canal adopt a policy which shall give us a merchant marine to justify our expending this enormous sum of money on commercial as well as naval and war strategic grounds?

If you wish to go to South America to-day, you must go in a foreign ship. You must twice cross the Atlantic. You must go to New York and from New York to Liverpool, and then from Liverpool across the Atlantic again to the South American port. When you send a letter to South America it also goes the same route, crossing the Atlantic twice in a foreign ship. An American merchant sending his wares requiring prompt delivery to South America must ship them to Europe and from Europe back to the South American market, and this must be done in a foreign ship, the ship of his rival and competitor. Do you wonder that with such a terrible handicap as this our trade with South America is constantly decreasing and has about disappeared? The supplies for our little army in the Philippines must soon all go under another flag. On the 2d day of this month 500 rifles and 20,000 rounds of cartridges were sent to these islands in a Japanese ship. We can communicate with Samoa only by foreign ships, where we have a naval station and a garrison. The Government was compelled to hire foreign vessels to carry the coal used by the American Navy on its trip from the Atlantic to the Pacific. A few weeks ago we employed foreign ships to carry our soldiers to Cuba. No American vessels were to be had. There is no second-class power of the world but what would consider these things a national disgrace. We are spending millions to improve our harbors to accommodate foreign ships. We are spending millions to build the Isthmian Canal, and when it is finished it will be traversed almost entirely by the ships of other nations. We are contributing to the naval strength of other nations, helping to build foreign navies, helping to train foreign seamen that in time of war may be used against us. Our trade is at the mercy of foreign combines and trusts that discriminate against us.

THE PRESIDENT.

In the White House to-day sits one of the greatest men of the modern world. The people of this country believe in Theodore Roosevelt, and they believe in his policies. They are with him in his great fight against millionaire criminals. They are with him in his policy that there shall be no preferred class before the law in this country; that the law shall be enforced alike against great and small, rich and poor. They believe with him that he who steals a million is as much a thief as he who steals a loaf of bread. And the people of this country to-day are behind President Roosevelt in his policy to build a great navy and a great merchant marine.

THE PEOPLE NOT SATISFIED WITH CONDITIONS ON THE SEA.

Are the people of this nation satisfied with the conditions to-day upon the sea? I do not believe it. I do not believe that the people of this great country are satisfied that our matchless commerce, the mightiest that the world has ever known, shall be carried under a foreign flag. I do not believe that they are satisfied that we shall pay half a million dollars each day to foreign labor for work that should be done by American labor; that $750,000,000 should be invested in foreign shipyards building ships to carry our commerce; that 500,000 foreigners should be given work and wages in building and operating these ships. I do not believe that they are satisfied that $200,000,000 each year should be taken out of this country, sent abroad, given to foreigners to carry our own products to our own markets. I do not believe that the American people are satisfied that we should continue to spend millions to construct naval vessels that, when completed, we can not furnish with crews; that our Army shall remain without transports, our Navy without an auxiliary, and the nation continue to be powerless to protect our possessions over which our flag floats. I do not believe that the American people are satisfied that even our mails, our ammunition, and our soldiers should be carried to our own possessions under another flag. I do not believe that the American people are satisfied that we should spend countless millions in constructing the Panama Canal mostly for the benefit of other nations; that we should spend $40,000,000 annually to improve our rivers and harbors for the benefit of foreign ships.

I do not believe that the American people are willing that the prosperity and the safety of this country should be given into the power and keeping of the other nations of the world. I do not believe that the American people are willing that our flag shall permanently disappear from the sea. I believe that the American people will demand that Congress should do its duty and that demand will soon come with such force that cowardice, selfishness, and political expediency can not long stand before it. The people of this country will never be content until Congress has written upon the statute books a law that will make us supreme upon the ocean as we are to-day supreme upon the land; a law that will cause a just part of our matchless commerce to be carried in American ships, built in American yards by American labor, paid American wages, manned by American seamen, and flying the American flag. The American people will never be content until a law has been placed upon our statute books that will restore the ancient prestige, the greatness, and the glory of our merchant marine; a law that will again cause our ships to travel all the highways of the ocean, our sails to whiten every sea, and our flag to shadow all the ports of the world. Yes; I believe, I know, that the great, patriotic people of this mighty Republic will never be content until the Stars and Stripes, "your flag and my flag," shall again proudly fly on all the circuit of the seas.

Your flag and my flag, and how it flies to-day;
In your land and my land and half the world away;
Rose red and blood red its stripes forever gleam,
Snow white and soul white, the good forefathers' dream;
Sky blue and true blue, with stars that gleam aright;
The gloried guidon of the day; a shelter thro' the night.

Your flag and my flag, and oh, how much it holds!
Your land and my land secure within its folds;
Your heart and my heart beat quicker at the sight;
Sun-kissed and wind-tossed, the red and blue and white;
The one flag, the great flag, the flag for me and you;
Glorified all else beside, the red and white and blue.

APPENDIX.

A prominent American who recently had occasion to go to Valparaiso on important business, in a letter thus describes the poor service furnished by foreign vessels to South America:

"The first steamer sailed from New York on September 7, and I reached Colon on September 16. The first steamer leaving Panama sailed on the 21st. You may understand the annoyance to which I was subject when I state that I was from September 21 until October 17, twenty-seven days, in going to Valparaiso, a distance in round numbers of 3,000 miles. I was forty-one days from New York to Valparaiso. The accommodations are wretchedly inferior for passenger and mail service on the Pacific coast between Panama and Valparaiso. There are two steamship companies that control the traffic, the South American Steamship Company, Chilean, and the Pacific Steam Navigation Company, British. The companies have formed a combination and they offer the poorest kind of service. In 1889 when I first came to this coast the trip from Panama to Callao was made regularly in nine days, and now it takes from fourteen to sixteen. Many of the same steamers are still in commission, and naturally they are old, dirty, and inconvenient, besides overburdened with traffic. Freight and passenger business on the line has doubled, I am told, in the last five years, and rates have also increased. It now costs $210 American money for a ticket from Panama to Valparaiso, whereas the price fifteen years ago was $150. Both companies have so much trade that they can not handle it and seem to be incapable of improving the service. Both are getting enormous profits, and yet do not offer to the public as good accommodations as they did fifteen years ago. When I went to the United States last May I took an English ship, the Oronosa, that went south to the Straits of Magellan, through the Straits to the Atlantic and thence to Liverpool. Afterwards I sailed from Southampton for New York, and I made the entire trip, a distance of 13,000 miles, in exactly forty-one days. By a strange coincidence, it took me exactly forty-one days to come from New York to Valparaiso, a distance of 5,000 miles. The route via Europe was in clean, up-to-date steamers that wasted no time. The west coast trip was in very inferior steamers that made more than twenty stops, sometimes for three days at a time, for the purpose of picking up cargo. I can not too strongly urge the necessity of some movement that will result in better steamship facilities on the coast. Improvement in American trade in these countries is practically impossible under present circumstances. If a good line of American steamers can be put on this route, it will revolutionize conditions and bear rich fruit for American interests. I am informed the Hamburg-American Line is preparing to establish a new line of steamers on this coast. If it does, it will improve matters, but will help German trade more than that of the United States."

THE EUROPEAN STEAMSHIP TRUST IN OUR TRADE WITH SOUTH AMERICA.

Secretary Root said, on his return from his journey around South America, in an address before the Trans-Mississippi Commercial Congress at Kansas City, November 20, 1906:

"Between all the principal South American ports and England, Germany, France, Spain, Italy, lines of swift and commodious steamers ply regularly. There are five subsidized first-class mail and passenger lines between Buenos Ayres and Europe; there is no such line between Buenos Ayres and the United States. Within the past two years the German, the English, and the Italian lines have been replacing their old steamers with new and swifter steamers of modern construction, accommodation, and capacity.

"In the year ending June 30, 1905, there entered the port of Rio de Janeiro steamers and sailing vessels flying the flag of Austria-Hungary 120, of Norway 142, of Italy 165, of Argentina 264, of France 349, of Germany 657, of Great Britain 1,785, of the United States no steamers and 7 sailing vessels, 2 of which were in distress.

"An English firm runs a small steamer monthly between New York and Rio de Janeiro; the Panama Railroad Company runs steamers between New York and the Isthmus of Panama; the Brazilians are starting for themselves a line between Rio and New York; there are two or three foreign concerns running slow cargo boats, and there are some foreign tramp steamers. That is the sum total of American communications with South America beyond the Caribbean Sea. Not one American steamship runs to any South American port beyond the Caribbean. During the past summer I entered the ports of Para, Pernambuco, Bahia, Rio de Janeiro, Santos, Montevideo, Buenos Ayres, Bahia Blanca, Punta Arenas, Lota, Valparaiso, Coquimbo, Tocopilla, Callao, and Cartagena—all of the great ports and a large proportion of the secondary ports of the Southern Continent. I saw only one ship, besides the cruiser that carried me, flying the American flag. The mails between South America and Europe are swift, regular, and certain; between South America and the United States they are slow, irregular, and uncertain. Six weeks is not an uncommon time for a letter to take between Buenos Ayres or Valparaiso and New York. The merchant who wishes to order American goods can not know when his order will be received or when it will be filled. The freight charges between the South American cities and American cities are generally and substantially higher than between the same cities and Europe. At many points the deliveries of freight are uncertain and its condition upon arrival doubtful. The passenger accommodations are such as to make a journey to the United States a trial to be endured and a journey to Europe a pleasure to be enjoyed. The best way to travel between the United States and both the southwest coast and the east coast of South America is to go by way of Europe, crossing the Atlantic twice. It is impossible that trade should prosper or intercourse increase or mutual knowledge grow to any great degree under such circumstances. The communication is worse now than it was twenty-five years ago. So long as it is left in the hands of our foreign competitors in business, we can not reasonably look for any improvement. It is only reasonable to expect that European steamship lines shall be so managed as to promote European trade in South America rather than to promote the trade of the United States in South America."

These foreign steamships to Brazil and Argentina are and long have been in a hard and fast trust or combination. Consul-General Seeger, at Rio de Janeiro, spoke thus of this foreign trust in a report in 1903:

"The united steamship companies which control the carrying trade between the United States and Brazil—the Lamport & Holt Line, the Prince Line, the Robert M. Sloman Line, and the Chargeurs Reunis—have agreed to raise their rates on coffee from Santos and Rio de Janeiro from 30 cents and 5 per cent primage per bag of 133 pounds to 35 cents and 5 per cent. This rate will go into force in October."

In an earlier report the consul-general had said:

"Since last August the freights have been raised and lowered and lowered and raised again to suit the purpose of the trust till they have reached their present level. * * * The trust has an agreement with coffee shippers here to pay them a rebate of 5 per cent at the end of every six months from the date of the agreement on all freights collected; provided, however, that this rebate is forfeited in case the shippers give freight to any vessel not belonging to the trust during the period stipulated. Through this arrangement the trust controls the shippers and American vessels go home in ballast."

A writer and traveler, Julian Haugwitz, in American Trade, has said of the "combine:"

"THE BRAZILIAN SHIPPING RING.

"Our commerce with Brazil and the River Plata countries is at the mercy of such a shipping combine. Ostensibly four lines are competing in 'serving' the route between New York and Pernambuco southward, viz, the Lamport & Holt Line, Prince Line, Norton Line, all British, and the R. M. Sloman Line, which is German. In reality, however, the management of these services is centralized in Liverpool, the freights are pooled, and the spoils divided pro rata.

"At the head of this syndicate stands Lamport & Holt, of Liverpool, a powerful firm owning and managing over a hundred vessels. The ships engaged in the New York-South American service are mostly slow and obsolete, steaming 8 to 10 knots an hour, and yet the rates of freight levied on American cargo are nearly double those charged by the speedy, modern, elegant ships plying between Europe and the east coast of South America. Not a case of kerosene or a bag of coffee can escape paying toll to this freight ring, and there was more truth than comedy in the facetious request sent by a Rio shipper to the syndicate's agents at that port asking for a permit to ship some coffee on an outside vessel over their ocean. Numerous tramps or outsiders have been willing in Brazilian ports to take coffee to New York for 20 cents a bag, instead of 40 cents, as now exacted. But whenever such a vessel has been placed on the berth the syndicate has promptly lowered its freight to 10 cents, besides boycotting the shippers patronizing the intruder.

"A POLICY OF EXCLUSION.

"Another way by which the syndicate tightens its grip on its victims is to offer them a graduated return on the freights paid at the end of the year, provided no case of infidelity has occurred. An example illustrative of the combine's methods of persuasion and the shippers' liberty of trade happened last fall, when a large coffee firm in Santos received an order for 20,000 bags of coffee from New York. The syndicate's freight charge was 40 cents a bag, plus 5 per cent, but several outsiders were anxious to carry this cargo at 20 cents, which meant a saving of $4,000 to the exporter on this lot alone, and in the same proportion an economy of $1,000,000 to American coffee drinkers on the 5,000,000 bags imported from Brazil last crop year. The firm in question, having the freight room on hand at 20 cents, asked the syndicate to take the coffee at the same rate, and on the latter's refusal advanced its offer to 30 cents. The combine insisted on its full pound of flesh, and when the exporter accepted the tramp's charter, the former dropped its rates to 15 cents and later to 10 cents for all other shippers, debarring this firm and one or two other strikers from shipping on the combined boats except at the full old rates.

"The enormous advantages enjoyed by their less independent competitors, thanks to the combine's bounty, and worth thousands of dollars a day in a business worked on close margins and daily cable offers, soon brought the insurgents to terms, capitulation followed and the former rates were restored. One over-conscientious agent at Santos demurred to boycotting his neighbor, and his scruples cost him the loss of the Sloman Line agency."

A New York merchant in the Brazil trade wrote on August 19, 1905, in the New York Journal of Commerce:

"I beg leave to call your attention to the very important fact, evidently overlooked by Special Agent Hutchinson and Consul Furniss, that merchants dealing with Brazil have valid and just causes for complaint, owing to the fact that all the steam transportation companies carrying freight between United States ports and Brazil formed a combination some years ago, and as they monopolize the trade, their rates of freight are so high as to be prejudicial to the business interests of those who are unfortunately obliged to patronize these companies.

"Any independent merchant in this city (New York) or in Brazil—whether importer or exporter—knows that the Lamport & Holt, Prince and Sloman lines, plying between this and Brazilian ports, from Pernambuco southward, exact exorbitantly high rates of freight on merchandise carried either way. In the coffee trade it is a well-known fact that these monopolists, notably Lamport & Holt, discriminate in favor of some of the large importers of coffee by making them substantial concessions in freight, which, of course, is detrimental to the smaller importers. This disgraceful state of affairs certainly calls for a drastic remedy. As a merchant and shipper long connected with Brazil. I most heartily and unqualifiedly indorse Consul Furniss's recommendation concerning the need for an American steamship line between the United States and Brazil. Practically the entire trade between the United States and Amazon ports and Maranham and Ceara is monopolized by the Booth Steamship Company, of Liverpool, which, owing to arrangements concluded with other steamship companies, dictates rates, conditions, etc., to suit itself, but always at the expense of the interests of this country. I hope the consul's appeal will result in the establishment of a new line of steamers, which I am positive would speedily secure a very large share of the businses between this country and Brazil."

Consul Furniss at Bahia, alluded to above, said in his annual report for 1904:

"I have to reiterate my oft-repeated report of the need of an American steamship line. The mail service between the United States and this section of Brazil during the year just past has become much worse than heretofore, due to the withdrawal of one or two monthly boats. As a result of the cargo offering here for the United States and the frequent call of vessels to get it, coupled with the fact that Brazil requires all steamers to take mail, there have been frequent calls of vessels to get mails from here, but there is only one regular boat bringing mails from New York. Between times, letters are sent hither from New York by various roundabout ways. This has virtually paralyzed the mail service. For this reason it is frequently the case that mail sent from New York in the middle of a month arrives here days after the mail leaving New York on the first of the ensuing month. This causes great prejudice to business, as the mails arriving last often have bills of lading and custom-house documents for goods arriving by the prior steamer, necessitating extra expense, vexatious delays, and great trouble to withdraw from the custom-house here, which seriously hurts our trade.

"It is impossible to maintain trade without frequent and rapid mail service. With the lack of this to contend with and the high freight charges out of New York, it is not to be wondered at that year by year our trade with this section is growing less, while the balance of trade in favor of Brazil is increasing. The present lines from New York seem to prefer high freight and little business, and make up by sending their vessels on a triangular course, viz, from Brazil to the United States, from the United States to Europe, and then from Europe, with European goods, to Brazil, with only a few vessels going and coming between Brazil and the United States direct. The German steamship lines are making preparations for an increased service with Brazil. With the aid given by these lines German trade has increased even more rapidly than ours is decreasing, and with the contemplated further increase in its fleet the outlook for German trade is even brighter than heretofore.

"The manner in which the trade interests of the United States are made to suffer by reason of the inadequacy of the transportation service between this country and South American ports is nothing short of a crime which must be laid at the doors of Congress. Religiously protecting our interests in every other way, fostering and encouraging our manufacturers, and developing home industries for domestic consumption, it makes no provision for markets for surplus products, and thus paves the way for future industrial stagnation. In the meantime other countries reap the benefits of the trade demands of these nations by establishing steamship lines and commercial agencies in every important city. Is it any wonder that Mr. Lincoln Hutchinson, who is now in Brazil making a study of the conditions there, exclaims: 'The mass of the people scarcely know that such a country as the United States exists!'"

Hon. John Barrett, then minister to Argentina, said in 1904:

"I wish to explain a little in regard to this point. The question arises, If the business is there, why do not men go into it? Let me remind you that Europe has become established in this trade in the first place, and that she controls it at the present time. All the steamship lines that undertake this business are European steamship lines, and wishing to build up the trade with Europe rather that with America, they form combinations and use their influence against the establishment of American lines. You see that in the agreement of the Lamport & Holt Line, which runs a line of passengers to Rio, but does not go on to Buenos Ayres. Because of an agreement with the Royal Mail Steamship Company of England, they agree that they will not run their passenger steamers farther than Rio, and yet I was informed in New York and Philadelphia than an American company was already organized that would be willing to undertake to put on a line of steamers between New York and Buenos Ayres, provided they could receive enough money for carrying the mails to insure them against loss while they were establishing a regular trade and traffic."

Consul-General Anderson at Rio de Janeiro, in the Daily Consular and Trade Reports of September 29, 1906, said that:

"Merchants complain that the high freight rates obtaining on goods from the United States to Brazil generally continue to act as a deterrent to trade in general. The conference rates (the conference is the European steamship trust) on goods from the United States to this part of South America are nearly twice as high as freight rates from Asiatic ports to the United States."

Consul-General Anderson said, in the Daily Consular and Trade Reports of December 10, 1906:

"The steamship Goyaz, the ship of the Lloyd Brazileiro, which inaugurated a regular service between Brazil and the United States about the latter part of August, took a cargo of coffee at 20 cents per bag, as compared with the price of 35 cents charged by the conference ships, the latter of course being subject to the rebate agreed upon, which is made at the end of the year and is proportionate to the amount of coffee shipped. In addition to this cut in the market made by the Brazilian line, one of the largest shippers of coffee in Rio chartered a ship and furnished her total cargo the past week, making quite a cut in the cargoes expected for several conference ships. The result of the opposition to the ship combine is uncertain, but it seems to be generally agreed that the conference rate is too high.

"Freights between the United States and Brazil are much higher than those obtaining in the rest of the world, the rate from New York to Rio de Janeiro being about twice what the rate is from Hongkong to New York. American exporters are vitally interested in this matter, for even assuming that the rates from Europe to Brazil and from the United States to Brazil are practically the same—a fact which is not yet established—it is yet to be noted that the high freight rates shut American exporters out of markets which otherwise they might have. Low freight rates, for instance, would enable American millers to ship American flour to ports in Brazil far south of their present limit. Freight rates from New York to Brazil similar to those obtaining between New York and the Far East would mean largely increased sales of American flour. What is true of flour is true of other things. The rebate system adopted by the shipping combine also works directly and materially against small shippers, among the latter being most American exporters selling to the Brazilian trade."

This competition of the new Brazilian Lloyd Line, in small, slow steamers, seems to have been ineffective to break up the European combination. The Brazilian ships are too slow for the service. Thus the Goyaz, bringing passengers, mails, and merchandise, which left Rio de Janeiro February 12, stopping at several way ports, did not reach New York until March 13. A decent mail and freight steamship should make this passage in fifteen days.

The rate war started by the Brazilian ships did not amount to much. A cable dispatch to the New York Herald of February 16 said:

"HAMBURG, Saturday.—The conference held during the last three days in London by representatives of all the German and English steamship companies engaged in the trade between North America and Brazil, during which Herr Ballin, director-general of the Hamburg-American company, acted as chairman, is reported to have resulted in an agreement by which the rate war, which has now lasted more than one year, is terminated. It is added that a community of interests in which all the companies participate has been created."

Herr Ballin, head of the European trust monopolizing the trade between our ports and South America, is also the head of the Hamburg-American Steamship Company, of Hamburg, now being accused before the Interstate Commerce Commission of maintaining a monopoly in "restraint of trade," practicing rebates, discriminations, etc., between the United States and North Europe. Herr Ballin's defense is that the United States has no jurisdiction.

One result of the London meeting of this European ship trust described above is a heavy increase in freight rates on American manufactured and agricultural products shipped from our ports to South America. A New York firm of merchants engaged in the export trade says in a letter of March 4, 1908:

"The Lamport & Holt, Prince, and German lines are in combination. Before the late agreement the rate on cotton-seed oil had been as low as 9 cents a foot to Rio and Santos. It is now 16 cents to Rio de Janeiro and 14 cents to Santos.

"Lard was 19 cents in kegs, 10 cents in cases a foot. Now 30 cents a keg to Rio, 30 cents a keg to Santos, 20 cents a case to Rio, 20 cents a case to Santos.

"Bacon and other special lines were advanced in proportion. General merchandise is now ruling from 24 to 27 cents a foot. There was no very great cut on general merchandise, but before the late settlement figures ruled about 10 per cent less. These rates are net, no primage. The Lloyd Brazileiro quotes about 10 per cent less and net rates. At present the three lines, the Lamport & Holt, Prince, and the German line, who are in the combination, do not penalize anyone who may ship by the independent lines, but there is no question that they will try to do so as soon as possible, as was done before."

These discriminations of the European ship trust bear with especial severity on our Western and Southern agricultural products. Brazil, a tropical country, ought to be a great and profitable market, but the Brazilian Review recently said:

"Argentine flour has entirely monopolized the South. Rio, and Santos, has driven the American article from Bahia and Victoria, and is already competing vigorously for the markets of Pernambuco."

Our consul-general at Rio de Janeiro reported some time ago: "A Rio commission house made a profit by shipping flour from New York to Europe and thence to Rio, although the increased difference of travel was over 3,000 miles."

On May 6, 1907, the Post-Office Department instructed the postmaster at New York to send the mails for Rio de Janeiro by way of Europe in all cases except once a month, when a foreign steamer of nominally 14 knots was sailing for South America.

In the case of the Cosmopolitan Shipping Company, of Philadelphia, against the "Baltic Steamship Pool," made up of several European steamship companies, the Hamburg-American, of Hamburg, the North German-Lloyd, of Bremen, the Wilson, of Hull, and the Scandinavian, in which this European ship trust was accused of rebates, discriminations, and other policies in "restraint of trade" in our commerce with north Europe, the Interstate Commerce Commission, a few weeks ago, decided that it had no right to interfere, under existing law, as the trust complained of was a foreign concern, and its offenses were beyond our jurisdiction. In other words, a foreign steamship combination, operating on the high seas in our export trade, can discriminate and oppress American producers at its will.

This decision makes more imperative the need of competing and independent American steamship services. As the Merchant Marine Commission said, in the words of Senator GALLINGER:

"It is possible that if there were American steamship companies in our trade with South America they might form a combination of their own. But in that event, as American companies organized in the United States, they could be held responsible by our Government, while it would be very much more difficult to prosecute and break a combination "in restraint of trade" by foreign companies, which can not so readily be reached by American laws.

"Moreover, if there were American steamship companies, their stock or bonds would be owned or controlled in large measure by American merchants and manufacturers and other business men, who would have a great deal of interest in maintaining favorable rates for our export trade to South America. On the other hand, the foreign steamship companies, whose inferior vessels now run in the South American trade, are owned and controlled primarily in the interests of merchants and manufacturers of Europe."

GUNS AND AMMUNITION CARRIED IN FOREIGN SHIPS.

"Two 8-inch guns for the fortifications in the Philippines, 500 rifles, and 20,000 rounds of cartridges for the army in the island, were sent out in the Nippon Maru, which sailed yesterday for the Orient."

[From the San Francisco Recorder, April 2, 1908.]

The Nippon Maru is one of a line of three Japanese steamships crossing the Pacific Ocean, belonging to the Toyo Yusen Kaisha, and receiving a subvention from the Japanese Government of $506,940 a year. The Nippon Maru, like her sisters, is a subsidized auxiliary cruiser of Japan, and was used as such in the war with Russia. She would be used as such in a war with the United States, and would be available to "burn, sink, and destroy" American transports and supply ships, if we could find them to convey our arms, ammunition, and troops to the Philippines.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. MADDEN. To move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is not in order.

Mr. KEIFER. Mr. Chairman, I had expected that I should have time in which to make some adequate reply to some of the fallacies that have been uttered and reuttered here on this floor; but as it is impossible now apparently to get the time, I ask unanimous consent, before proceeding at all, for leave to extend my remarks on this subject in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. KEIFER. I shall vote for the two battle ships recommended by the Committee on Naval Affairs, and, while I do this, I have reached the conclusion that I do not, in any general sense, agree with the majority of the committee or the views of the minority [Mr. HOBSON] as to the necessity or lack of necessity for more battle ships.

The committee seem to strike a happy medium, and neither favor a large or small navy on either the Atlantic or the Pacific oceans, or in any of our waters either to wage an aggressive or carry on a defensive war should war unfortunately come. Denying that there is any present imminent danger of war, yet regarding it at all times possible, the committee seem to think a halfway preparation to meet it, should it come, is better than waiting supinely for that direful eventuality before setting about the preparation to successfully maintain it. The recent war with effete Spain is sometimes cited as an illustration of what we can do and have done. I do not accept this as at all satisfactory. Our condition now in relation to other nations with superior battle ships and fleets is rather to be compared to that of Spain to the United States when the Spanish war was declared. It is true that, with the prompt expenditure of $50,000,000 toward the equipment and the purchase of ships, and so forth, and with our Navy then greatly superior to that of Spain in armor and armament, we were able to destroy the Spanish fleet in the Philippines and at Santiago without a real naval engagement, and to thus seem to be a great world power on the high seas. These or like incidents are never to be repeated. In our then state of preparation we would never have dared to go to war with any real naval power of the world.

To make the illustration more complete we should take Spain as the example and her fate in that war as the warning. She had a navy composed of many once good, but then obsolete, ships and fighting vessels, and her fleets were in many waters; but her impotency for war was demonstrated to her dismay, first, within a week (May 1, 1898, at Manila) after the war was declared (April 25), and two months later (July 3) at Santiago her principal fleet was destroyed, to Spain's final and lasting humiliation. Spain's experience and fate afford only a moderate spectacle and a miniature example of what would befall this country should it be forced to go to war with even a third-rate power possessed of fleets superior to ours.

Notwithstanding the sentimental talk about it not being necessary for a nation to go armed as a measure of protection from attack, I reaffirm that manifest weakness invites aggression and insult, both of which lead to war. It is highly probable that had Spain possessed a fleet of equal strength to that of the United States war would not have been declared against her because of her inhumanity to her own subjects. Our country inaugurated (1898) a new cause for war. The Spanish war was the first and only one ever declared purely on humanitarian grounds in the history of nations. Other powers may not prove to be inspired by better or higher international ethics or principles than was the United States in 1898, and a cause for war is easily found by the strong against the weak. The jealous eye of monarchy has always been on our Republic. Its constitutional guaranties of individual liberty has long robbed tyrannical governments of their most virtuous and enterprising subjects.

Until there is international disarmament we must be in constant readiness to wage war and thereby insure peace.

The views and fears of the minority I do not entertain. I do not think that any nation is hunting for a fight with us either by sea or land. I do not, however, attribute this reluctance to assail us to a mere fear of us on account of our supposed strength, resting in a peace sentimentality born of a modern Christian civilization, but their fears come naturally from our capacity for war, shown by our achievements on the fields of blood in the Revolutionary war for independence, the defensive war of 1812, the Mexican war for acquisition, the civil war to maintain the Union, the war with Spain for humanity, to say nothing of a hundred years of Indian wars. We are a nation with bloody annals. The great powers of the earth have not forgotten our history, and will not until time is no more.

I believe in The Hague Peace Tribunal, and I will do all I can to foster its efforts to prevent war and to alleviate its barbarities when it comes, though there may be a danger that war may be so refined that it will be resorted to for recreation or for mere glory. Politeness in destroying life in war is absurd in the highest degree, and to advocate the preservation of the enemy's property while engaged in taking the life of its subjects is to favor regarding property above human life. The tendency to alleviate in war unnecessary suffering to combatants and noncombatants has been long advocated between Christian nations, and whatever can be done by international treaty or agreement to that end should be done. I do not here undertake to define the limits of efforts that should be made to lessen the horrors and suffering of war, but so long as war exists it will be directed principally toward the taking of human life, the destruction of property being an important incident as a means of exhausting and overcoming the enemy.

Armies are assembled, armed, disciplined, and trained to destroy life. Why not destroy property where it will hasten peace and prevent the effusion of blood? War will never be carried on politely. Rifles and cannon are not discharged, bayonets are not thrust, swords are not unshielded and wielded, and shells or bombs are not fired or exploded affectionately in battle, nor can any ethics of civilization devise any plan to make war otherwise than it has always been in this respect—a wholesale destroyer of human life. Let us not deceive ourselves and suppose war will ever be materially otherwise.

Until a peace congress of nations shall agree to require all the powers of the world to submit their disagreements, grievances, and claims to arbitration or to a permanent international court—the high court of The Hague—or tribunal and to make the decision reached and award made final, and to enforce it by combined war against a nation that may refuse to obey its mandates, decrees, or awards, such a congress will be impotent and nations will have to continue to be armed and ready to redress their own grievances. To this extent I agree with my friend here, the distinguished peace advocate from Missouri [Mr. BARTHOLDT]. Such a peace congress I most heartily indorse. (I am a member of the American group of Interparliamentary Unions.) This would result in some disarmament at least, and in general it might, and it is sincerely to be hoped would, secure peace between nations. That there will always have to be an army and navy, if for no other purpose than to act as a national or State police power on land and sea as an aid to the civil power is too plain for dispute. The ordinary civil power or constabulary force of States, counties, municipalities, courts, etc., without a disciplined and trained army ultimately behind it would prove to be too weak to cope with constantly occurring extraordinary conditions. Federal and State executive powers, legislative acts and judicial decrees, judgments, civil and criminal, would lack potentiality if there was not some final organized power to aid in enforcing them. Indeed, the executive, legislative, and judicial branches of our State and Federal governments would not long exist if there was no ultimate armed power to uphold them.

My colleague from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] says:

> Our chiefest destinations * * * are the triumphs of commerce, of industry, and of science; that here * * * we have maintained the importance of the individual, and that we give respect and reverence to the teachings of Christianity. We have been at peace between nations.

He says:

> The cause of him who is wronged is the strongest cause that can exist under heaven. When sympathy is aroused it is a factor more potent than armies.

That—

> This is certainly true of the individual.

He inquires—

> Why is it that chivalry gives such respect to the tender sex * * * our sheltering, our protecting hand does not go out to the Amazon? * * * No nation can afford to impose on a weak people. The public opinion of the civilized world is stronger than the armies and navies of the proudest empire.

That the whole civilized world would rise up and legions would crowd to the bar of nations crying "Hands off! Hands off!" if some nation of Europe should go to South America and seek to subject a weak people there.

He exclaims—

> Talk about (England) sending battle ships up the difficult channels of the St. Lawrence!

Adding that—

> There would be no boundary line between the United States and Canada by the time the battle ships got across the Atlantic.

These absurdities are again to-day reiterated in substance here.

I have summarized these only partially true sentimental fallacies as the best I have heard here in the advocacy of our Republic going unarmed as the proper mode of commanding the respect and influence of other nations. We cheer such talk here now, yet in the presence of danger or war we would not listen to it with patience. In so far as any element of practical truth enters into these sentimentalities they will do possibly for the lecture platform, for the purely peace advocates and on the hustings, but not to instruct or guide a legislative body where stubborn facts should be considered. Let us not deceive ourselves here, where duty in the light of existing conditions should guide us.

But how much of real truth is there in these statements tested by our history? Our moral power is exactly measured by our physical power. We have only moderate distinction in commerce, and no triumphs. Our commerce was driven from the high seas over forty years ago and our exports and imports are still carried in foreign bottoms in consequence of our having an inadequate Navy during the civil war. In general our triumphs of industry concern our home affairs and are aside from the question of preparedness for war. So of the importance of the individual, save as to his disposition to engage in war. And, however much we have reverenced the teachings of Christianity, we have the bloodiest of war history, and we fostered human slavery in its worst form longer in this land than it had existed in any other so-called "civilized country," and this in the afternoon of the nineteenth century. Within our borders, in the name of our Christian civilization, there was made the only attempt in all the ages to establish a nation in which the perpetuation of slavery was its chief object. And about one year in six, on an average, Indian wars excluded, of our nation's life has been a year of war. Surely "our respect and reverence for the teachings of Christianity" did not stay the direst of evils (human slavery) until the demon of war intervened to destroy it. Nor have we been, as stated by my distinguished colleague, "at peace between nations," nor with ourselves.

We found a cause for war with Mexico, a sister Republic, avowedly to acquire more territory to devote to the Moloch of slavery, and we depleted her of her richest and fairest possessions. We went to war with Sapin for humanity's sake, declaring we did not seek conquest but we ended it by establishing a perpetual peace-protectorate over Cuba, by taking Porto Rico, and by acquiring more than 3,000 islands in the Philippines, halfway around the world. Our Indians wars have resulted in substantially destroying the Indian tribes and in dispossessing them of their homes and lands that a Christian people might inhabit them. Such have been the ethics of our Christian civilization. We assailed, long ago in the name of our civilization the Algerines and Moors on the shore of the Mediterranean. We have forced recognition of our nationality on China, also on Japan, now so grown in "world power" as to cause some Members on this floor to daily tremble for our country's safety.

Verily we have not been at peace "between nations."

The reason why the cause of the "wronged is the strongest cause that can exist under heaven," and the reason why sympathy aroused is "more potent than armies," and the reason why chivalry respects the "tenderer sex" is that noble Christian and natural sympathy of highly wrought civilized man develops that chivalry which springs to arms to defend and protect the wronged and the weak. The only reason why in individual cases "our protecting hand does not go out to the Amazon" is because she is strong and able to cope with her own adversaries—to fight her own battles.

The reason why in this age of civilization "no nation can afford to impose upon a weak people" is exemplified by our recently declaring war against Spain because of her inhumanity to her own subjects. If it be true that the "public opinion of the civilized world is stronger than the armies and navies of the proudest empire," it is because the civilized world "would crowd to the bar of nations crying, 'Hands off! Hands off!'" backed with their combined armies and navies, ready and willing, if necessary, to overthrow the transgressing empire. Example, the recent marching of the armies of the United States, united with those of the greatest and most civilized nations of Europe and of Japan, to Peking, the seat of the Chinese Empire, to protect and redress by actual war the wrongs of our imperiled Christian—Protestant and Catholic—missionaries and others.

And in the supposed case of an European nation attempting "to subject a weak people" in South America, we would invoke the Monore doctrine and, with our Army and Navy, compel "hands off" with shot and shell. Thus only has the Monroe doctrine been upheld and to be held.

Also in the figure of speech exclamation about England "sending battle ships" up the St. Lawrence and the boundary line between the United States and Canada disappearing, my colleague failed to tell us that the Army and Navy, backed by the yeomanry of the Republic, would spring to arms, and this North American continent would be on fire, as of old, with war and preparation for war. So all there is of that sentiment which woos peace leads inevitably to actual war in every eventuality.

President Roosevelt, in his last message to Congress, quotes that part of Washington's Farewell Address out of which has been evolved that common saying attributed to the Father of his Country, "In time of peace, prepare for war." I have here on a former occasion dissented from this saying as being, at least now, behind the age. It is in consonance with modern civilization to substitute for it another—in time of peace, prepare to maintain it. The result of all investigations is that our Republic must be ready for war to avoid war.

But battle ships are not all we require to adequately insure a peace by land or sea. I earnestly believe it is at least of equal importance to them that we should so fortify Subic Bay as to secure our holding Manila and Manila Bay, that Pearl Harbor should be made as impregnable as Gibraltar, and that we should close in like manner the mouth of Chesapeake Bay against the navies of the world, thereby safeguarding Washington and the great cities on this great bay. All this would be accomplished quicker than a modern up-to-date battle ship can be constructed and floated with a complement of armament, and probably at less cost.

Manila lost involves the certain loss of the Philippines; Pearl Harbor in possession of another naval power, involves the loss of the Hawaiian Territory, and exposes and endangers our entire Pacific coast; Chesapeake Bay, open as now, invites, in case of war, a foreign fleet to enter and convoy an army to the gates of this Capital, and to other cities unless our Navy is strong enough to repel them and is constantly kept on that duty.

It follows that with these important places in safe condition a less number of battle ships will be required, and these strategic places could be thus perpetually maintained, while the life of a great battle ship is, at best, short, and in five or ten years it is likely to become entirely useless.

I believe in our Republic; in its flag, which I have followed in war about five years; in its glory, which I have enjoyed; in its Constitution, which has shielded me and mine through a long life; and in its destiny, which belongs to eternity; but not alone as a nation to be perpetuated as a world war power, but as a world peace power; and I believe neither such power is attainable or maintainable save by a recognition of existing and real conditions, created by the environment other great and influential nations of the earth have placed around us.

Let us do our duty as legislators in this emergency with the best lights obtainable, erring, if err we must, on the side of the Republic and in preserving it from humiliation and disaster, to the end that it may ever be first in all things that preserve and perpetuate the universal liberty and rights of man. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. FASSETT. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I beg only for five minutes of indulgence, and probably you will be glad and I will be glad that the rule limits me to five minutes. I do not know, and I know of no man who does know, whether there is imminent danger of war or a long-continued peace. Every true American must pray for peace. Every true lover of mankind must pray and work for peace, but we should be deaf to the teachings of history if we dared predicate all our actions on even a lively hope that peace might permanently endure. There is room on this question for honest differences of opinion. Opinions do honestly differ as to the situation, opinions do honestly differ as to the measure of protection which we should take, but history teaches me that unarmed justice has since the beginning of the race been a beggar among men and the nations of men. I admire those eternal principles of justice which little by little through agony and fire and blood and war have been established, but I challenge the gentlemen to point to one of them which has not been secured by infinite struggle, waste, death, suffering, tears, and blood. I do not know whether there is to be war or not. I do not know whether four battle ships are necessary or two battle ships are best. I know that if they should be necessary any consideration of mere dollars, any consideration of mere expense, is but trifling with a serious situation. When experts disagree we are the jury. The Commander in Chief, not of the Congress, but of the Army and Navy, has put it up to this House to decide. We are not experts, but we are the jury, and as one of the jurymen the whole argument sums itself up to me in this way: We have to guess, and we may guess wrong. I would rather guess four battle ships to-day and find out that we needed two battle ships to-morrow than to guess two battle ships to-day and find out that we needed four battle ships to-morrow. [Applause.] We dare not face the consequences of a mistake on the wrong side, and if the first guess were wrong it would cost our country only $20,000,000 or $30,000,000, prematurely expended, but if we guessed wrong in deciding on two battle ships it might cost our country and our children and our heritage irreparable damage and irreparable loss. [Applause.] And when we are faced with a condition like this it is no time to go into idle academics as to the potential efficiency of unarmed justice. All the triumphs of history, all the brilliant pages of man's record, have been written not by unarmed justice, but by justice with the flaming sword. [Applause.] Justice with flaming sword emancipated us; it emancipated the slave. It has emancipated him wherever he has cowered since history's dawn, and the flaming sword must be the dependence of the right. Ideas are stronger than men, but ideas operate through men. They are born in the brains of men; they are established by the devotion of men, and our business here is not to quibble about two gunboats. It is broader than that; it is a question of the peace of the nation. It is possibly a question of the peace of the world. The way has been pointed right. Our duty is to follow according to our best convictions. I only regret that I can not by the same vote establish an adequate merchant marine in order to help our Navy in times of trouble. [Loud applause.]

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. Chairman, I shall support the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] providing for four battle ships, because in the discharge of my personal responsibility as a member of this body I believe that the present conditions make that duty imperative upon me. I have great admiration and respect for the gentlemen here who have advocated a contrary policy, but I desire to call the attention of this committee to the fact that if gentlemen here claim to be standing by the policy which was inaugurated in regard to naval construction one or two years ago—for some reason, which has not been explained on the floor of this committee, the great Naval Affairs Committee of this House is advocating the construction of two battle ships—that policy contemplated only one. Considering many phases of our foreign relations, I am convinced our Navy should be strengthened.

There are, Mr. Chairman, in matters of this sort, some things that ought not to be agitated too much. I do not believe it is within the sphere of my duty as a Member of the American Congress to raise the red flag of war, but I can not rid myself of the sworn responsibility to take every reasonable precaution which in my judgment is necessary to provide for the defense of my country and for the honor of my flag. [Loud applause.] The American Navy has throughout the past been uniformly triumphant from the days when John Paul Jones fought beneath its standard on the bloody decks of ships unworthy of any navy in British waters, and from that day to this, when our fleet of battle ships ride the waters of the Pacific, our Navy has ever been uniformly victorious. But its victories have not come so much from the strength of our naval armaments as they are due to the indomitable courage and accurate marksmanship of our seamen and the matchless skill and daring of their commanders. While I believe this high standard of service still exists in the Navy, it is my duty to place the brave defenders of my country where their skill and daring will not prove unavailing in the hour of conflict.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN], in his address a few moments ago, said that the conflict which he feared was not so much, as I understood him, a war inspired by oriental nations as between oriental people and western people.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], on the floor of this House a few days ago, said, in substance, in case war with an oriental power comes, the cause of America will be the cause of Europe.

Sir, when Russia was struggling in the throes of a desperate conflict with Japan we gave no sympathy to Russia, and it seems idle to me that we should rely upon a proposition of that sort, that Russia and her allies should extend to us what we so recently withheld from her. If we are to have a navy, it should be strong enough, under the circumstances that now surround us, under the obligations that now devolve upon us, in our foreign relations as they now exist and as the future gives promise of their continuing, to maintain a defensive attitude on both our coast lines. Every part of the United States is equally sacred, and it is of equal importance that we should prepare for the defense of the Pacific coast as we should that of the Atlantic slope. I come from an interior State, where no enemy could ever put a foot on an inch of its soil; but every foot of American soil is equally sacred to me. [Loud applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The gentleman from Missouri is recognized.

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Mr. Chairman, on May 10, 1906, a debate took place on the floor of this House on this very same question. At that time I was catechised by the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] for taking the position in favor of the construction of one battle ship. I have not the time to read the running debate which occurred between the gentleman and myself, but he endeavored to insinuate by his questions that I had received orders from some one, evidently referring to the White House, to support the policy of building the one battle ship, and as an advocate of arbitration and peace I could not afford to do so. I answered him that I had received orders from no one, and was acting on my own conscientious judgment. Since that time I have had no opportunity to prove that my position was consistent, but to-day I welcome the double opportunity of proving not only my own consistency but the inconsistency of the gentleman from New York. [Applause.]

I voted for one battle ship then, and I shall vote for one more battle ship to-day. [Applause.] The gentleman at that time voted for no battle ships, and he is ready to vote for four battle ships to-day. At that time the gentleman insisted that it is the duty of every Member to exercise his own individual judgment in casting a vote upon so important a question; while to-day he began his speech with a reference to the fact that the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy was responsible for the vote he would cast on this question. [Laughter and applause.]

So much for that. Mr. Chairman, every Member of this House, I am sure, realizes that this is a most important juncture in the history of our national development. We have reached the crossroads, and the question is, Shall we continue on the pathway of American tradition or shall we follow the lead of European monarchies? Shall we look to armaments to vouchsafe national security and peace, or shall we place our reliance in the future, as in the past, upon our inherent strength, our righteousness, our sense of justice, and other civic virtues?

For more than a hundred years the policies of the fathers of the Republic have guided us safely through the vicissitudes of our national life as well as our international relations, and, for one, I would rather listen to the voice of Washington dead, Jefferson dead, and Lincoln dead than to that of all the crowned war lords of the world living to-day. [Applause.] I am certain our future will be just as secure as has been our past if we rely, as did the fathers, upon the stout hearts of the American people rather than upon ironclads. [Applause.]

I can not help but think that an appeal for unnecessary increases of armaments is an appeal to those instincts of human nature which it is our mission to repress rather than to stimulate. It stirs the fighting animal in man which it is the task of culture to keep subdued. Let us remember that all there is of our boasted civilization, besides the mere technical achievements, is the power of self-control, and that the degree to which we have learned to exercise it is the real measure of our culture. This is true of nations as well as individuals, but the exercise of that splendid virtue, while aided by peaceful agreements with our neighbors, is rendered most difficult by the temptation to which excessive armaments constantly subject those whose province it is to put them to use.

It is asserted with the emphasis of honest conviction that peace can only be maintained by preparations for war. If this were still true to-day, then we are bound to admit that no progress whatever has been made during the last thousand years, for the rulers of all periods of history have made exactly the same assertion, and have at all times misused the name of peace to exact money from the people for war preparations. If it were true, there would be no need of peace conferences, treaties, and international agreements, because each nation would simply rely upon its armed strength instead of seeking an understanding to get along peacefully with all other nations. If justice and peace is really the object sought, there is another way to secure it, much more economical, more humane, and more in harmony with the spirit of modern civilization. The Hague Conference has agreed to leave the negotiation of arbitration treaties to the powers. There is absolutely no obstacle in the way of an American administration to negotiate such treaties with all powers and agree to arbitrate all questions without exception, provided territorial integrity and home sovereignty is mutually guaranteed to and by all. And not a single battle ship will be needed for us to set this good example to the civilized world, while the American President who will carry out this plan would make himself immortal. [Applause.]

Certain it is, Mr. Chairman, that after we have sufficiently provided for national defense, every step beyond that to increase armaments is inconsistent with the movement to secure peace by a judicial process. It is the old seesaw, when armaments go up, arbitration and justice will go down; and when arbitration and justice go up armaments will go down. It is impossible, what my distinguished friend the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] proposes, namely, to make both ends go up at the same time.

Our naval policy has been fixed last year and two years ago by an agreement on one battle ship a year, and on this platform I stand to-day, believing it to afford ample protection in view of the fact that the possibilities of war have not only not increased, but have been greatly lessened by The Hague agreements. And mind you, gentlemen, that naval programme was agreed upon after the conclusion of the Russian-Japanese war—that is, after Japan's great victories, and at a time when we were fully aware, as we are to-day, that the United States is bounded by two oceans instead of one.

With all due deference to those who can not agree with me, I predict that the time will come, and it may not be very far off, when the American people will generally approve the attitude of those who resist extravagant naval programmes. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object for the purpose of making an explanation, I will say that while I was out in the hall a moment ago several gentlemen upon my side and one, I believe, on the other side got leave to print.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Gentlemen on both sides.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That being so, I shall not object now, because it would look unfair; but I want merely to explain that that was due to the accident of my being out of my seat, and that I shall hereafter object to any requests to print in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will remind the gentleman that it may be necessary for the gentleman to be in the Hall when the request is made.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman knew that, and did not need the advice of the Chair. The gentleman was making an explanation, in order that the House might understand his future conduct and not his past.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Do we understand that leave was granted to all gentleman who speak or have spoken on this subject?

The CHAIRMAN. No such request has been granted or submitted.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I am here as a Representative in part of one of the States of the Pacific coast. As such Representative I feel it my duty, not only from my own convictions, but because I know that I am voicing the sentiments of a very large majority of the people of my State, to declare to this committee that the people of the Pacific coast desire an authorization to build four battle ships at this time.

We are moved to this sentiment not from any desire of conquest, not because we fear an immediate encroachment of any enemy, but because for a long time we have been sensible of our defenseless condition, being off on the far Western rim of the country, and we desire, in accordance with the suggestion of the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, that the Navy may be so increased that we shall not hereafter be left in this defenseless condition. Mr. Chairman, at this time the Navy of the United States, manned by the valor of American manhood, is upon the Pacific coast. Our people welcome this Navy with shouts of patriotic acclaim; they are glad to see it not only from patriotic considerations, but because, having seen it and realized that it is in our waters, they feel a sense of security that for several years past they have not been able to feel.

We feel that an expenditure of a few million dollars for the erection of battle ships is a very small price to pay for peace either upon the Atlantic Ocean or upon the Pacific Ocean. The gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN] this morning voiced the sentiments of the people on the Pacific coast, and stated in more eloquent language than I can hope to state the conditions existing there, and I want to say, in justice to him, that the speech which he delivered two years ago in this House was delivered before the present conditions had fully developed on the Pacific coast. At this time there is an acute race question upon the Pacific coast, which is becoming daily more acute. Our people are demanding that they be saved from submergence by the hordes of the Orient now coming to take possession of the country west of the Rocky Mountains. We intend to insist upon this; we intend to continue to insist upon it. We do not, Mr. Chairman, intend to divide the soil of the States over on the Pacific coast with the yellow race, but we intend to demand and cry out on this floor until the people of the United States hear our cry and grant us the only relief that is possible under the circumstances, to wit, an oriental-exclusion act.

It has been stated by gentlemen on the floor during this discussion that this matter of oriental immigration was already being settled so far as the Japanese are concerned, because Japan is taking care that her people do not hereafter come to the Pacific coast. Nothing is further from the truth. Japan has frequently given us assurance that she would prevent this immigration, and she has as repeatedly failed to keep these pledges. Last year, in spite of the pledge she gave to the Government of the United States that she would prevent her laborers coming to this country, more than double the number of Japanese came to this country than ever came in any one year before in the history of the world—more than double the number who had come the year before. More than 30,000 came directly from Japan with passports, in spite of the assurance of the Government of Japan, and nearly all of them, or practically all of them, were coolies or laborers. During the last three months, in spite of the renewed assurances last fall from Japan that she was inaugurating and intending to enforce new and more rigorous regulations in order to prevent immigration, it is certain that during the last three months more than 5,000 Japanese have come to the Pacific coast. In the month of January of this year 1,419 Japanese immigrants came to this country directly from Japan with passports, of whom 792 were admittedly coolies. In February, 1,232 came, of whom 713 were coolies. I have not the figures for March. Besides many have come over the borders from Canada and Mexico, and they are still coming both from Japan and from Canada and Mexico. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California also asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. LEAKE. Mr. Chairman, at the request of the minority leader, I shall have to object.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I hope the gentleman will not object.

The CHAIRMAN. To which request does the gentleman from New Jersey object?

Mr. LEAKE. I object to the request put by the Chair when I rose.

The CHAIRMAN. But there were two requests; one from the gentleman from Texas and one from the gentleman from California. The Chair is entitled to be dealt with frankly. The Chair put two requests.

Mr. MACON. I object to the other request.

Mr. LEAKE. If the two requests were put together I object to both of them. I object to the request whatever it was.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made and consent is refused to both gentlemen.

[Mr. SLAYDEN addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. PARKER of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, the conditions of the past are not the conditions of to-day. Isolation was the defense of this continent in the past, but isolation is at an end. The waters of the sea are but the servants of steam and of fleets which could land a hundred thousand men on our shores within ten days.

Our territory is not invulnerable. New York was held by the British during the Revolutionary war. Washington was captured in the war of 1812. We took San Francisco in 1845-48 with a navy alone, just as any navy that can sail past her forts could take it to-day, and our wealth lies largely in our great cities near the seacoast—more so than is so of any other great country.

In the past we had no outside isolated possessions. Let no man tell me that we care not for Hawaii or for the Philippine Islands. Perhaps we sympathize with that view, but we do not intend to have any other power take them from us. But what of Panama and the canal? What say you, also, to Alaska, which is provisioned from this country and only accessible by sea except through territory of the ally of another power—Alaska, with its fisheries and its mines of gold, silver, copper, iron, and coal?

We are told that there have been no conquests recently, except by the agreement of the civilized world. Start in the Far East and count those conquests. Is it Korea, large parts of China, and Manchuria and Burmah? Is it the whole of Africa, including Egypt? Is it the provinces of Turkey, including Greece? Is it the whole of Italy or Germany and a large part of France? Mr. Chairman, the conquests of the last century, the changes of possession by reason of power, exceed those of any century within the last four or five.

I do not speak as to details. The Executive and the Department think that we need four new battle ships to maintain the prestige of the American Navy for the defense of American honor, and of America if need be. I shall vote with the decision of that Executive. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLETT. Mr. Chairman, it is not often that I stand before this committee in the spirit of apology for the President. The remarks I have made for some time past have been largely those of criticism, not because of the things he proposes, but because of the means he uses in endeavoring to carry them out. In a large measure I must continue that spirit here at this time. I agree with the President most emphatically in his recommendation for four battle ships instead of two, or any number less than four. I agree with him that our Navy needs these battle ships. As the multitude of reasons why we should have them have been so clearly, definitely, and logically presented to this committee, I am not at this time going to reiterate them or try to bring them home with any new force, but there is one point in connection with this proposition that I feel it is my duty to present with all the clearness possible. In the first place, the President in the message presented to this House yesterday recommended that four battle ships be built. The difficulty with the President in this proposition is the old difficulty that has always been present with him when he proposes anything, and that is in the method and the means by which he endeavors to impress upon the minds of this House his purpose and plan and ambition. A few days ago the committee, or a number of the Members of this House, were present at the White House with a large number of other visitors, and the President, with his customary vehemence, said that—

> Unless you give to me my four battle ships, I will veto your public buildings bill.

Now, there is the difficulty, as I say, underlying the surface here. The man who sits in the White House, who has the veto power, has used this threat—which is nothing more nor less than significant in the face of the conditions which confront us—to impose a burden and take away from the people of this nation a great benefit unless his will is accomplished. Now, I say that I feel perfectly free to offer this criticism——

Mr. HOBSON. Will the gentleman just yield for a short question?

Mr. WILLETT. Certainly.

Mr. HOBSON. Out of consideration for the President I desire to say that I happened to see him a moment after he first said that, and he said he said it because a Member had just told him that, while he was in favor of four battle ships, he had been practically forced to give them up because he had been told that unless the two battle ships were cut off they would not be allowed to bring in a public buildings bill. That is the reason why the President said it, and he said it under provocation. The opposition has used tactics in this House that ought not to be adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Chairman, that was a dramatic situation which we witnessed in this House just before adjournment last evening. Two messages were received, one from the President of the United States and the other from certain citizens from the city of New York. The message from the President of the United States was a plea for a larger Navy. The message from the citizens of New York was a protest against a larger Navy. The message from the citizens of New York which we received yesterday evening reminded me of a message we received from them ten years ago, just upon the outbreak of the Spanish-American war. The rumor came across the seas that a flotilla of torpedo boats was heading toward this country from Madrid. No sooner did that rumor reach our shores than some of the same gentleman, some of whose names I recognize on this petition, started with their message for Washington, and here on bended knee they begged and beseeched the President of the United States and the American Congress to send to New York City, not one battle ship nor two battle ships, but the entire American Navy [applause] to protect the lives, property, and treasure of the people of New York. We heeded not their plea, and as a result I am told that those who could packed up their treasure, carried it into the interior, and waited until all signs of danger had disappeared. What would the citizens of New York City not have given at that time for two Oregons 10 miles off shore at that time? [Applause.] A supreme moment comes frequently in the life of every nation. One of these supreme moments came in 1898. That was when we wanted a navy; that was when we needed a navy; and it is to protect my country against one of these supreme moments which I feel may come in the near future that I am going to vote for this amendment for four battle ships. [Applause.] If it were to be announced from The Hague Tribunal or from some other tribunal to-morrow that the leading nations of the earth had agreed to disarm their armies and dismantle their ships, I would rejoice and be exceeding glad.

But they do nothing of the kind. They meet at The Hague and talk peace and arbitration and disarmament, and then they go home and build battle ships. Great Britain talked peace and disarmament, and the dismantlement of her navy, and went home and is now building ten battle ships and has ordered two more. France talked peace, disarmament, and the dismantlement of her navy, and then went home and is building six battle ships and has ordered six more. Germany is building five battle ships and has ordered four more; her plan for next year contemplates four more, and the next year four more, and so on until 1917. Japan has talked peace, disarmament, and the dismantlement of her battle ships, and is now building four battle ships and has ordered seven more. Russia has entered upon a programme that contemplates the expenditure of $1,000,000,000 for a navy. I am utterly unable to reconcile these pretentions for peace with these preparations and practices for war. I have faith and confidence in the President of the United States. I am willing to trust his wisdom and patriotism, and I shall answer his plea for four battle ships by voting for this amendment. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. LANDIS. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent for five minutes more. Is there objection?

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I shall have to object.

Mr. LANDIS. I will ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. LEAKE. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MACON] is recognized.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, if I believed it was for the good of my country that we should authorize the construction of a hundred battle ships at this session of Congress, I would willingly, nay gladly, vote for that number. But, sir, I have sat here for several days listening to the wild speculations of gentlemen upon this floor about war, not a single one of which has had any foundation in fact upon which to rest, and no sane reason has been given why we should authorize four battle ships at this time. Nothing whatever has been said that has caused me to think for one moment that there is any more danger of war between the United States and a foreign country than I believe there is danger of war between the Members of this House upon the adoption or defeat of the pending amendment. Ever since I was 10 years of age I have heard it predicted that a war between the two races of the South was almost as certain as death, and that when it did come the white race of that section would be annihilated.

Gentlemen, if we had believed such idle declarations about a race war, we would have bankrupted the South in preparing for it; but we knew them to be wild and visionary and that there was no danger of war between the whites and blacks of the South, and hence we did not tax ourselves out of existence in order to prepare for a war that has not and will never take place. The same character of war visionaries now warn us that there is danger of war between the United States and the yellow man of the East. Gentlemen, there is no more danger, in my humble judgment, of a war between the United States and Japan than there is of a war between the two races of the South. But should there be war between the yellow man and the American people, I have no more doubt about the result than I would have about the result of a war between the races of the South, which would be the extermination of the black man rather than of the man of Caucasian blood.

Ah, gentleman, I have heard of the bogy man all my life. The prophecy about war with Japan is nothing more nor less than a bogy man that the jingoes of this country are using for the purpose of trying to frighten us into voting to give them a navy that is to their liking, even though it bankrupt the Treasury of the people to do it. The prophecy about a war between Japan and America frightens no one who stops and thinks and reasons for himself. My countrymen, do not be alarmed by the idle talk of a war with the yellow man, for it will never take place. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] is recognized.

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I will ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to proceed for ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to proceed for ten minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLETT. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I merely desire to say, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will reserve his objection, that this is the first time at this session of Congress that I have asked for more than five minutes, and I can not possibly conclude in less than ten. I will not exceed ten minutes. I have never yet asked to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. WILLETT. I withdraw my objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LONGWORTH] asks unanimous consent to proceed for ten minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. [Applause.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, notwithstanding the very able arguments that have been made against this proposition, notwithstanding also some of the arguments that have been made for it, I am in favor of four battle ships. [Laughter and applause.] The debate on this question has been the most instructive and illuminating, I think, of any debate that has been had on any question before the House this session; and yet gentlemen equally able to discuss the matter from all points of view have been as far apart as the poles. This suggests to me that there must be some middle ground upon which those of us who pretend to no expert knowledge on either side of the question may meet; a middle ground upon which those of us who are not animated by the almost fanatical enthusiasm that has been displayed on both sides of the question may safely stand. At one extreme we find the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON], who really wants at least six battle ships, but is willing to compromise on four as an "irreducible minimum." At the other extreme we find the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON], who really wants no battle ships at all, but is willing to compromise on one, as what might be called an "unincreasable maximum." [Laughter.]

Now, plainly, both these gentleman can not be right. Is it not within the bounds of probability that they are both wrong and that the logical and reasonable ground lies somewhere between the two? Is it to be found, then, in the proposition recommended by the Committee on Naval Affairs, to build two battle ships, or that involved in the proposition of the gentleman from Alabama to build four battle ships? Pretending to no such expert knowledge as that possessed by the gentleman from Alabama or other member of the Committee on Naval Affairs; pretending to no such expert knowledge as that possessed by the gentleman from Minnesota and other gentlemen of the Committee on Appropriations of the financial condition of this country; condemning equally jingoism and what some people call anti-imperialism, I shall vote for four battle ships because I deem it my duty to my constituency and my country. [Applause.]

That I should be in disagreement with the gentleman from Alabama on account of our respective seats on opposite sides of this aisle is not remarkable, as we differ on many questions of public policy. That I should be in such substantial disagreement with my colleague from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] causes me grave concern; for upon almost all matters of great public policy I fully agree with him, and upon the question which, in my judgment, is the greatest before the American people and will be for the next six months, and which is of the most inestimable interest to the people of Ohio, we are in exact accord. [Laughter and applause.]

I can not help thinking that the title of this section is to an extent misleading. I do not think that the building of two battle ships under all the circumstances would amount to a real increase of the Navy. Last year the question was whether we should build battle ships of the Dreadnought class or whether we should continue to build what would have amounted to second-class battle ships. We decided in favor of the Dreadnought class; and now all the other great nations of the world are building them. It is not so much the addition of ships to the number we already have as the question of the kind of ships we are building and what we are doing in comparison with what other nations are doing that determines whether we are really increasing the Navy or not.

Let us not forget that after the close of the civil war we continued to build ships and yet continued to fall behind the other nations, until at one time we ranked even below Chile as a naval power. Now that it has been decided by the naval authorities of the world that the strength of a navy depends upon battle ships, and that a ship of the Dreadnought class is the equivalent of at least three old-time battle ships, we must look to what the other nations are doing to determine whether we are increasing our Navy or even maintaining it at its present standard.

The facts are that at the close of this year, according to the figures given by the gentleman from Alabama, England will have authorized twelve battle ships of the first class, France twelve, Germany thirteen, and Japan eleven. To-day this country has only authorized two such ships, and their building has hardly more than begun.

To accept the suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio, that we should only build one battle ship a year, is to ignore entirely the question as to whether we shall maintain our rank with other naval powers. The basis of the gentleman's argument is that the United States should take advantage of its magnificent isolation to lead the world in the paths of peace. With great island possessions in the Atlantic Ocean, with great island possessions in the Pacific Ocean, with an announced policy of extending our foreign trade particularly with the Orient and to maintain the open door in China, can we still speak of our magnificent isolation? On the contrary, the events of the past ten years have forced us, whether we wanted it or not, into the front rank as a world power, and I, for one, am proud of it.

A few days ago this House unanimously passed a bill to establish the greatest naval base in the world at Pearl Harbor, 3,000 miles out in the Pacific. Can our magnificent isolation be invoked as a reason for doing that? Still farther westward are the Philippine Islands. We are spending there millions of dollars every year, and by this very bill are appropriating large sums for naval bases there. Can we do this and still talk about our magnificent isolation?

I do not believe that any other nation wants the Philippines. We are not all agreed as to whether we want them ourselves [applause], or, if we do, how long we want to keep them; but certainly there is no one of us who would permit another nation to take them from us. [Applause.] There is hardly an American citizen who would not shed his last drop of blood to prevent any other nation hauling down our flag there or anywhere else. [Applause.]

I am not oppressed with the fears that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] entertains of a yellow peril. I have never been able to see any indication of the hatred to which he alludes of the Japanese people for us. On the contrary, I believe that the Japanese people have a cordial regard and respect for this country, just as we of this country have for Japan. Certainly no citizens of any foreign country were ever received by the citizens of another country with more genuine hospitality than were those of us who visited Japan three years ago on our way to the Philippines. There is nothing in the history of Japan or in Japanese character that makes the supposition of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COCKRAN], in my opinion, conceivable. [Applause.] Still we must realize that the Caucasian race and the yellow race never have and never will amalgamate. We know that there are many Japanese on the Pacific coast, and if many more should come, we can not conceal from ourselves that it is within the bounds of possibility that a situation might arise that would bring on a war which all the best and most honorable efforts of this Government and that of Japan would be powerless to avert.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] argues that no strong nation can afford to impose upon a weak people, that the public opinion of the civilized world is stronger than armaments, that if some strong nation should oppress a weak people the nations of the world would arise and cry "Hands off." Was it so when the little Boer Republic was at war with Great Britain? Was it so in Armenia, when tens of thousands of women and children were slaughtered in cold blood? Was it so in Cuba, where the people were for years oppressed by the tyranny of Spain, and where the population fell off almost a million souls?

[The time of Mr. LONGWORTH having expired, by unanimous consent it was extended one minute.]

Mr. LONGWORTH. The conditions there did not cease until this nation not only cried "Hands off!" but backed up the demand with a competent navy and put the Spanish hands off by force. Does anyone contend that if we had not had a navy somewhere nearly the equal of Spain's our demand would have been anything more than a pure bluff?

There is no Member of this House who is gifted with universal knowledge. As a body we are not infallible, and where our own doctors disagree as widely as they do now, is it not wise to pay heed to the recommendations of this Administration? After all, the direct responsibility for preserving peace is theirs more than it is ours. Is it not possible that they have a more thorough knowledge of the necessity for building four battle ships than we have? The President of the United States is interested in this question more than any other question before Congress. Practically all of us on this side of the House, and many on that, urged as our special plea for election that we would stand by the President. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has again expired.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I ask for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that his time be extended one minute. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. PARKER of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from South Dakota arise?

Mr. PARKER of South Dakota. To ask that the time of the gentleman from Ohio be extended for five minutes.

Mr. LONGWORTH. I only want one minute. We will never have the opportunity to show——

Mr. SLAYDEN. Mr. Chairman, there have been no extensions beyond the five minutes, and I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is too late. The Chair waited a long time.

Mr. SLAYDEN. I stated my objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LONGWORTH. We will never have a better opportunity to prove the sincerity of our professions than we have right now. There is nothing of politics or public buildings in this question; only patriotism. I would not for a moment ask any man to sacrifice his honest convictions in this matter, but those of you who are perplexed by a conflict of authority, those of you who are in doubt as to what you should do, it seems to me, can safely resolve your doubts in favor of the recommendation of this Administration. Vote for four battle ships, and you will be standing by the President. [Applause.]

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, I have listened to this debate and have endeavored to ascertain, if I could, some good reason for this proposed extraordinary increase in our Navy. I was inclined to think that perhaps the Government had some information rendering it important or necessary that this country should prepare for defense against the encroachments of some other power; I was inclined to think that it might be possible that war clouds were hovering over this land, and that it was imperative that provisions should be made against such a contingency. Judging from the vigor with which some gentlemen have advocated four battle ships, I have thought that it might be known by some that that precise number would be needed. I have thought that someone somewhere in the Government might know that we were in danger of attack from some other country; that we might be in danger of being, all unprepared, plunged into war. I have heard upon this floor no reason whatever why we should be in fear of any other nation upon the globe. As a member of this body, I have received no information, and it appears to me that there is no information that would justify this extraordinary expense on the part of this Government. If there was any information in the possession of the Government that would justify this extraordinary increase in our naval armament, it would seem to me that such information would have been communicated to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and that that committee would have reported a bill providing for all necessary equipment.

I am inclined, Mr. Chairman, to rely on the report of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and I am unwilling to believe that it is necessary or expedient for this country to go to the expense of constructing four additional battle ships in times of profound peace. The people of this country will not justify us in imposing upon them the great burden of this extraordinary increase in our naval armament unless good reason exists therefor. If any gentleman on the floor, or anywhere in this Government, was able to give us any reason for it, or to show that there was any danger whatever that this Government might be involved in war, or that our institutions or our liberties were at stake, then I, with 85,000,000 of other people in this land, would advocate that, not only four battle ships, but 400 battle ships if necessary should be provided for the protection of our liberties, our institutions, and our Government. But, Mr. Chairman, we are living in days of profound peace, when all the world is engaged, not in war, but in promoting the arts of peace. There is no war anywhere in the world, and the peoples of the world, as I believe, are not inclined to war, but to the promotion and advancement of civilized government. There is no prospect that war will come within the next decade at least. We do not desire the acquisition of territory, and no country on the face of the earth has anything that we covet, and no country in Europe, Asia, or Africa contemplates declaring war on the United States of America. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, we have long boasted that this country stands in the forefront of the civilized nations of the earth; that it leads in all the paths of peace. Let us, by our acts, not belie that boast.

It has been argued in support of this amendment that the building of a great navy is for peace, and not for war. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS], in his speech just made upon this floor, has said that he is utterly unable to reconcile the pretensions of peace of other countries with their practices for war. He contradicts entirely the arguments of those who advocate a great navy to promote peace and not war. He cites what other countries are doing in building great navies, ridiculing the idea that the building of great navies is for the preservation of the peace, but says it is a preparation for war. So if we go on striving to build a greater navy than that of any other country, are we apt to convince those other countries that this means peace rather than war? If you put a shotgun into the hands of a child and turn him loose with that shotgun, is it to be supposed that he will not desire to shoot? So if we go on increasing our Navy as is proposed by this amendment, will other countries believe that we are doing this solely as a measure of peace and not as a preparation for war? Mr. Chairman, I am profoundly impressed with the idea that this American Republic is leading and should lead in the civilization of the world. I do not think we should make any effort to impress the peoples of the world with our strength and our military power. A very small proportion of what we are expending upon our Navy would put a commercial fleet on the seas of the world, and the American flag would be seen in other lands and recognized in a different manner from when it is seen only upon vessels of war. [Applause.]

To-day we have no merchant marine, and our flag is seen upon the seas of the world only upon war vessels. We have a great fleet encircling the globe to impress nations with our military greatness. I am glad indeed that we are recognized throughout the world as the greatest nation upon the face of the earth, but instead of war ships encircling the globe, I would rather see the flag of this Union in the forefront of the commercial fleets which sail the seas that surround the globe. And I would rather that the flag of this Union should be recognized everywhere around the world and among all its people as the emblem of a free and enlightened Government, carrying no suspicion of war or conquest or of a desire therefor, but rather known in all lands as a harbinger of peace on earth, good will to men. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, the debate on this amendment having been directed so largely at myself, I deem it proper to notice the main feature of it. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] appears to have voiced it by reading from a speech delivered by me two years ago. Perhaps I should begin by explaining that if there were inconsistency between the position taken by me at any time and the one I conceive it to be my duty that I should take now, I would not hesitate one moment in choosing to be right rather than remain consistent. Rather than violate my duty as I see it, I would be quite ready to confess that in taking the other attitude I was wrong. [Applause.] But any gentleman who can stand on this floor and find anything inconsistent between the speech read by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. RAINEY] and that which I made this morning, goes far toward justifying that reproach so often leveled against Members on this side, and which we consider unfair and injurious, that it is impossible for them to learn anything. [Laughter and applause on the Republican side.]

I took that ground two years ago, and I repeat every sentiment of it now. Then there was not a cloud upon the horizon that I could discover or anyone point out, and therefore I saw no reason why we should undertake to establish a permanent fighting force. I spoke to little purpose this morning if I failed to show that a grave change has come over our situation, and as our situation has changed I have changed with it. I might remind the gentleman from Illinois, and such others of my countrymen as have thought my course worthy of notice or remembrance, that I have advocated armaments before to-day and before delivering the speech which was read with so much evident amusement and, I hope, with equal profit. In 1896, before Mr. Cleveland's term expired, in a public meeting at Chickering Hall—the first in favor of intervention by this country in Cuba—I advised the Administration to arm then, so that its advice might have such weight with Spain that actual hostilities would be avoided.

The moment that contest was over, at a public meeting in the Academy of Music—the first to protest against forcible annexation of the Philippines—I urged disarmament, for there was no longer, in my judgment, any occasion for maintaining a huge fighting establishment. I see a danger now which I have endeavored to describe, and for that reason I urge construction of these battle ships at this moment as a precaution which may avert the peril confronting us, just as I believed if similar precautions were taken in 1896 they would have made actual war unnecessary. Should exclusion of the Japanese be accomplished, I would advocate disarmament again, for then the sky over our heads would once more be cloudless.

Mr. RAINEY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COCKRAN. I yield to the gentleman if the committee will indulge me with sufficient time afterwards.

Mr. MACON. Mr. Chairman, just there I want to say——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. COCKRAN. I can not, unless I be allowed sufficient time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. COCKRAN. Mr. Chairman, with every word that has been said by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY], or by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], or by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FULLER], on the general proposition that we can under ordinary conditions maintain peace without armament, I am in heartiest concurrence. I apprehend no difficulty with any European nation, or, indeed, with any government. I do not believe our security can ever be endangered from that source. I believe that if this country were in trouble to-morrow with any European nation and transportation of our products across the Atlantic were obstructed, other nations would be forced to intervene, not through love of us, but that they might obtain the basic materials of manufacture and the foodstuffs which are the necessaries of life produced on this soil. I do not believe the Japanese Government contemplates any aggression against us. I believe it would deplore any condition such as I have described, just as much as I know that our Government would deplore it.

But when gentlemen from the Pacific coast, one and all, stand here and tell you that while no other government covets anything that we have, yet that the people subject to another government do covet something we possess, and that is access to our soil, which our own people are not willing to concede, will you, gentlemen of the South, with a racial question of your own so momentous that you have found it necessary to lynch the Constitution in order to maintain your civilization [laughter and applause]—will you, gentlemen, turn then a deaf ear to the expostulations of your brethren on the Pacific coast who are now threatened with a danger which they consider as portentous as that which has menaced you for several generations? Will you turn a deaf ear to them when they ask that, while this Government is taking steps to secure the exclusion of this yellow race which they deem absolutely necessary to their own existence, you shall strengthen the hands of the Commander in Chief by the forces which he declares absolutely essential to the proper defense of our interests, our peace, and our security? [Applause.] That is the only proposition before this House now.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Chairman, it had not been my intention to say anything upon this subject, but simply to vote against the proposition for four battle ships; but as it has become necessary for me to leave before the vote will be taken by roll call, and as I can not be placed upon record in any other way except by expressing myself, I shall consume the one minute which I have asked for in placing myself on record as opposed to four battle ships, which are now being discussed. As a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs I wish to say that there is only one member of that committee who signed the minority report. The members of that committee, after having carefully investigated the question, have reported in favor of two battle ships, which is tantamount to reporting against four, for the reason that the question was thoroughly discussed before this committee. It is true that many of the laboring people of this country are in favor of the battle ships, and I do not blame them, because it would give them extra work to do. Many of the politicians are in favor of the proposition, because it would give them votes which they seek. The trusts are in favor of them, because it will allow them to perpetuate the power which they now have through the instrumentality of the high protective tariff. This proposition of four battle ships could not be entertained for a moment if it was not for the enormous surplus which is in the Treasury and which has been accumulated there through the medium of the high protective tariff. It is said that the "tariff is the mother of trusts," and the Republican party is the father. These trusts have been traveling at a fast gait. They are now traveling in the air, and on the ides of next November that balloon which has been inflated so long will be punctured by the great Democratic party in this nation. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. TALBOTT. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to talk about the action of the committee. It is true that the minority report was only signed by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON]. I voted for four battle ships, and the committee understood generally that I was for four battle ships from that time until now. I did not sign the minority report. The gentleman from Louisiana became a member of the committee since the proposition for the increase of the Navy was acted on by the committee. His predecessor [General Meyer] from Louisiana, either by telegram or by letter, voted for the naval programme. He voted for the four battle ships and for the submarines.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. How does it occur that the proceedings in the committee are a subject of discussion before the House?

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order of the gentleman is sustained if the gentleman is discussing what took place in the committee.

Mr. TALBOTT. Now, Mr. Chairman, whilst I did not sign the minority, I am now and have always been in favor of an American Navy commensurate with our wealth and our importance. I insist that there is but one way for the American people to preserve their commerce, protect their Government, protect themselves, and command the seas, and that way is that we shall have what we are entitled to have, what the people are perfectly willing to vote and pay for, the greatest navy that any nation on the earth possesses. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, so far as the Monroe doctrine is concerned and as discussed, the best evidence in the world that the other nations believe that the American nation will enforce it, and the best evidence in the world that they will violate it if they can, is proved by what happened during the civil war. During our civil war, while we were shooting each other down, the French nation took possession of Mexico, planted their army, put a king in power, and kept him there until our war was ended.

What happened then? Simply because we emerged from that war with the best navy in the world then, a modern navy with ironclads and gunboats, as soon as that war was ended and the American nation made the demand, the French troops left and a republican form of government was established. Now, Mr. Chairman, I insist that it is the duty of this Congress to do what the President asks us to do. I am not doing it because the President asks it, but because I believe it is right; but the President of the United States, whether he be a Democrat or a Republican, has the absolute right, as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, to say to us what he thinks is proper. He may have some information that we do not possess; the Secretary of State may have some information that we do not possess, but it is good policy for this Congress to keep in touch with the increased navies of the other nations and, if possible, to excel them in tonnage and armament.

I do not want all of my time, I am not able to talk, but I hope, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. HOBSON. Yield it to me.

Mr. TALBOTT. If I have any time, I will yield it to the gentleman from Alabama.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has no time to yield.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for twelve minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the gentleman's request?

Mr. HOBSON. Twelve minutes only, and in view of the long time Mr. TAWNEY had——

The CHAIRMAN. Under the order of the committee debate upon this paragraph will cease in fifteen minutes.

Mr. HOBSON. I must ask my twelve minutes. I have not had a fair showing.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent to occupy twelve minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I dislike very much to object to the request of the gentleman——

Mr. HOBSON. Then let me have ten minutes.

Mr. FOSS (continuing). But I desire myself to say something upon this amendment before the close of the debate, and ask recognition at the close of five minutes, inasmuch as that will leave only ten minutes for debate.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, when we sift this whole question of all these accessories and come down to the vitals there is no dissent in this Congress that the United States' vital interests are not adequately taken care of by arbitration or any other means, but must depend upon the nation's power itself without placing a vain hope upon benevolence in others. It must be power, and the gentleman from Ohio has recognized it, the gentleman from Missouri, and the gentleman from Mississippi——

Mr. BARTHOLDT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBSON. I must decline, Mr. Chairman. Mr. Chairman, between the two forms of power, military power makes a people military, naval power leaves them free. If it is possible we ought to secure our vital interests by naval power.

Then, what should be the amount of that power? It should be adequate. It should be such that an enemy approaching from any direction could be contested for the supremacy of the sea. Upon investigation we find that in the Atlantic Ocean to-day we are not capable of contesting the supremacy of the sea; upon the Pacific Ocean we are not capable of contesting the supremacy of the sea. All our vital interests exposed on both oceans are looking to Congress to provide for their security. When the Union was formed the National Government took upon itself to protect from the outside world the individual States in the exercise of their rights. To-day the United States Government can not protect the States along our coast lines. Last year it could not protect California in its rights; to-day it can not protect any State on the Atlantic seaboard. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] has referred to the fact that the fleet is coming back. Yes; the fleet is coming back from the Pacific Ocean because we need it in the Atlantic as well as in the Pacific. [Applause.] With only one fleet for two oceans, the world will know our fleet as the "wandering fleet," as it goes back and forth forever from one ocean to the other. This two-ocean need demands a large increase in size, and the recent revolution in naval architecture demands building the Navy over anew.

Mr. Chairman, the Naval Committee's conviction is for four battle ships, the President is for four battle ships, the Secretary of the Navy is for four battle ships, the General Board is for four, and more than that, Mr. Chairman, the people of the United States want four battle ships. You may not recognize this fact, but the war between Russia and Japan has brought home to our people that we require a defense in two oceans and have not provided it. They are realizing that the oceans are bridged and the armies of the world are in striking distance. You may ignore the fact or not, but the eyes of our people have followed the fleet around these oceans, and they know in connection with the changes in the Pacific what it all means. The great substrata instinct of self-preservation that has run through the human race for a thousand years is running high, running strong, running deep in the American people. Yes; and more. I believe there is a Providence whose guiding hand runs down the ages. I believe with the annihilation of space by the great modern forces of nature that men of the world, nations of the world, races of the world, are thrown together. I believe America has come upon the stage at the critical time when her influence should expand for the good of mankind. We have been a youth, but now we are a man. Some might wish us to remain a youth, with only a youth's responsibilities, but we can not do so as a nation any more than you can remain a boy after you are grown.

America is full grown. She has graduated. I believe that under Providence she has a great work to do in the world, and the chief work is that of peace. Not that she should go beyond her legitimate sphere to impose peace upon others, but she should use the power that gives her self-defense to stand for just policies where all nations gather and where her interests are involved, particularly in standing against the dismemberment of China.

Now, Mr. Chairman, four battle ships are not adequate for this. Four battle ships is not the full policy I am advocating. Four battle ships will not keep our Navy to-day as to relative standing where it was in the Atlantic heretofore, leaving out the Pacific altogether. Even those who believe in a two-battleship programme should remember that year before last we authorized none, and four would fill the gap. Even the gentleman from Ohio knows that while you are on the frontier you can not go unarmed among the natives. We are living on the frontier of the world, where there are no courts as yet—no sheriff, no constable. And since we have to go armed, we should be properly armed. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] is recognized.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, under the Constitution of the United States it is the duty of the President from time to time to give to Congress information of the state of the Union and recommend to their consideration such measures as he shall judge necessary and expedient. No one doubts but that the President of the United States has performed his duty, but in the Constitution of the United States I read another clause, and that is, "That Congress shall have power to provide and maintain a navy." [Applause.] Now, it is for us, Members of the House of Representatives, upon our own individual responsibility as Members of this House, to pass upon the questions before it. We are responsible alone for our actions. The message of the President of the United States was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs at the beginning of Congress, and the committee in the exercise of its duties gave consideration to the recommendations of the Executive, and they have brought in here a naval programme of two battle ships, believing that it would meet with the fair sense and judgment of the membership of this House. Now, Mr. Chairman, if the Navy consisted simply of battle ships, and it was not necessary to officer or to man them, or to provide for shore stations or colliers or dry docks or anything else, this might be a small proposition. But in a few moments this House will have an opportunity, after we have passed the paragraph in this bill, to decide whether we shall authorize two fleet colliers, costing $1,800,000 apiece, or $3,600,000 in all.

When the Naval Committee reports upon the needs of a navy and as to the naval programme, it must take into consideration all these other questions—the maintenance of shore stations, the authorization of colliers and dry docks, and other things which go to make up a strong and efficient navy.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I might speak about the naval programmes of foreign nations. This year England's naval programme, as I stated in my remarks, amounts to one battle ship and one armored cruiser and eight fast cruisers. France recommends, or proposes to build, six battle ships, but she has a continuous naval programme. Germany has a continuous naval programme. Japan's programme for 1908 has not been officially announced. But two battle ships of over 19,000 tons displacement are to be laid down in the near future, and the proposition to build two large cruisers of more than 18,000 tons, together with other fast cruisers, has been reported, but not yet substantiated. It is also reported that other battle ships and armored cruisers in addition to those mentioned above are proposed for construction in 1908.

It seemed to the committee, compared with the naval programmes of other countries during the present year, that this was a fair and reasonable authorization on the part of Congress.

Now, gentlemen, I want to say to you I do not believe in the proposition of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] or that of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BURTON]. I do not believe in one battle ship, and I do not believe in no battle ship at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks that he may have the remainder of the time. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that we have reached that stage of civilization where we can do without a navy. I do not believe we have reached that stage of human perfection where it is not necessary to have a national defense of some kind. I do not believe with the gentleman from Ohio that we can depend for national defense purely upon the enforcement of the Golden Rule or the Ten Commandments. Human nature is as it is, and we must meet it as it is, and we must authorize the establishment of a national defense as we find human nature to exist to-day, and not as it ought to be.

Mr. Chairman, the committee has brought in here a proposition for two battle ships. We believe in an orderly development and construction of the new Navy. Last year the President of the United States said that we needed one battle ship, and this year he asks for four battle ships. I do not believe in a spasmodic development of the American Navy; but I believe in a moderate, systematic development of so many ships a year. I would say two ships a year. When I first came to the chairmanship of this Committee on Naval Affairs I wrote in my report these words, which I would reiterate, as to what shall be the future naval policy:

> Let us build as we have been building—gradually, on broad lines and upon the most advanced ideas of naval construction; not so fast that we will be ahead of the advance of naval progress, but slow enough to secure all the benefits of new improvements and new inventions; or, better still, to do as the American Navy has always done when given an opportunity, to lead the march of the best naval construction, which it demonstrated its ability to do on at least one memorable occasion in American history—when the little "cheese box of Ericsson" in that great contest with the Merrimac blazed the pathway for the mighty battle ships of to-day.

In my judgment it is upon that line we should build up the American Navy, not one ship in one year, four ships the next year, and go back to one the year after that. I would build it upon the broad, conservative, statesmanship line. We need a navy, an efficient, strong navy for the maintenance of our interests on this hemisphere and on the other.

I may say to you, gentlemen, that it has been the policy of the committee of which I have been chairman to present a moderate programme that would meet with the fair sense and judgment of the American people, and at the same time a programme which not only keeps up the efficiency, but continues the building up of the Navy. [Loud applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. All debate upon this paragraph is exhausted. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. HOBSON. Division!

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 79, noes 190.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSS] will take their places as tellers.

The committee again divided, and tellers reported—ayes 83, noes 199.

So the amendment was rejected. [Loud applause.]

Mr. TAWNEY. I now offer an amendment to strike out "two" and insert "one."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Page 76, line 2, strike out "two" and insert "one," so as to read "one first-class battle ship."

The question being taken, on a division (demanded by Mr. TAWNEY) there were—ayes 65, noes 205.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOBSON. I have an amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

> On page 76, line 2, strike out "two" and insert "three," so that it will read "three first-class battle ships."

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. HOBSON) there were—ayes 64, noes 208.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Strike out the words "by contract or in navy-yards, as hereinafter provided," on lines 1 and 2 of page 76, and add, after the word "eight," on line 7, on page 76, the following provision: "At least one of such battle ships shall be built and constructed, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, at one of the navy-yards; the other of said battle ships may also be constructed at one of the navy-yards, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, or by contract, as hereinafter provided."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that amendment.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I ask the gentleman to reserve the point.

The CHAIRMAN. That would not make any difference. The gentleman could not speak to the amendment.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I ask unanimous consent that I may have five minutes.

Mr. PAYNE. Regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. WILLIAMS. To discuss the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the gentleman from New York [Mr. GOLDFOGLE] desire to discuss the point of order?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I should like to discuss it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. All right, I will wait until the gentleman from New York concludes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from New York on the point of order.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, in the last Congress a provision of this kind was held to be in order. The bill provides for the building of two battle ships. It provides further that construction may be had either in a navy-yard or by contract, in the discretion of the Secretary. One of the battle ships built under the act of June, 1902, was built at one of the navy-yards, while the other battle ship authorized by that act was built under contract. The present bill provides for discretionary power in the Secretary, so that the amendment now offered presents a mere question as to whether the Secretary shall build at least one of the ships at the navy-yard, or may build under contract, or shall build one of the ships in a navy-yard and one under contract. In directing the manner in which the expenditure may be made the House may direct also how and in what manner the expenditure may be incurred. The point of order was made in the last Congress on a matter substantially similar, and the Chairman ruled the provision to be in order.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair now recollects, the amendment offered in the last Congress was to a succeeding section of the bill, was it not, and not to this paragraph?

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. That I do not distinctly recall.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thought perhaps the gentleman had the RECORD before him.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I do not recall that, but do recall that it was ruled to be in order, and the point of order then raised against it was not sustained.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule; the Chair does not care to hear the gentleman.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I am informed, Mr. Chairman, that in the Fifty-sixth Congress——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. The Chair has not before him the ruling made at the last Congress, although the impression and recollection of the Chair is that the amendment was then offered to a succeeding paragraph in the bill. But the paragraph now before the committee contains the provision that the Secretary of the Navy may build the vessels herein authorized by contract or in such navy-yards as he may designate. That provision of itself might be considered legislation, but, if so, any amendment germane to it would be in order. The Chair thinks the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York is germane, and the Chair therefore overrules the point of order. [Applause.]

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. Foss) there were—198 ayes and 36 noes.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which will save twelve months in building a ship.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by adding, on page 76, after line 7, the following:
"And toward the construction of each vessel thus authorized the sum of $2,500,000 is hereby appropriated, $1,500,000 toward construction and machinery and $1,000,000 toward armor and armament; in all $5,000,000: Provided, That each vessel shall be completed within twenty-four months of the date of signing of the contract for its construction."

Mr. FOSS. I make a point of order against that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. HOBSON. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. HOBSON. What is the point of order?

Mr. FOSS. That it is not germane to this section of the bill.

Mr. HOBSON. If anything is germane to anything authorized, it is the money with which to secure——

Mr. FOSS. Will the gentleman wait a moment? I have not finished. It is not germane to this section of the bill. If it is germane at all, or if it is in order at all, it would be germane to the section on page 79, construction and machinery, and armor and armament. I am of the opinion that this is new legislation.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, this is germane for two reasons: First, that it is the money with which the ship can be begun, and second, because the time of completing the ship is germane to the ship. It saves twelve months; and furthermore, it is no more new legislation than the paragraph is that authorizes the two battle ships.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered provides that such vessel shall be completed within twenty-four months from the signing of the contract for its construction, and without passing on the other point of order it is clearly a matter of legislation, and hence is obnoxious to the rule, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the decision of the committee?

The question was taken, and it was decided that the opinion of the Chair should stand as the opinion of the committee.

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 76, after the word "eight," add the following:
"Provided, That the construction of these ships is begun and continued on approved plans which shall be altered, if expedient, in accordance with the information gained from a test made under this appropriation that shall be carried out at once with outside high explosive shells carrying the heaviest charges of the most powerful explosive ever employed in such shell and fired with velocities to simulate a range of 10 miles, one against the turret and another against the belt armor of the coast-defense vessel Florida, to determine the resistancies and protection necessary to safeguard against such shells, the vitals, and personnel in the new ships."

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that, that it is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order. Does the gentleman from Vermont desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. FOSTER of Vermont. Mr. Chairman, I will submit the question to the Chair without arguing it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ten torpedo-boat destroyers, to have the highest practicable speed, and to cost, exclusive of armament, not to exceed $800,000 each.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 76, after line 10, insert:
"Two fleet colliers, 16 knots speed.
"Not less than 12,500 capacity cargo and bunker coal. Cost not to exceed $1,800,000 each, and toward the construction of both $1,500,000 is hereby appropriated."

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman, there is one subject in connection with the Navy that should receive the attention of every business man. I wish to call the attention of the House to the condition of the Navy as far as colliers now owned and which should be owned by the Navy are concerned. We are consuming an immense amount of coal each year in the Navy—600,000 tons.

Mr. YOUNG. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. LOUD. Yes.

Mr. YOUNG. Is this a committee amendment?

Mr. LOUD. It is with the consent of the committee.

Mr. YOUNG. Then it is a committee amendment.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I would state that this subject of colliers has been very carefully considered by the Committee on Naval Affairs. I think I may say that every member of the committee believes that we ought to have more colliers, and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LOUD], as chairman of the subcommittee having under consideration the investigation of this subject, offers this amendment for two fleet colliers with the approval, I think, of every member of the committee.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is that in addition to the colliers carried in the bill?

Mr. FOSS. There are no colliers carried in the bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. I understood the gentleman to say that the bill carried two fleet colliers.

Mr. FOSS. I said that there would be an opportunity to vote for them.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman please state the reason why it was not incorporated in the bill, if it is an amendment having the approval of the whole committee?

Mr. FOSS. I will state to the gentleman that it had not been fully considered by the subcommittee—the subject of colliers—at the time the bill was finished and made up.

Mr. STAFFORD. Do I understand the gentleman to give the impression to the House that the subject was in no wise considered before the bill was reported to the House?

Mr. FOSS. No; it was considered, but no definite determination had been taken upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MAYNARD. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "coal" in the amendment insert:
"One of said colliers to be built in such Government yard as the Secretary of the Navy shall direct."

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard upon the amendment to the amendment if the gentleman is not going ahead.

Mr. MAYNARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a few words. The House a few moments ago voted to build one of the battle ships provided for in this bill in one of the Government navy-yards. Two sessions ago two battle ships were provided for, one of which was built in the navy-yard in New York and the other was built in a private shipyard. As our Navy is growing, and it looks as if we were going to provide for a larger Navy, it is necessary to have the fleet supplied with coal. It is useless to build a fleet and send it to the Pacific Ocean or anywhere else unless we can have coal go along with it. It is necessary to have colliers and to provide a fleet of colliers, and I think we should adopt the same measures of ascertaining the comparative economy of building in the Government yards and in private yards that we do with the battle ships.

We have in this country navy-yards representing hundreds of millions of dollars in investment, costing over $16,000,000 a year in maintenance, in which yards we are practically doing no construction work. We have been threatened here with the invasion of the yellow man. From wherever the trouble may come, we have not the navy-yards in this country practically in any condition for construction work. At a time like that the navy-yards would be the necessary thing that the Government should have in a condition to be utilized at once, and it is with this in view that I have offered this amendment, so that one of these colliers can be built at a Government yard. If the other is built in a private yard, so there may be a comparative test, and in case of need we may have a force of competent men which we may use when we need them. [Applause.]

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I desire the attention of the House for a moment. This is a proposition to build two fleet colliers. The committee is in favor of the amendment. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MAYNARD] has amended the motion by providing that one of those colliers shall be built in a navy-yard. I want this committee to understand that the building of this collier in a navy-yard will cost at least 10 per cent more. The constructor told me yesterday 15 per cent was a safe margin. I want this committee to understand that the building of this battle ship upon which they voted will cost several hundred thousand dollars more built in a navy-yard than if built by private contract——

Mr. TAWNEY. A million two hundred thousand dollars more.

Mr. FOSS. Standing here as chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, I want to say that looking after the economical construction of the American Navy I think the committee ought to know these things. I am going to ask the Clerk to read from a letter from the Secretary of the Navy showing what he says as to the comparative cost of building a battle ship in a navy-yard and building one by private contract. You will recall the fact that Congress did authorize the building of the Connecticut in the Government navy-yard and at the same time it authorized the building of the Louisiana by private contract, sister ships in every respect, and as a result of that the Government had to pay between $350,000 and $400,000 more in the construction of the Connecticut than in the construction of the Louisiana.

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. OLCOTT. Is it not true, however, the repairs already on the Louisiana have greatly exceeded those on the Connecticut?

Mr. FOSS. That statement has been circulated and carried through the press and also sent through circulars to Members of the House that the repairs upon the Louisiana, the contract ship, were 25 per cent more than upon the ship built in a Government navy-yard, but it is not the fact, and I am authorized by the Chief Constructor of the Navy to say that it is not the fact. Now, I send a full statement from the Chief Constructor of the Navy, and I ask the Clerk to read it.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will read——

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Mr. Chairman, before that is read, will the gentleman from Illinois yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. FOSS. I do.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Is it not a fact that the time of the building of the ship in the navy-yard was reduced by 50 per cent, compared with the time it took to build the Louisiana?

Mr. FOSS. No.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Well, the time was materially reduced, was it not? I may not be right about the percentage.

Mr. FOSS. They were built about the same time.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Is it not a fact the Louisiana went into the yard to be completed, while the Connecticut fully three months before was fully equipped and ready for sailing?

Mr. FOSS. The Louisiana went into the yard, but only such work was performed upon her as it was the duty of the Government to perform under the contract, and that is upon the authority of the Chief Constructor of the Navy.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. Well, how is it, then, that the Louisiana was not equipped, was not fitted out, but a great deal of work had to be done toward completion, while the Connecticut was absolutely equipped and fitted and was ready to sail?

Mr. FOSS. Here is the report of the Chief Constructor.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment——

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the letter from the Secretary of the Navy may be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] asks unanimous consent that the letter he has sent to the Clerk's desk may be read. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 9, 1908.

SIR: Complying with the request contained in your letter of the 30th ultimo, I beg to inclose herewith a comparative statement of the cost of building the Connecticut and Louisiana, as shown by the records of the Bureau of Supplies and Accounts; also separate statements showing the expenditures on these vessels for repairs and alterations up to December 31, 1907. The expenditures under repairs and alterations include about $8,000, chargeable to the grounding of the Connecticut, for which there is no corresponding charge for the Louisiana. Aside from some drafting work in connection with the completion of plans, there have been no expenditures on either of these vessels since December 31, 1907.

In comparing the cost of building the Connecticut at the Navy-Yard, New York, with the cost of building the Louisiana by contract, only the first summations of the comparative statement should be considered—i. e., $4,562,093.57 for the Connecticut, as compared with $4,188,468.36 for the Louisiana. The last two items of this statement cover the cost of armor and permanent ordnance fittings which were supplied by the Government for both ships, and the cost of which does not, therefore, affect the comparison of cost of navy-yard work with the cost of contract work.

Very respectfully,

V. H. METCALF,
Secretary.

Hon. GEORGE EDMUND FOSS, M. C.,

Paymaster General, U. S. N.

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, April 4, 1908.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Mr. Chairman, I rise to advocate the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MAYNARD]. I have been told, personally, by the Secretary of the Navy that the difference in cost between the Con- necticut and Louisiana was less than 5 per cent, and that in the cost of the Connecticut he figured salaries, and so forth, which were not figured in the cost of the Louisiana.

Mr. FOSS. May I interrupt the gentleman?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Certainly.

Mr. FOSS. The letter from the Secretary of the Navy which has just been read states that the Connecticut cost $373,625 more.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Which is substantially 5 per cent.

Mr. PAYNE. Quite substantially.

Mr. FOSS. I wish to state that the contractor said in the construction of a collier——

Mr. BENNET of New York. I can not yield to the gentleman further.

Mr. FOSS. The percentage will be larger.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I have been shown in the navy-yard in Brooklyn, which is not in my district, and which as far as it exists is a detriment to me politically, a collier in course of construction which has been constructed the quickest of any collier ever built for the United States Navy. We need these fleet colliers and we need them quickly. I do not think there is any substantial difference in the cost, and whatever difference there is is made up by the more efficient ship.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Certainly.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Is it not a fact that eight hours prevail in the navy-yards and nine hours in the private yards?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Eight hours in the navy-yard and more outside—I do not know how much. When Admiral Evans, with his more than forty years of experience, came to select his flagship for this magnificent Pacific fleet he took the Connecticut of all that there were, because he said it was the most efficient battle ship in the United States Navy. [Applause.]

Mr. CALDER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Just a question.

Mr. CALDER. Does the gentleman know that Admiral Evans stated that the Connecticut was a 25 per cent better ship than the Louisiana?

Mr. BENNET of New York. If my colleague assures me so, I know that it is so.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Chairman, I should add to that that the Secretary of the Navy told me that Admiral Evans had said so to him.

Mr. BENNET of New York. All right. I can reiterate that it must be so.

Mr. FOSS. Does the gentleman from New York live near a navy-yard?

Mr. CALDER. Yes; there is one in my district.

Mr. FOSS. I thought so.

Mr. BENNET of New York. I decline to yield further. Further than that, when the Connecticut and the Louisiana were both authorized, the result was that the building of a ship in a United States yard brought about the quickest-built ship in the history of modern battle ship building. That is another score on the side of Government work. Another one is that we have got to have a regulator for these outside concerns, for they charge us any price they please if combined, and we have got to keep their figures down, and that is what we did with the Louisiana.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Certainly.

Mr. MADDEN. The gentleman stated a moment ago that the contractors who build ships by contract could charge anything they pleased, did he not?

Mr. BENNET of New York. Of course they can.

Mr. MADDEN. A few minutes before that he stated that the Government-built ships cost 5 per cent more than contract-built ships.

Mr. BENNET of New York. Yes.

Mr. MADDEN. Now, if a battle ship costs $10,000,000, how much is 5 per cent of the $10,000,000 that the Government pays more?

Mr. BENNET of New York. The gentleman can do his own figuring. But with the Government out of the race, these four or five shipbuilding concerns outside of the Government can get together and make their own figures.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him this one question?

Mr. BENNET of New York. I have only one minute, and I respectfully decline to yield. I think we can do better than that—when our plants get down to business. When they can take advantage of that, there will be few ships built in outside yards, and for these reasons I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia will be carried.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. MAYNARD. Mr. Chairman, the statement made by the gentleman from Illinois, the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, may be true. I have not made an investigation, and I am inclined, for the sake of the argument, to accept his statement that the Connecticut did cost 5 per cent more. But suppose his statement is true. Suppose the Connecticut did cost 5 per cent more. Where did that 5 per cent more go? It went to make the Connecticut a better ship and in better wages to the men who work in the Government yard. I do not believe any Member of this House believes that a ship built in an outside yard is as well built as it is in the navy-yards. In the case of a ship built by a private concern the work is hurried. It is cut and pared in every particular that it can be to make a saving, because after they make the competitive bids and get the ship they then have to get a profit out of the ship and do not put any more in than the Government compels them. The saving of 5 per cent is more than taken up in the things necessary to be done after the ship is turned over and in repair.

In a Government yard the conditions are different, and it is not wonderful to me that a ship is turned out like the Connecticut. The way it is done speaks well for the Government yards. They built the Connecticut, and the Louisiana cost 5 per cent less, it is claimed. Where does the money go? Into a better-built ship, a much cheaper ship in the long run. The mechanics and employees at the Government yards work eight hours a day. The difference in price is the extra hour taken from labor without just compensation. Now, this House has put itself on record more than once as being in favor of an eight-hour day for the employees of the Government. [Applause.] Here is a proposition that you are going to build two colliers. We have already divided the battle ships. We want to make the test, as we are now doing in battle ships, as to which is the most profitable to the Government in the building of colliers, Government work or contract. We all recognize that a great navy must have fleet colliers to carry the coal. Therefore we must continue to increase the collier fleet.

This House having gone on record in favor of an eight-hour day for the mechanics and employees of the Government yards, is it fair or honest to refuse to give them employment because a private yard saves 5 per cent by working nine hours? This is a proposition to build one of these ships in a Government yard, with an eight-hour day and only 5 per cent increase in cost, and a better ship as against the nine-hour day's work in the private yard. I do not believe that this House, after its previous record on the eight-hour bill, is now going to turn around and stultify itself by refusing to adopt this amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LOUD] of Government yards and the eight-hour day. [Loud applause.]

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I am about to move to close debate upon the paragraph and all amendments to it; but before doing so I desire to state here I have no interest so far as I am concerned personally in connection with the building of these ships. I do not represent a Government navy-yard or live in the vicinity of a Government navy-yard. I want this committee to understand that it means several hundred thousand dollars more to build a battle ship in a Government navy-yard than it will by private contract; and now I bow to the will of the committee, whichever way it may vote on this proposition.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to close debate on this paragraph and the amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to close debate on the paragraph and the amendments thereto.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Division!

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 156, noes 27.

So the motion to close debate was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan. Without objection, the Clerk will report the amendment and the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment and the amendment to the amendment were read.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment to the amendment, offered by the gentleman from Virginia.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Division!

The CHAIRMAN. Is a division called for?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I withdraw the demand for division.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I call for a division.

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 156, noes 43.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan, as amended by the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia.

The question was taken, and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

[Applause.]

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. LOUD. I ask leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. GOLDFOGLE. I ask the same privilege.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman object?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Has the request been put by the Chair?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LOUD] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will be forced to object to that.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MANN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 20471, the naval appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill indicated.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, pending that I move that the House do now take a recess until to-morrow morning at 11.30 o'clock.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. PAYNE the Speaker announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Division!

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 150, noes 75.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Without any desire to dispute the count, I ask for tellers.

Mr. PAYNE. I make the point of order that the demand for tellers is dilatory.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I now ask for the yeas and nays, and thank God in the same breath that the Chair can not rule that out of order. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. It is difficult to see, under the circumstances, why the gentleman should thank God for that.

The SPEAKER. When the gentleman plants himself on the Constitution, his rights are always respected. [Laughter.]

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 153, nays 105, answered "present" 9, not voting 120, as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, April 16, 1908.

[Continuation of the legislative day of Monday, April 6, 1908.]

The recess having expired, the House, at 11.30 a. m., was called to order by the Speaker.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the pending motion made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss], chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. WILLIAMS) there were—yeas 41, noes 30.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I ask for tellers.

Mr. PAYNE. I make the point of order that that is dilatory.

The SPEAKER. And the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Did the gentleman from New York state what his point of order was?

The SPEAKER. That the demand is dilatory.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did not hear him state it. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. PAYNE. Evidently, Mr. Speaker, no quorum is present, and to facilitate matters I make the point of no quorum.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I make the point, Mr. Speaker, that that is dilatory.

The SPEAKER. On the contrary, it is in the nature of expedition, and not dilatory. A quorum not being present, the Doorkeeper will close the door, the Sergeant-at-Arms will notify absent Members, and as many as are in favor of the motion will, as their names are called, answer "yea;" as many as are opposed will answer "nay;" those present and not voting will answer "present," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas 261, nays 2, answered "present" 12, not voting 112, as follows:

COLLECTION OF REVENUES.

Pending the announcement of the vote upon the question that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. PAYNE, from the Committee on Ways and means, reported back with an amendment the bill bill (H. R. 17506) to amend an act entitled "An act to simplify the laws in relation to the collection of revenues," approved June 10, 1890, as amended by an act entitled "An act to provide revenues for the Government and to encourage industries of the United States," approved July 24, 1897.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry, involving, possibly, a point of order. Under the rule under which we are now working, is it in order for the gentleman to present this report?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, we are working under the general rules of the House now.

The SPEAKER. That is true. We are working under the general rules of the House.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I beg the pardon of the Chair, but the last rule has expired by limitation, as I understand it, and prior to that we had three special rules. How do they affect this matter?

The SPEAKER. They do not affect the matter in the slightest degree.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I just wanted to know.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask the gentleman from New York a question. I did not recognize from the title of the bill just what this is.

Mr. PAYNE. This is the bill in reference to the Board of Appraisers, and is not the one the gentleman evidently has in mind.

The bill was read a first and second time, and, together with the accompanying report, was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered printed.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded. The doors were opened.

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 20471, the naval appropriation bill, with Mr. MANN in the chair.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make the point of order against the paragraph beginning in line 11, on page 76, and ending on line 13, page 77. My point of order is that this is new legislation and out of order on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois reserves the point of order——

Mr. MADDEN. I make the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois makes the point of order upon the paragraph last read. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] desire to be heard?

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I have nothing to say upon the point of order. This point of order has been made on previous naval appropriation bills and it has been held, I think, by the Chair as subject to the point of order, so I have nothing to say upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois concedes the point of order?

Mr. FOSS. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and the Clerk will read.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Does the decision of the Chair on the point of order take out of the bill all of that last paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. It takes out of the bill from line 11, page 76, to line 13, page 77, inclusive.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Then, Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer the following amendment and ask that the Chair apply it to the proper place in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey offers as a new paragraph the following amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That none of the amount herein appropriated for such construction shall be expended where any laborer or mechanic doing any part of the work contemplated by the contract, in the employ of the contractor or any subcontractor contracting for any part of said work contemplated, shall be required or permitted to work more than eight hours in any one calendar day upon such work except upon permission granted by the Secretary of the Navy during time of war or a time where war is imminent, or where any great national emergency exists: And provided further, That the contractor contracting with the United States shall, in the event of the violation of said covenant as to hours of labor, forfeit to the United States the sum of $5 for each laborer or mechanic for every calendar day for which he shall have been required or permitted to labor more than eight hours upon the work under such contract.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I ask the gentleman to reserve the point of order.

Mr. FOSS. I make the point of order that it is new legislation.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I ask the gentleman to reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New Jersey desire to be heard upon the point of order?

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Yes, sir. If the Chair pleases, that language is practically the same as the language passed upon in the Fifty-eighth Congress. It was then held that language such as that embodied in the amendment was a limitation on an appropriation and not subject to the point of order. The object of this amendment, as the Chair can see, is to put the ships to be built in the private yards on a par with the ship which yesterday was sent to the Government navy-yard. In other words, every ship that will be built, if this amendment prevails, will be built under the eight-hour day under conditions which will be fair to the laboring men of this country, and I sincerely trust, Mr. Chairman, that the point of order will not be sustained and the amendment will prevail. Now, a parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. What paragraph of the bill are we now considering?

The CHAIRMAN. The only paragraph we are considering is the paragraph which the gentleman from New Jersey offered as a separate paragraph.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask where the Clerk stopped reading.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk stopped reading last night at the end of line 13 on page 77. That paragraph has gone out on the point of order. The Chair is prepared to rule unless the gentleman desires to be heard. The gentleman from New Jersey offers an amendment as a separate paragraph in the bill beginning—

Provided, That none of the amount herein appropriated for such construction shall be expended where any laborer or mechanic doing any part of the work contemplated by the contract, in the employ of the contractor or subcontractor contracting for any part of said work contemplated, shall be required or permitted to work more than eight hours in any one calendar day upon such work except upon permission granted by the Secretary of the Navy during time of war or a time where war is imminent, or where any great national emergency exists: And provided further, That the contractor contracting with the United States shall, in the event of the violation of said covenant as to hours of labor, forfeit to the United States the sum of $5 for each laborer or mechanic for every calendar day for which he shall have been required or permitted to labor more than eight hours upon the work under such contract.

While the point possibly might be made as to the form of the amendment as a separate paragraph, that question has not been raised.

In form the amendment is somewhat, at least, in the form of a limitation upon the appropriation.

The Chair desires to state a word in reference to the matter of limitations upon appropriations. An amendment very similar to this was ruled in order, as the Chair remembers, two years ago, and ruled out of order one year ago by different chairmen. Under the rules of the House legislation upon an appropriation bill is not in order, but under the rules of the House, the House, having the power to make or refuse an appropriation, may make an appropriation with a limitation upon it. It was at one time construed, or the tendency was at one time to construe, any amendment offered in the form of a limitation as a mere limitation upon an appropriation. But the committee will readily see that if an amendment in the guise of a limitation be offered in such form that the Department must consider the appropriation futile or must consider that the limitation is itself a change of law, the executive officers would undoubtedly hold, should the limitation become law, that Congress had not intended a vain thing, but had meant to make a change of law. In other words, if in order to put the appropriation into effect the Executive Department must violate an existing law in order to comply with the limitation in the appropriation, then the executive officer has the right to presume that Congress by the limitation intended to change the existing legislation, did not intend to make an appropriation which could not be used, because in violation of the existing law. Now, no one will contend that the pending amendment does not change the existing law. If it be considered effective and binding upon the Department so that the pending amendment should be agreed to and become a law, the Department would either be required to consider that the appropriation was futile or that the law was changed by the limitation.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I wish to suggest to the Chair that we are supposed to be operating under an eight-hour law now, and that the only difficulty in the way is the opposition of the heads of the various Departments. Surely this House can say to the head of a Department that, an eight-hour law being now on the books, he shall conform to it. This is all the present amendment tries to do, to compel the Secretary of the Navy to build these ships under the law as it has been passed on in this House every time this House has had an opportunity to vote on the subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands, or thinks he does, the situation. Even though it should be a direction to the Secretary of the Navy to enforce the law, that of itself is legislation and subject to the point of order. It matters not what the existing law may be, unless this be an exact repetition of it in quotation, because any change in the law would be a change of existing law, and if this changes in any way the discretion which the Secretary of the Navy has, and he should consider that this limitation bound him to change his discretion, that would be a change of law and hence would be obnoxious to the rule. And the Chair feels bound, both as to the last precedent and as to the theory of the rule itself, to sustain the point of order. The Clerk will read.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I rise for the purpose of taking an appeal from the decision of the Chair upon that last decision.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi appeals from the decision of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 115, noes 82.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey and Mr. Foss were appointed as tellers.

The committee again divided, and the tellers reported—ayes 115, noes 92.

The CHAIRMAN. On this vote the ayes are 115 and the noes 92, so the decision of the Chair stands as the judgment of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to contract for eight submarine torpedo boats, in an amount not exceeding in the aggregate $3,500,000, and the sum of $1,000,000 is hereby appropriated toward said purpose, and to remain available until expended: Provided, That all such boats shall be of the same type heretofore determined to be superior as the result of the competitive tests held under the provisions of the naval appropriation acts approved June 29, 1906, and March 2, 1907, unless on or before October 1, 1908, a submarine torpedo boat of a different type and of full size for naval warfare shall have been constructed and submitted to the Navy Department for like trial and by such like trial by said Department demonstrated to be not inferior to the best submarine torpedo boat in the competition above referred to.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I make the point of order against the whole proviso; it is new legislation and not appropriate in connection with this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut makes the point of order against the proviso just read.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I refer the House to the decision just made by the Chair, and in which he has been sustained, that this is all in violation of the rules of the House, and is new legislation, and should be stricken out. And if any further argument is needed I would ask that the decision of the Chair on the previous question be read.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, I would ask the gentleman from Connecticut to point out wherein the proviso mentioned limits the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy. The crux of the decision of the Chair just rendered was that the amendment would limit the discretion which now exists in the Secretary of the Navy. There is no discretion, as I understand it, in existing law reposed in the Secretary of the Navy in regard to contracts for submarine boats. Therefore, if this proviso stands we are not limiting or controlling any discretion which the Secretary of the Navy now has. I submit, Mr. Chairman, upon that ground this is purely a proviso limiting the expenditure of this money, and not controlling the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy; and therefore it is not subject to the point of order. If the Chair will read, he will see that the proviso is aimed purely at the expenditure of the money, for what purpose, and how, and under what conditions it can be expended; and there surely is no discretion now existing in the Secretary of the Navy with regard to the expenditure of money not yet appropriated.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. If I had my way, I would strike out the whole section; but I can not have my way. If I can not have my way in full, I would amend the remaining part of the section by putting in a clause allowing the Secretary of the Navy to do whatever he saw fit in regard to it. This is, Mr. Chairman, a change of existing law. There is no law providing for the construction of submarine boats. There was an appropriation last year which was limited to competitive tests. If that was law last year, it only operated on the appropriation bill last year. It now goes forward and says he shall buy the products of certain parties, a certain kind of a boat, and it is in violation of any existing law. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am perfectly willing to leave it to the judgment of the Chair, under the decision he has just made, which, it seems to me, absolutely covers this provision.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word or two on the point of order. I do not believe this proviso is subject to the point of order. The gentleman from Connecticut seems to labor under the impression that it is necessary that there be a law authorizing the construction of a war boat before an appropriation can be made. It is well settled by numerous decisions that in relation to appropriations to increase the Navy it is not necessary that the law authorize the construction of boats prior to an appropriation. They may be authorized by an appropriation. Now, take this paragraph, which carries the appropriation for certain submarine boats. It simply defines the kind of boats; that is all. The Committee on Naval Affairs may report an appropriation for any kind of a boat and require it to stand any kind of a test. That is all that the pending paragraph undertakes to do. It defines and describes a certain kind of boat that shall be secured by the money under the appropriation. That is not a limitation. It provides an appropriation for the purchase of a particular kind of boat that shall come up to a particular standard. That can be done without any law. It can be done even if there were a law creating a mode of testing submarines.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. The point of order is made only against the proviso. If it is in order to appropriate for the purchase of submarine boats, it is plainly in order to describe the boats which shall be purchased. In other words, if the House or Congress can provide under the rules that eight submarine torpedo boats can be purchased or contracted for, they can describe the character of the boats. It is not a matter involving the discretion of the Department; it is purely a matter of description, stating what the kind of boats shall be under the appropriation. The Chair does not think it comes within the decision just made. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the whole paragraph, proviso and all, on the same ground, that it is new legislation.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. I think it comes too late.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Oh, no.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, the point of order against the whole paragraph is made after the paragraph has been discussed, and it is too late.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Georgia point out where the paragraph has been discussed?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. It was discussed on the point of order.

Mr. ROBERTS. I make a point of order against the point of order of the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I submit that the point of order that the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] now makes against the entire paragraph comes too late, since he has made the point of order against a proviso in the paragraph, and that point of order has been discussed.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Let me suggest that the point of order was made to the proviso alone. Now, can a Member, tentatively and experimentally, select a particular portion of a paragraph and insist that it is subject to a point of order, and eliminate a portion if he can, leaving the balance to stand; and, failing in that, can he afterwards, after that question has been discussed and decided against him, make his point of order against other portions of the paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. Of course, the usual rule is that the point of order can be made against a paragraph at any time before amendment or debate upon the paragraph. There has been no amendment or debate upon this amendment as yet.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I suggest to the Chair that the gentleman from Connecticut was called to order by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBERTS] for not discussing the point of order.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the proviso is a part of the paragraph——

Mr. ROBERTS. Will the gentleman permit me?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. No; I am discussing the point of order; I am trying to help the Chair.

Mr. ROBERTS. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] discussed this paragraph.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I do not yield to the gentleman. The gentleman can take his own time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] is endeavoring to enlighten the Chair.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. The proviso is a part of the paragraph, and the merits of the proviso have clearly been discussed by the gentleman from Connecticut.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair failed to hear the gentleman from Connecticut discuss the merits of the proposition.

Mr. ROBERTS. I raised the point of order that he was discussing the merits of the paragraph, and not his point of order, and the gentleman then ceased discussing the merits of it.

The CHAIRMAN. He was discussing the point of order, as the Chair understands.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I submit that the gentleman from Connecticut discussed the merits of the proviso, the proviso being a part of the paragraph. He has therefore discussed the paragraph. Now, he goes back and undertakes to strike out the paragraph, after he has in effect and in fact discussed the paragraph. I do not discuss the merits of the paragraph, but only the parliamentary status.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the Chair will indulge me, I believe there was only one proposition before the House, and only one proposition that was considered, and that was the point of order to the proviso. No other proposition could have been entertained by the Chair during the discussion of the point of order. When that was ruled upon by the Chair it was in parliamentary order for any person, the gentleman from Connecticut or anyone else, to raise a point of order to the entire paragraph; and I contend it is not too late, no discussion having been made on the merits of the paragraph, to make a point of order to the entire paragraph.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, on the point of order, then, if I may be heard——

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Minnesota rise?

Mr. TAWNEY. For the purpose of discussing the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts has the floor for that purpose.

Mr. ROBERTS. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota for that purpose. Will the Chair kindly state the point of order that has been made?

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is made against the entire paragraph.

Mr. ROBERTS. On what ground?

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman desires the gentleman from Connecticut to state that, he has the right to have him state it.

Mr. ROBERTS. I want to find out the grounds for this point of order, in order that I may discuss the merits of it.

The CHAIRMAN. That question is not before the House or before the Chair.

Mr. ROBERTS. I want to know the ground of the point of order; there must be some reason why it is subject to the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is whether the gentleman from Connecticut has a right to make the point of order at all.

Mr. ROBERTS. I supposed that was all settled. I await the Chair's decision upon that.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, the question, as I understand, now before the Chair is whether or not the point of order against the paragraph comes too late; the gentleman from Connecticut having previously made a point of order to a part of the paragraph, whether or not he is not now estopped from making a point of order against the entire paragraph. Now, the point of order which he made having been overruled, in my judgment, it can be reasonably concluded that the balance of the paragraph was assumed not to be subject to a point of order, and when the Chair had ruled against the gentleman, he thereby virtually exhausted his rights under the rule against the entire paragraph.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Why, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Minnesota can not claim for a moment that because a point of order is made against one portion of a paragraph, a Member of the House can thereby estop every other Member from making a point of order against the remainder of the paragraph.

Mr. TAWNEY. I will say that when a paragraph is read, the practice of the House has been to make the point of order, or reserve the point of order, either against the whole paragraph or against the part which the Member making the point desires to have taken out.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I would like to ask the gentleman from Minnesota if he claims that one Member can estop all other Members of the House from making other points of order against the paragraph?

Mr. TAWNEY. No. The fact is, however, that when a Member wants to make a point of order against a paragraph and another against a part of the paragraph, the rule and practice has been heretofore that points of order against the paragraph must all be made before the discussion of any one of them.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, the most interest I have in this is for a correct ruling and correct parliamentary procedure. Now, if a Member of the House desires to make a point of order upon one portion of the paragraph and half a dozen other Members wish to make points of order on several different propositions, they can not all get the floor at the same time; and any point of order is in order at any time, if it comes before the paragraph has been considered. That has been the ruling heretofore. This paragraph has not been considered. A point of order simply was made as to a portion of it. The gentleman from Connecticut could not foreclose the rest of us by getting the attention of the Chair and making his point of order. It is true that on several occasions gentlemen have reserved points of order to different parts of a paragraph, but there is no rule of procedure under which that can be done except under the supposition of unanimous consent and because the Chair could not recognize more than one gentleman at a time. A gentleman when making a point of order has the right to have it decided before any other business is done. It seems to me to follow that the gentleman from Connecticut or any other gentleman can raise the point of order as to the balance of the paragraph after the decision has been made by the Chair. Any other rule of procedure would result, perhaps, in injustice, or at least in confusion. This is the proper parliamentary practice, to conduct business according to the rules of the House and without confusion. [Applause.]

Mr. ROBERTS. Along that very line, Mr. Chairman, I made a point of order against the gentleman from Connecticut that he was not discussing the point of order, but was discussing the merits of the paragraph itself. The Chair, I understand, stated that he did not hear the gentleman from Connecticut. I will ask the Chair to call for the reporter's notes, which will prove my assertion that he was discussing the merits of the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. Under the common practice when a Member reserves points of order on the paragraph, any Member may afterwards avail himself of the privilege of making a point of order on any portion of the paragraph or the paragraph. It is plainly the right of any member of the committee to make a point of order against the entire paragraph, or any portion of the paragraph, and it is not within the power of one member of the committee, who happens to obtain recognition first, to make a point of order against a portion of the paragraph and prevent another member from making a point of order against the entire paragraph. Whatever discussion the gentleman from Connecticut may have indulged in on the merits of the proposition would make no difference, because, at least theoretically, he was addressing himself to the Chair on the point of order.

The Chair regrets he did not obtain all the light possible by hearing all that the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. HILL] said. The Chair thinks that the point of order of the gentleman is in time, as no amendment or debate or consideration had been had on the merits of the paragraph itself.

Mr. ROBERTS. Does the Chair desire any arguments on the merits of the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be glad to hear the gentleman. The Chair will be glad to have the gentleman from Connecticut first state what his point of order is.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, the point of order is that there is no existing law for the purchase of these boats, and that this is entirely new legislation.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the committee is now working under a section of the bill headed "increase of the Navy," and to call the attention of the Chair to the further fact that it has been repeatedly held in order to move under that section for the provision of any sort of a craft which may be called a part of the Navy. Nobody for a moment will contend that a submarine boat is not a part of a navy, and being a part of the Navy, and the committee considering the increase of the Navy, it is clearly in order to move for the purchase or building of submarine boats, as much as it is for the purchase or building of battle ships or destroyers or any other form of vessel which is properly a part of the Navy. For that reason I think the point of order of the gentleman from Connecticut is not well taken and should be overruled.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Connecticut moved to strike out the proviso that he seeks to eliminate by a point of order, I would most cheerfully vote with him, but I do not see that there can be any point of order raised against this paragraph, unless we reverse the precedents of the House of Representatives that have existed since 1886, at which time, I think, the gentleman from Kentucky, now the senior Senator from that State, first moved to build a battle ship on an appropriation bill, the Chair sustaining the point of order that it was new legislation, and the House overruling the Chair and authorizing the building of the battle ship on that appropriation bill. I can not see that there is any difference in point of fact between building a battle ship whether it weigh 20,000 tons, or a submarine battle ship that may weigh 500 tons. It is a battle ship of one nature or another, and these submarines are just as much battle ships that come with the acceptance of Rule XXI as the battle ships that we provided for yesterday, which are to weigh 20,000 tons.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. They are vessels of war.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. War vessels.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, I understand the point of order to be that there is no existing law for the construction of these submarines, and that therefore it is out of order under the rule. I desire to call the attention of the Chair to a ruling in the Forty-ninth Congress at the second session, and I can not find that that ruling has ever been changed since, which holds that the construction of a new vessel for the Navy is the continuation of a public work already in progress. As has been said heretofore, it does not seem it can make any difference what the character of the vessel is, if it be for an increase in the Navy, it is a continuation of a work in progress. Congress has begun upon the work of constructing a Navy for the United States, and these submarine vessels are a part of that work, and therefore it seems to me that it is a continuation of work already in progress and the point of order is not well taken.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. Contrary to all of the other decisions, as the Chair believes, wholly contrary to the general spirit of the decisions on the question of legislation and limitation upon an appropriation bill, it has been ruled, and is the ruling of the House and of the Committee of the Whole, that an appropriation for an increase in the Navy, or certain increases in the Navy, is in order. That ruling was made, as the Chair believes, upon some form of fighting ship. It has been ruled that the proposition for a dry dock was not in order unless authorized by law. The same character of ruling has been made in reference to other vessels in other services, as, for instance, in the Light-House Service as to light-house tenders. There being no question as to admitting an item for a new battle ship, and there being no question as to the absence of authority to insert an item for a dry dock, the Chair is called upon to rule as to submarine boats. The Chair thinks, reasoning along the line of the battle ships or the other fighting ships of the Navy, and taking into account that there are submarine boats in the Navy, it not being a new proposition for an increase of a different kind in the Navy, that it is in order to insert an item for submarine boats. But this item contains an addition to the authorization, and in addition to the appropriation this provision among others, which may also be subject to points of order, "and to remain available until expended." That is legislation which under the rules would change existing law, requiring that these surplus funds be covered into the Treasury at the end of a certain length of time. The Chair, as the paragraph now stands, is constrained to sustain the point of order.

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, to be inserted after line 10, page 76.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert as a new section after line 10, page 76:

"For eight submarine torpedo boats, in an amount not exceeding in the aggregate $3,500,000, and the sum of $1,000,000 is hereby appropriated toward said purpose: Provided, That all such boats shall be of the same type heretofore determined to be superior as the result of the competitive tests held under the provisions of the naval appropriation acts approved June 29, 1906, and March 2, 1907, unless on or before October 1, 1908, a submarine torpedo boat of a different type and of full size for naval warfare shall have been constructed and submitted to the Navy Department for like trial and by such like trial by said Department demonstrated to be not inferior to the best submarine torpedo boat in the competition above referred to."

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the same grounds as before.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut will state his point of order.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I not only state it on the ground of new legislation, but I call the attention of the Chair to another feature of this amendment, and that is that the language of the original section as stricken out and now continued in this amendment was not a limitation upon an appropriation, but was a peremptory order to the Secretary of the Navy, making it absolutely new legislation that the Secretary of the Navy shall do so and so; that it takes away the ordinary discretion which he has, and is not a limitation upon an appropriation bill in any sense whatever, but absolutely new law from start to finish.

The CHAIRMAN. But the gentleman from Connecticut will pardon the Chair. As the Chair understood the amendment, that portion that was in the paragraph is not in the amendment.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. I thought I heard it read in that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Connecticut refer to this?

That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to contract——

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. No; I refer to the language of the proviso which is in the amendment offered. For that reason I claim the amendment is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The proviso is exactly the same.

Mr. HILL of Connecticut. For that reason I claim the whole amendment is out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair ruled a while ago the proviso was in order.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer a substitute for the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado offers an amendment by way of a substitute for the amendment, which the Clerk will report. The Chair will overrule the point of order. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to contract for or purchase eight subsurface or submarine torpedo boats, in an amount not exceeding in the aggregate $3,500,000, and the sum of $1,000,000 is hereby appropriated toward said purpose: Provided, That prior to said purchase or contract for said boats the Secretary of the Navy shall determine the comparative efficiency of the different boats for which bids may be submitted, according to such tests as he shall see fit to prescribe: And provided further, That before any subsurface or submarine boat is purchased or contracted for it shall be accepted by the Navy Department as fulfilling all reasonable requirements for submarine warfare and shall have been fully tested to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order to the proviso in the substitute offered by the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. BONYNGE. What is the point of order the gentleman makes?

Mr. STAFFORD. The point of order is that it is new legislation carried on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Colorado desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. BONYNGE. Yes, sir. Mr. Chairman, the proviso simply is limiting the use of the money that is appropriated. There is $1,000,000 appropriated, according to the amendment, for the purchase or construction of the vessels, providing that before he makes the purchase or the contract he shall require that these vessels shall be submitted to certain tests, which is nothing but a limitation as to the manner in which he shall make use of the money that is appropriated.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado goes much beyond that. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado is, in fact, the language that was used in the appropriation of 1907 and relates not only to submarine boats, but to subsurface boats. It limits the discretion of the Secretary with regard to submarine boats and is out of order for that reason alone, because it gives him power under the guise of law where none now exists to purchase a boat not a submarine boat. That is a radical defect in the gentleman's amendment, and it is new legislation. The Secretary has no power now, under the submarine appropriations, to purchase a subsurface boat. This amendment, if it becomes a law, gives the Secretary the power, under the submarine appropriation, to purchase an entirely different kind of boat. Therefore it is new legislation and clearly subject to the point of order.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, in answer to what the gentleman has stated, I think the ruling of the Chair that was made a few moments ago covers that objection, that an authorization for a subsurface or a submarine boat is simply continuation of a work already in progress; namely, the construction of the Navy for the United States.

Mr. ROBERTS. If the gentleman will pardon me, will the gentleman point out a subsurface boat owned by the Government now or ever authorized by existing law or ever purchased? Will he point out a subsurface boat in existence now?

Mr. BONYNGE. I will point simply to the fact that we are building a navy, and a subsurface or a submarine boat is a portion of the Navy, and is therefore a continuation of a work in progress.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. The proviso in the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. OLCOTT], which is the same as the proviso printed in the bill, is:

That all such boats shall be of the same type heretofore determined to be superior as the result of the competitive tests held under the provisions of the naval appropriation acts approved June 29, 1906, and March 2, 1907, unless on or before October 1, 1908, a submarine torpedo boat of a different type and of full size for naval warfare shall have been constructed and submitted to the Navy Department for like trial and by such like trial by said Department demonstrated to be not inferior to the best submarine torpedo boat in the competition above referred to.

The Chair overruled the point of order made against this proviso. When the Chair overruled the point of order, although the Chair had read the proviso several times, the Chair was of the opinion at the time that the proviso referred to tests which has heretofore been authorized. But it seems that the proviso which has been ruled in order contains the provision:

Unless on or before October 1, 1908, a submarine torpedo boat of a different type and of full size for naval warfare shall have been constructed—

And so forth.

The Chair is inclined to think that the Chair made an error in ruling that portion of the original proviso in order, because that of itself is legislation. There can be no question that the amendment offered by way of substitute is legislation. But, being offered as an amendment to an amendment already ruled in order, covering the same question, the Chair feels constrained to hold the amendment offered by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BONYNGE] to be in order.

Mr. BONYNGE. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a few words in support of the amendment that I have offered. The section of the bill now under consideration, and first reported by the Committee on Naval Affairs——

Mr. HOBSON. May that be read over again?

Mr. BONYNGE. I have no objection. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] asks that the substitute be read again.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, I move an amendment to the amendment, by striking out the word "subsurface" wherever it appears in the amendment of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BONYNGE].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBERTS] offers an amendment to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Colorado which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out wherever it occurs in the amendment the words "or subsurface."

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection, so far as I am concerned, to striking it out and let it remain as reading "eight submarine boats."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Colorado.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BONYNGE. Now, Mr. Chairman, the section of the bill as reported by the Naval Committee provides for the authorization and direction to the Secretary of the Navy for eight submarine torpedo boats, in an amount not exceeding three and one-half millions of dollars, and appropriates at this time the sum of $1,000,000 for the purchase of such boats. It provides further that these boats shall be of the type which has been determined to be superior as the result of the competitive tests held under the provision of the naval appropriation bills of 1906 and 1907, and which type is known to be the "Holland boat," or the boat constructed by the Electric Boat Company, unless prior to October 1 of this year another boat of full size and of a different type shall have been constructed and submitted to the Navy Department.

The practical effect of the language in the section I have referred to is this, and its construction must be that only one type of boat can possibly be purchased under that provision. It forbids any further competition or the possibility of the Government availing itself of any improvement that may take place in the construction of submarine boats during the time that these boats are to be constructed. Now, under the language of this section not more than two or three submarine boats can be constructed this next year, because only $1,000,000 is now appropriated for the purchase of submarine boats, and, as I understand, it will take all of the $1,000,000 to buy two or three submarines. Consequently no additional boats can be constructed until Congress shall make additional appropriation in excess of the $1,000,000. So that if the language remains as reported by the committee, the Secretary of the Navy is compelled—"directed" is the language of the bill—to enter into a contract for the construction of eight, while not more than two or three can be completed within the next year, and the balance must wait until Congress makes an additional appropriation. Therefore if in the meantime, until Congress makes additional appropriation, some American genius shall find a better boat than that which the Government now has, the Government will be deprived of taking advantage of the inventive genius of that American.

Mr. Chairman, it may seem strange to the members of the committee that out in the arid regions, out in the mountain section of the country, an American genius should have developed or have produced a submarine which, according to experts who have seen the model, is far superior to either the Holland or the Lake torpedo boat. Someone who is skeptical may ask whether it is possible that any good can come out of Nazareth; and if he does, I reply to him, in the language of Phillip: "Come and see." They have had a model here in Washington for several weeks, and if you will take the trouble to go down to the naval basin, you will see the model there which is capable of performing not only all of the maneuvers of the Holland and Lake boats, but other additional maneuvers. It is a boat constructed and known as the "Cage dirigible submarine boat," and is operated on the even-keel basis. It can descend vertically, it can be held in the water any distance you desire to hold it, can rise in a vertical position, or it can dive. It is operated by electricity and has less machinery than any other boat that has been constructed, or will be, if the boat is constructed in accordance with the model that is now on exhibition.

It is a well-known fact that the question of submarine boats and the development of submarine boats is still in its infancy. I do not profess to be an expert on questions of this kind, and all that I am pleading for here is that Congress shall by legislation enable the United States Government, through the Secretary of the Navy, to avail itself of whether American genius may be able to produce in advance of what has heretofore been produced. I submit to gentlemen of the committee that this House is not ready to say now that we have reached the climax in the development of submarine boats, and we ought, all of us, to see that we shall not deprive the Government of the United States for the next year of the possibility of taking advantage of any new boats that may be developed. [Applause.]

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Colorado criticises the language of the appropriation bill which has been submitted this year by the Committee on Naval Affairs. I want to say to the gentleman from Colorado, and to the members of this committee, that in the prior appropriation bills the language presented by the committee has been subject to criticism, and it has been maintained that that language was designed to cut out competition. This year we had a guide for the language to be adopted in the naval bill, and the committee thought by following that guide they would at least escape any criticism on the line that they were cutting out competition. Now, what was the guide that the committee had this year? If anyone will look at the report of the Secretary of the Navy for the year 1907, they will find that he says:

He wants four submarines—

Now, mark this—

of the same type as those recommended as the result of the recent competitive test, provided a more satisfactory type is not developed in the meantime.

That is the recommendation that the Secretary of the Navy gives as a guide to the committee in shaping and framing this legislation for submarine boats. Now, what has the committee done?

Mr. LANDIS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. ROBERTS. Certainly.

Mr. LANDIS. I would like to ask you how you interpret the word "meantime?"

Mr. ROBERTS. I am coming to that if the committee will give me time enough. How to interpret "meantime?" I will say that "meantime" has been interpreted by good lawyers on this floor to mean the date this appropriation becomes available, and the Secretary of the Navy has given that same interpretation; and the committee in interpreting "meantime" as October 1 give three months more time for competition than the Secretary himself recommended.

Mr. LANDIS. If it is to the advantage of the Government to interpret it more liberally, then why not interpret it more liberally? Why confine ourselves to the technical construction?

Mr. ROBERTS. But it is the design of Congress that we shall go on building submarine boats. If I can have a little time from this committee, I will show why I believe it is our intention and why I know it is our duty to build submarine boats.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts allow one question?

Mr. ROBERTS. If the committee will give me time, I will answer all questions.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman is on the committee, I believe?

Mr. ROBERTS. I am.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Does this bill anywhere limit the time in which the battle ships appropriated for shall be completed?

Mr. ROBERTS. Oh, the contracts that are entered into by the Navy Department with the shipbuilding firms fix the time within which they shall be built.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Does this bill limit the time?

Mr. ROBERTS. No; not at all. This bill fixes the time within which contracts for submarines shall be made. That is all. It does not limit the time within which the boats shall be built. It fixes the time within which the Secretary can make the contract, and that alone.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. It limits absolutely the type of boat.

Mr. ROBERTS. Oh, if the committee will only give me time, I will show the gentleman his error, and I will show it, not by my statements, but by the statements of the Secretary of the Navy himself. Now, compare this language I have just read with the language in the appropriation bill.

The Secretary of the Navy was asked that very question. He was asked by Mr. HOWARD before a committee of this House:

Is not the only substantial difference in the Naval Committee's suggestion of the provisions and your own recommendations that the words "on or before October 1, 1908," are used instead of "in the meantime?"

The Secretary said:

Practically the same.

It was the intention of the Committee on Naval Affairs to use language practically carrying the same idea as recommended by the Secretary of the Navy. Now, why was that done? That was done to prevent the bringing up to the Navy Department of plans and of models up in the model tank and retarding the progress of the Navy in building up its weakest arm of defense.

Mr. BONYNGE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ROBERTS. I will.

Mr. BONYNGE. How many boats can you build for the million dollars appropriated in this bill?

[The time of Mr. ROBERTS having expired, by unanimous consent it was extended five minutes.]

Mr. ROBERTS. If the gentleman will specify the type of boat——

Mr. BONYNGE. Of the Holland type of boat.

Mr. ROBERTS. There might be four or five, there might be two, and there is a possibility of only one.

Mr. BONYNGE. Now, the provision is that the Secretary must let the contract for the eight according to the Holland type unless before the 1st of October another boat fully constructed is presented. Is not that the fact?

Mr. ROBERTS. Yes.

Mr. BONYNGE. So you are going to have the Secretary of the Navy now contract for all, although you are only appropriating for enough to build one, and cut off the possibility of having others built.

Mr. ROBERTS. The gentleman is not familiar with the way we appropriate for the increase of the Navy. We have not appropriated a dollar for the two battle ships we authorized yesterday, and we will not——

Mr. BONYNGE. Is not that all left to the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy?

Mr. ROBERTS. Not at all. He makes his contracts for the two battle ships, and then in subsequent appropriation bills we appropriate the money to pay for them.

Mr. BONYNGE. But you know exactly the kind of battle ship you want?

Mr. ROBERTS. No; we do not know.

Mr. BONYNGE. Haven't you fixed the size of the boat?

Mr. ROBERTS. Oh, we have made some limitations on it, but we do not know that we are going to get that kind of boat, let me say to the gentleman.

Mr. BONYNGE. Did not the Secretary of the Navy, before the committee, say that he believed that this whole question should be left to his discretion?

Mr. ROBERTS. He did make that statement, but how are you going to reconcile that with his recommendation to Congress, in an official message, in which he puts the limitations to the battle ships, scout cruisers, torpedo boats, and submarines?

Mr. BONYNGE. I do not know of any statement of his contrary to this.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ROBERTS. I will yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. If you leave to the Secretary of the Navy a discretion in the matter of designing battle ships, why should we not give him the same discretion as to submarines?

Mr. ROBERTS. We do not give him the discretion as to the design of battle ships.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Then I do not understand the language.

Mr. ROBERTS. Because the gentleman does not understand the situation, he does not read the language of the bill. We do not leave the battle ships to his discretion. Let me read you what the bills says:

For the purpose of further increasing the naval establishment of the United States, the President is hereby authorized to have constructed, by contract or in navy-yards, as hereinafter provided, two first-class battle ships, to cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not exceeding $6,000,000 each—

Now mark this and see if he has full discretion—

similar in all essential characteristics with the battle ship authorized by the act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908.

Why did we do that? Because, Mr. Chairman, the Secretary in his recommendation to Congress says he wants four battle ships. Did he ask for full discretion? No. He says, "of the same type as the Delaware class," limiting his discretion to that kind, and it makes no matter what the progress is in the development of battle ships, you have fixed the kind of battle ship he is to build.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBERTS. I will yield to the gentleman if I can have my time extended.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I want to know if the gentleman construes the language in the bill as cutting off the right of the Secretary of the Navy to entertain a proposition to furnish a submarine by the constitutents of the gentleman from Colorado?

Mr. ROBERTS. It cuts him off in this way——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Does the gentleman think that that is right?

Mr. ROBERTS. I do in this respect: If the company in Colorado has completed a submarine boat that they can present for test and trial and show whether or not it is equal to what we already have, then they can come in under this bill.

Mr. BONYNGE. Does not the gentleman know that it is a physical impossibility to construct such a boat before the 1st of next October?

Mr. ROBERTS. I do not know what the gentleman's company can do. I do not know but they may have Pikes Peak covered with them. [Laughter.] If they only have paper plans and a few scratches on paper, if they have only a model which runs in a model tank, we do not propose to let them come in and, by specious claims as to what they can do, hold up the further addition of submarines to our Navy. There will be other provisions for submarines. There are bound to be from year to year, and whenever they are in a condition to present a complete boat their competition will be welcomed by the Committee on Naval Affairs, by Congress, and by the Navy Department.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. But if the gentleman's company in Colorado constructs a perfect model that operates and does all that the other boats do——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachussetts has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts have ten minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Massachusetts be extended ten minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am trying to get some information on this subject. The gentleman from Colorado says that the plans of this company is a perfect machine, that they have a perfected machine down here somewhere; that it does all the tricks and stunts that the Holland boat does; that it goes up and goes down, and flies and floats and shoots [laughter], and that it is a better boat than the other, and yet you cut that style of vessels out under this language.

Mr. ROBERTS. If the gentleman from Tennessee knows what the model tank is in the navy-yards he can imagine how great a boat the Denver boat is.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. What do you have the model tank for?

Mr. ROBERTS. To get certain data about the draft and amount of power, and so forth. Let me say to the gentleman that you can not find out from the operation of a model of a submarine what a boat of efficient workable size will do. You can not get the same data and information from a model of a submarine in a tank that you can get of surface boats. That is not disputed anywhere.

Mr. LANDIS. And yet the gentleman knows that we had faith enough in the Monitor to order a construction of that boat.

Mr. ROBERTS. We did not order a construction of it. The Monitor was built by private enterprise and was owned by individuals when it made its great fight. The Government never paid a cent to help out that great naval invention.

Mr. LANDIS. The Monitor was ordered by the President of the United States, and the loss was guaranteed in case it was a failure.

Mr. ROBERTS. Well, but it was not paid for, and it was not paid for for years afterwards, as the gentleman well knows, and he knows that the inventor and the builder of that boat got no encouragement from the Government. The only people who have got any encouragement out of the Government, so far as matters of naval development are concerned, and particularly submarines, are the Lake people, whose boat was discredited in the trial last spring. Why, Mr. Chairman, the Board of Inspection and Survey made a report to the Secretary of the Navy that the Lake type of boat was radically defective in principle, in type, not in minor details, and yet, notwithstanding that, that company came up and got a contract from the Secretary of the Navy of $450,000 for one of these discredited types of boats, and in that contract the Secretary of the Navy encourages that company to the extent of $25,000, interest on the money they are going to put into that boat to build it.

Mr. LANDIS. And the only people that got any encouragement from the Naval Committee, apparently, on the construction of submarines were the Holland people.

Mr. ROBERTS. No, indeed. There is where the gentleman from Indiana is following the lead of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. LILLEY]. Why, Mr. Chairman, this whole subject has been open to competition. Let me read you something——

Mr. LILLEY rose.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBERTS. I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. ROBERTS. Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS] says only one company has got favors from the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. LANDIS. I said that only one company seemed to be encouraged——

Mr. ROBERTS. Will the gentleman read the language of the appropriation bill? Now, with regard to that, let me read something for the information of the gentleman from Indiana. Here is a letter dated December 3, 1904, which is to be found in Document No. 75 of the Committee on Naval Affairs. That letter is signed by Simon Lake. He had been complaining that he did not get fair treatment anywhere. He says:

> I want a fair, open, actual competition under the 1905 submarine act, which will decide the superiority, etc., without the opinions and paper comparisons of this member of the Board.

Later he says:

> An attempt has been made to studiously misinform and prejudice you against me, and I have taken our Mr. Whitney's advice and kept silent under the idea that direct competition would protect me from insidious influences.

He says again:

> If you will put us in direct side-by-side competition with the Government submarine, as Congress intended, we will then accept the facts found in said competition as final.

Mark that! If he can once get in competition with the Holland boat, which was owned by the Government, he will accept the results as final. Now, he says again:

> Congress and all honorable officers of the Army and Navy want the United States to have the best protection possible by submarines of the best type and highest development, and there is just one way to get that result—by the Holland and Lake types side by side under the hardest conditions, in all kinds of seas and weather.

That was the appeal of Simon Lake to the Secretary of the Navy. What happened? In 1906 and 1907 we incorporated in the appropriation bill language which compelled these competitive tests, and these tests were held last May, and Simon Lake produced a boat, and the Electric Boat Company produced a Holland type of boat. They went into competition side by side for thirty days, and as a result of that competition the Board of Inspection and Survey, headed by Captain Marix, reported unanimously to the Board of Construction of the Navy Department, headed by Admiral Converse, that the Holland type of boat was the superior boat, and the Board of Construction reported unanimously to the Secretary of the Navy that the Holland type of boat was the successful boat, and recommended that he award a contract for eight boats to the Electric Boat Company for the Holland type of boats; and then the question was raised as to the value of the type. Mr. Lake had said immediately after his crushing defeat in those trials that it was no fault of the type of his boat at all, it was little minor details that could be rectified easily. Now, with that statement made to the Secretary of the Navy, he sends for specific information to the Board of Inspection and Survey, and he asks specific questions, and they reply:

> 1. That the type of submarine boat as represented by the Lake is, in the opinion of the Board, inferior to the type as represented by the Octopus.
> 2. The closed superstructure of the Lake, with the large flat deck, which is fitted to carry water ballast, and to contain fuel tanks and air flasks, which is an essential feature of the Lake boat presented to us for trial, is inferior to the arrangements on board the Octopus for the same purposes, and also is, in the opinion of the Board, detrimental to the proper control of the boat.
> 3. The hydroplanes, also an essential feature of the Lake boat presented to us for trial, were incapable of submerging the boat on an even keel. They are therefore regarded as an objectionable encumbrance.

They reply that the type, the fundamental principle of the Lake boat, is defective and faulty and dangerous. Now, those are the facts.

Mr. O'CONNELL. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROBERTS. No. And yet the gentleman says that the Committee on Naval Affairs, through its legislation, has not provided for competition. Why, here is the defeated man coming up now, whining that he has not had fair play——

Mr. BONYNGE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LANDIS rose.

Mr. ROBERTS. When he wrote to the Department that he would abide the results of the test as final.

Mr. LANDIS. Will the gentleman answer a question?

Mr. ROBERTS. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BONYNGE].

Mr. BONYNGE. The gentleman from Massachusetts has just——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado is out of order. The gentleman should first address the Chair when seeking recognition.

Mr. ROBERTS. I yield to the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. BONYNGE. The gentleman from Massachusetts has just stated that the defeated party is coming up here whining. Does the gentleman mean to say that the Naval Committee or any board of it or any experts have examined the model of the Denver boat?

Mr. ROBERTS. Oh, I do not know what the Denver people have to do with my statement that the Lake people are whining——

Mr. BONYNGE. The amendment now pending is not to let in the Lake people alone, but it is to let in any other boat that may be developed.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, let me call the attention of the gentleman from Colorado to the fact that the language that is offered is the language that Simon Lake has boasted he forced in the naval bill——

Mr. BONYNGE. The language I have offered——

Mr. ROBERTS. He has made that boast.

Mr. BONYNGE. Permits anybody to come in competition.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, I hate to trespass on the time of the committee, but there are so many points that I have not touched upon that I ask their indulgence for another ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to proceed for ten minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to insert——

Mr. ROBERTS. Insert certain matter in the RECORD.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If this is a request to extend in the RECORD——

Mr. ROBERTS. It is simply to add what I could not find at the moment. I could not lay my hand on certain things at the exact moment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I can not help that; I can not make any exceptions.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD certain printed matter to which he has referred. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have objected once, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi objects.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment or the proposition offered by the gentleman from New York by striking out all the proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That all such boats shall be of the same type heretofore determined to be superior as the result of the competitive tests held under the provisions of the naval appropriation acts approved June 29, 1906, and March 2, 1907, unless on or before October 1, 1908, a submarine torpedo boat of a different type and of full size for naval warfare shall have been constructed and submitted to the Navy Department for like trial and by such like trial by said Department demonstrated to be not inferior to the best submarine torpedo boat in the competition above referred to.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that amendment to this paragraph is exhausted. That is an amendment to an amendment to an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. That is an amendment to an amendment, which is in order.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Now, Mr. Chairman, the reason I make this amendment is this: I believe in the submarine boat. I believe it is necessary for the Government to build submarines as an auxiliary to our naval establishment, but it is demonstrated beyond any question of a doubt that if we leave this proviso in this bill that is insisted on by the Naval Committee, we leave the selection of these boats and limit the selection practically to those boats made by the Holland Company or the Electric Boat Company. Now, I think the Electric Boat Company is making a good boat. I have no criticism to make against it. I think that the Octopus that the Government last bought from them is a good boat, but I say all these submarine boats are in an experimental stage——

Mr. ROBERTS. So are the battle ships.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And that we ought to have lines for development, and that the appropriation bill ought to be broad enough to allow the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, to contract for the best boat obtainable, unless the Congress believes that the Secretary of the Navy is not going to use that discretion as he should use it. Now, there is no man on the floor of this House who knows the present Secretary of the Navy who doubts his honesty, his integrity, or his judgment in these matters. There is not a man on the floor of this House, and most of us know him well personally, who will doubt that he will exercise that judgment for the best interests of the Navy, and if it will be for the best interests of the Navy, to make another contract with the Electric Boat Company to build eight Holland boats, the Secretary of the Navy will make that contract with the Electric Boat Company. Is there a man on the floor of this House who can rise here now and doubt that proposition?

Not one. Well, then, if you believe that it will do it, if it is to be for the best interests of the Navy, and you can not deny that proposition now, why should you want to write in this appropriation bill a clause that will force him to select the Holland type and buy these submarines from the Electric Boat Company whether he wants to do so or not? That is what this proviso means. It can not mean anything else.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. HARDY. If you strike out this proviso, it would leave the bill requiring the Secretary of the Navy to immediately contract for eight submarine boats, and then would you not get the very thing that you are objecting to?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Not at all.

Mr. HARDY. The contract for the boats ought to be let as the boats are to be built. I understand that only one, or possibly two or three boats may be built in a year.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It does not make any difference.

Mr. HARDY. I want to say that I thoroughly agree with the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BONYNGE].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The question is very simple. If you strike out the proviso, the Secretary of the Navy can take his own time to contract, and build these boats when he gets ready to have them built. This is not the first time I have moved to strike out this proviso, as I did it once before, and the objection that was then made was that they said that the Secretary of the Navy would not order the building of these boats, but it is demonstrated now from his own report that he will order the building of submarine boats, and what we want him to do is to order the type that he believes is the best type at the present time.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Under your amendment would it let in a proposition like that of the gentleman from Colorado?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes, sir.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Will it let in everybody else?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It will let everybody else in that has got a submarine.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. That is what I am for, and I am going to vote for it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And I think it has come now to a time when the House should open the door wide and leave the discretion absolutely to the Secretary of the Navy to contract for the best submarine he can get without any limitations of any kind placed upon him. That is the reason I offer this amendment.

Mr. THOMAS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, there is one provision in this bill relating to a feature of national defense about which much has been heard during this session of Congress and about which much has been written for several years past. It deals with a subject of great national importance, a subject of vital interest to all sections of our country, and one affecting alike the Pacific and Atlantic coasts, one affecting the interests of North and South. It is a question of adequate protection for our national coast line, a coast line greater in length than that of any one civilized power.

Great Britain	4,500
France	1,485
Germany	800
Total	6,785
United States:
Atlantic Ocean	5,400
Gulf	4,300
Pacific Ocean	3,100
Total	12,800

Almost double the total of the leading maritime nations of Europe.

In time of war we need battle ships to meet similar war ships of an enemy. We need cruisers to perform the duty of scouting. We need colliers and supply ships to keep the other vessels coaled and provisioned, but we also need a harbor defense of a particular and special kind. This defense is found in the submarine torpedo boat, which is to-day recognized by all powers as of the greatest value in protecting a coast line against invasion.

Some years ago Admiral Dewey, in his testimony before the Naval Committee, declared:

If the Spaniards had had two submarine boats in the harbor of Manila I never could have held it with the squadron I had. With those craft moving under water it would wear people out. With two of those in Galveston all the navies of the world could not blockade that place.

He declared that the entrances to New York, the Delaware and Chesapeake bays could be protected by them, and added:

All our ports should be equipped with them—New Orleans, Galveston, San Francisco, and Puget Sound.

Admiral Dewey has not been alone in thus advocating an adequate number of submarines. His opinion is supported by the best naval experts of the world, and yet I would be willing to take his word alone when he says that all our ports should be equipped with them, for investigation has certainly demonstrated their value. It is a remarkable statement which he makes, that two of these boats could have prevented his holding Manila with the entire squadron under his command; yet can anyone doubt that he did not fully realize that he was making that statement as a naval expert, as a master of the art of naval warfare. Admiral Dewey has not been alone in advocating the submarine. We have the declaration of President Roosevelt, made in January, 1906, in favor of these boats. He said:

I thoroly believe in developing and building an adequate number of submarines.

With the President of the United States and the Admiral of the Navy advocating submarines from the standpoint of experts we next come to the question of the necessity for their use in naval defense.

Within the past few months there have been rumors of impending conflict, and the people of the great Western coast have urged upon Congress the necessity of adequate coast protection. The cry has come from the States of California, Oregon, and Washington that we do something to insure the safety of their ports. The flower of our Navy has been sent to the Pacific, and in case of war Admiral Evans's fleet would go forth to give battle to a like fleet of some other country. The fleet would act in unison, for it could not be distributed to the great cities of the Pacific. It would have to fight as an organized body, thus leaving many cities still open to invasion and attack; but remembering Admiral Dewey's statement that two submarines would have prevented his fleet from holding Manila, we naturally turn to the submarine as a means of special defense for these unprotected cities and harbors. Something should be done to meet this cry from the Pacific, and something should be done to provide adequate protection for Southern and Atlantic cities. At the present time we have nothing like a sufficient number of submarines to anywhere near meet the requirements of this country, to say nothing of the Philippines and Hawaii. It is to be remembered that in addition to the great coast line of the United States we have in the Philippines another long coast line where submarines could be used to great advantage, thus enabling the war ships and cruisers to concentrate themselves more effectively. The urgent demand for submarines does not lessen the need for more battle ships, but it does show that we should not provide for four battle ships at the expense of adequate coast protection. The question of adequacy should, in my opinion, be determined by the naval authorities, and should take into consideration what foreign nations are doing along this line. England, France, and Germany, with nowhere near the extent of coast line to defend as we have, are providing for more submarines than we are. Their naval programmes contemplate a greater number than is contemplated by the bill as reported by the Naval Committee.

SUBMARINES.

Countries.	Number built.	Authorized and building.
Great Britain	39	9
France	41	58
United States	12	7
Germany	1	2
Japan	7	2
Russia	25	6
Italy	3	3
Austria		6

Not only do we find other nations ahead of us in this respect, but our naval experts have expressed the opinion that ten submarines would not be too many at this time. Admiral Capps, in his testimony before the Lilley investigating committee, made the statement that the Navy Department could well use ten submarines, yet we have provided for only eight. It can well be shown that the eight additional submarines now recommended by the Naval Committee will nowhere near meet the opinion of Admiral Dewey that all our ports should be equipped with these boats.

The question of submarine defense should be considered from the standpoint of both economy and expediency. Two additional battle ships will cost about $20,000,000 and may not be completed under four, five, or six years. It can then be seen that even at the greater cost of battle ships they could not be readily available for defensive purposes. We need something that will afford protection at the earliest possible moment. This can not be found in any other naval boat but the submarine. We can get these boats in about a year, and the additional cost is comparatively small.

One battle ship would cost as much as thirty submarines. It will thus be seen that at a comparatively small expense we can quickly provide for a coast-defense system that we must admit would be effective, for we have the opinion of the best naval experts of this and all foreign countries in their favor. It is therefore an economy to make this appropriation.

The Naval Committee, in reaching the conclusion that eight submarine boats should be authorized, fully investigated the question from all sides. It has desired only that the Navy Department should get as quickly as possible the best boat available. We are willing that our Navy experts should select the best boat, but it is not right to the interests of our country, the interests that need protection, that we should delay buying submarines while somebody shall develop something which might be considered better than we have now. Secretary Metcalf and Admiral Capps, in testifying before the Lilley investigating committee, both indicated that the period of eight months mentioned in the pending bill was as long as we should safely wait. They were also of the opinion that the legislation as now proposed would not restrict them in buying the best submarines obtainable, be that the Holland, Lake, Berger, or any other kind. I think that we can safely, therefore, leave the selection of the best boat to the Navy Department and the naval experts.

In conclusion, therefore, it would appear that we have provided for eight boats, because the necessity of adequate protection makes it imperative that we buy no less a number, and we have not restricted the Navy Department to anything but the best boat; we have left the selection of the best boat to the naval authorities, and I think we can safely trust them not to deviate from their determination, as expressed by Secretary Metcalf, to buy nothing but the best boat obtainable. [Loud applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. GREGG. In the controversy between the different boat companies I have absolutely no interest. The manufacturing establishment of neither of them is in my State nor in my district. Nobody that has any stock in either of them is in my district, so far as I know. Nobody that has any stock in either of them has any kinfolks in my district, so far as I know. The only position I take is that I favor, and I think we need, submarine boats in our Navy. I believe that the submarine is to prove the most efficient coast and harbor defense that we have. I believe that if we have enough of them in our waters no hostile fleet can come within a hundred miles of our shores, and, believing that, I believe in building them, and I believe in contracting for the best that we know anything about, just as we do in our battle ships. Why, if we want submarines, do we let this wrangle between the different companies deter us from having submarines? If they want to develop their different plans, let them develop them and present them to the Government. But if you actually want submarine boats, and you open the door for paper boats and model boats, you will get no submarine boats. The best boat we know anything about is the boat that proved successful in the trials about a year ago, and this bill provides for those. Now, then, if we want submarines, and we want the best that we know anything about, let us vote for this bill as it is drafted. If we want to go out in the field of speculation, let in the paper and the model boats and the discredited Lake boat, we may do so; but if we want to do business, if we sincerely believe that submarines should be added to our Navy, the only thing for us to do is like we do with battle ships and everything else, namely, pick out the best we know anything about and provide for that.

The gentleman from Alabama moves to strike out the proviso. Well, now, I want to show you what effect that will have, if I can get the time. It will accomplish the very opposite of what he wants. The Secretary of the Navy now recommends, this year has asked for, four battle ships of the same type as the Delaware class. Why does not somebody else get up and say, "Somebody else may be able to give us a good model, and be able to give us a better battle ship; do not say what you want, but leave that open." On the battle ship proposition we followed the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy. Then he asks for four scout cruisers of the same type as the Chester class, and all the way down he says the kind he wants until he gets to the submarines, and he says: "Of the same type as those recommended as the result of the recent competitive test." That is the best he knows anything about, and he asks that we provide for the best he knows anything about.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question there?

Mr. GREGG. Yes, sir.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Secretary of the Navy, you say, thinks they are the best. He has recommended them as the best; and if it is left entirely in his discretion to select the best, is he not going to select them?

Mr. GREGG. Do you say you want competition?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do.

Mr. GREGG. Your amendment will prevent competition. Here is what the Secretary says he will do, and how he construes it. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS] asked how the term "in the meantime" is construed. I construe it as the time between the time he makes his report and the 1st of July, when the appropriation becomes available, and the Secretary of the Navy so construes it himself. I want to read you from his evidence before the investigating committee.

Mr. GAINES of West Virginia. Will the gentleman permit me to repeat the question of the gentleman from Alabama? I have asked myself, before, of many persons, why is it that if the Secretary of the Navy is in favor of the Holland boat, those who are also in favor of the Holland boat are unwilling to leave the matter to the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy?

Mr. GREGG. That is not a question with me at all. The question with me is, I want some boats. I do not want paper boats or model boats or discredited boats to come in and hold up the actual getting of boats. Now, I want to read you from the Secretary of the Navy. In his testimony before the investigating committee, he says:

A. I simply say if that date is in the act we would make no contract until after the 1st of October, because a boat might in the meantime be developed which would be equal to the best boat owned by the Government or under contract.

Q. If that date were not in there, would you let a contract at all on or before October 1; if that were not in there, would you let the contract earlier?—A. I would.

Q. Would you think it desirable to let contracts earlier than October 1, 1908?—A. I do not see any reason why a contract should not be awarded as soon as the appropriation was available.

Q. Then would not the extension of the date to October 1, 1908, be rather in the interest of the Lake Torpedo Boat Company?—A. The Lake Torpedo Boat Company might possibly make such changes in its present boat as to come up to the requirements of the act. I have heard informally that on this recent test they have met all the submergence requirements in which they failed in the tests made at Newport. There has been a decided improvement in that respect. The report has not yet been submitted to me, but I understand informally that they did meet the requirement of the submergence tests, or the control under submergence.

Q. Then if no contract before October 1, 1908, they would still have a further time for improvement?—A. Yes.
Q. In that respect would not this bill be in their favor?—A. To a certain extent.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GREGG. I would like to have five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GREGG. Now, that is the situation. The gentleman from Alabama moves to amend by striking out the proviso. The Secretary of the Navy states that if that proviso is stricken out or were not in the bill, he will let contracts as soon as this appropriation goes into effect or becomes available, which is the 1st of July.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will ask the gentleman why, if the gentleman says he is anxious to get the Holland boat, he is afraid to leave it to the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy?

Mr. GREGG. I have no interest in the Holland boat.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Then why are you not willing to leave it to the discretion of the Secretary?

Mr. GREGG. Why, that is all covered in here.

Mr. ELLIS of Missouri. If the gentleman from Texas will permit me, I am entirely in accord with him in his statement that the motion of the gentleman from Alabama striking out this proviso should be voted down, in any event, because I believe, as the gentleman has said, it will accomplish just the opposite of what the gentleman from Alabama desires. Now, he says, "Why are you afraid of leaving the discretion with the Secretary?" I want to call attention to this: If you cut out the proviso of the substitute to the amendment of the gentleman from Colorado, you would accomplish the result that is sought by the gentleman from Alabama. In the substitute offered by the gentleman from Colorado it is prescribed that the Secretary may, in his discretion, let these contracts, but in the original he is bound to let these contracts at once. Under the proviso in the amendment by the gentleman from New York the Secretary is bound to purchase or let the contracts for eight torpedo boats; so that the discretion that is desired is not provided for.

Mr. GREGG. I do not care any more about the Colorado boat than I do about any of the boats. I do not believe in holding up this proposition for any Colorado company to develop some kind of a boat.

Mr. BONYNGE. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. GREGG. I can not yield; I beg the gentleman's pardon; I have not time.

Mr. BONYNGE. All right.

Mr. GREGG. I say that there has been a disposition to criticise this committee about making restrictive legislation by the tools of or parties interested in some other competing company. We have, in fact, enlarged the chances of competition over and above what was recommended by the Secretary of the Navy.

He said:

Buy the boat which proved the best in the test last year, unless by July 1 some other boat is developed which is better.

We extended the time to October 1. Now, my reason for doing it was this: I understood that the Lake Company people had claimed all the time that their boat was the best, and that they failed in the contest simply by reason of minor defects which could be remedied in a short time. Now, I thought if we could extend the time until October 1 it would give them more time in which to remedy those minor defects. The Secretary of the Navy, in his evidence before the committee, sustains me in that. He says that they have been improving it, that they are improving it, that they have recently submitted to a test that shows great improvement, and that they may be in condition on the 1st of October to enter into a test, and if they have the best boat, or if they can make the best boat, then let them have it. I do not care which gets the contract. I have not a particle of interest toward any of them—not the interest of a constituent—nothing. All I want is, I want this branch of the Navy developed, and the best that we know anything about I am in favor of purchasing.

Mr. RUCKER. If the bill is passed, as proposed by the committee, how many boats of this class can be built in a year?

Mr. GREGG. I do not know the number that could be built.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RUCKER. I ask that the gentleman have two minutes longer.

There was no objection.

Mr. GREGG. I could not answer the gentleman's question, but I am in favor of contracting for them.

Mr. RUCKER. Has the gentleman any idea how long it will take the Holland Boat Company to construct one or two of these boats?

Mr. GREGG. I understand that the Lake Boat Company took twenty-seven months under their contract, but I do not know how many they could build at the same time.

Mr. RUCKER. Would it not be impossible for the Holland Company to build the eight boats provided for in this bill within a year?

Mr. GREGG. I think so.

Mr. RUCKER. Then why the wisdom of authorizing the Secretary to contract for eight boats?

Mr. GREGG. If you wait until a boat is built, twenty-seven months from now, before making further contracts, the appropriation will have lapsed, and you will have to do the whole thing over again. If you are going to provide for them, you have got to authorize the making of a contract for them.

Mr. RUCKER. Does not the gentleman think it would be wise to authorize the contracting for no more boats at this time than can be constructed?

Mr. GREGG. We have got to fix some number.

Mr. RUCKER. Why not give the Government an opportunity to avail itself of any improvements in the future?

Mr. GREGG. That same objection would apply to contracting for the building of battle ships.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I should like to ask the gentleman if there has been any evidence before the committee with reference to the feasibility of having some or all of these boats built by the Government itself?

Mr. GREGG. That has been discussed, but it has been decided to be impracticable, because most of the different parts are patented, and it would be impossible for the Government to build them in its own yards.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. If I have the time I should like to read the statement of Admiral Bowles on this subject, in the gentleman's time.

Mr. GREGG. I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. He says:

All the principal machinery can be purchased in the open market.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. FOSS. I move to close debate upon this paragraph and all amendments in twenty minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] has been recognized.

Mr. FOSS. Will the gentleman yield to me to move to close debate?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Oh, do not close debate.

Mr. FOSS. I want to get through with the bill.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. We want to get through with this job.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Washington indicate where his amendment is to come in?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. It is offered at the end of the substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the substitute the following proviso:
"Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy may require any number of said submarine torpedo boats to be constructed on either coast, as he may direct."

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I move to close debate on the paragraph and all amendments in twenty minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois moves to close debate on the paragraph and all amendments in twenty minutes.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. WILLIAMS] there were—ayes 61, noes 49.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, we have to-day eleven submarines and eight new ones have been authorized. Of these, seventeen are on the Atlantic coast and two are on the Pacific coast. Now, as we are going to have submarine boats, I think everyone will agree that a part of them, at least, should be on the Pacific coast, and that is the object of this amendment. I call the attention of gentlemen to the fact that if we are to have submarines on the Pacific coast it is greatly to the advantage of the Government to have them constructed there, because, owing to their peculiar type, it will cost a great deal more to have them constructed on the Atlantic coast and taken to the Pacific than it will to construct them on the Pacific in the first place. In other words, if we are going to appropriate money for eight submarines, at least half of them ought to be built on the Pacific coast.

I do not pose as an expert on this question, but I have asked Mr. Frank W. Hibbs, the gentleman who constructed the battle ship Nebraska and who practically rebuilt the Oregon, a leading authority in naval construction in the country, to make a brief statement on this question. I ask the attention of the committee to what he has to say before a vote is taken upon this amendment. Speaking of submarines, he says:

The Committee on Naval Affairs of the Sixtieth Congress has decided to recommend appropriations for eight submarine torpedo boats.

If this number be finally authorized by Congress, it is urged in the national interest that provision be made in the law for the building of one-half—and if a less number, at least four submarines—upon the Pacific coast, for the following reasons:

First. The inadequacy of the protection to the Pacific coast afforded by the number of submarines already in service there and the striking disparity between the Atlantic and the Pacific coasts in that respect, irrespective of the special considerations which have lately directed particular attention to the condition and needs of the latter.

The naval force as at present completed includes eleven submarines, only two of which have been built and are in service upon the Pacific coast.

Of the contracts for which appropriations are now available, the entire number (eight) authorized by law have been awarded for construction in an Eastern shipyard.

At its present stage of development this most powerful engine of war has demonstrated in actual service conditions that it is peculiarly adapted to defensive purposes, and although the class may yet form an essential part of the fleet for offensive operations, at present it has no such function. Such vessels will therefore operate from a permanent base at a small radius compared with other naval vessels, and will not ordinarily be withdrawn therefrom, remaining at least upon the respective coasts (Atlantic and Pacific) to which they are assigned.

Second. Practical considerations make it expedient, if not necessary, that submarines intended for service upon the Pacific coast should be built there.

There are two alternatives: First, they may be built in the East "knocked down," shipped as freight, and completed in one of the Pacific coast yards; second, they may be completed in the East and transferred to the Pacific coast under their own power or in tow.

The latest type of submarine, which is by far the most effective and most valuable, is altogether too large to transport in any other way even in sections.

The considerations referred to, then, are as follows:

(a) Cost.—There can be no necessity of pointing out in detail that, compared with building upon the Pacific coast, the extra cost of building "knocked down" would be about three to one; and considering that whether proceeding under their own power or in tow these vessels would have to be convoyed, that there would be extra expense involved, in especially preparing them for the voyage, in making repairs while en route, and in overhauling and repairing them after arrival upon their station, all over and above the actual expenses for their fuel, stores, and crews, there is no question upon which side of the comparison the balance would show. Moreover, the increased cost of so transferring them would be an actual loss, since, as has already been shown, they are not cruisers, as are the other vessels of the Navy, and will remain upon the Pacific when they get there.

In the case of merchant vessels intended for service on the Pacific coast it is a fact that unless it is possible to carry a cargo of coal or some equivalent on the outward voyage it does not pay to construct them in the Eastern yards.

(b) Risk.—The risk alone of handling these vessels upon so long a voyage and the continuous strain upon both machinery and crew constitute a strong argument against such a procedure. It would probably be impossible to insure a private vessel of so extreme a type for such a voyage, and while there is little question that it would be possible in an emergency to get the vessel around, it is not worth assuming the risk of total loss to do so, when it is possible to build them close to the locality in which they are to be used.

(c) Delay.—Practically there is no reason why the Pacific coast yards should not complete these vessels in about the same time as the Eastern yards; and although there is no similar case to be mentioned in point, it would probably delay delivery by at least two months to make the voyage around to the Pacific. Speed would not be the governing factor in the case; the special preparation, the loss of time on the way, and the overhauling afterwards would all contribute to the delay; and in addition, there would be the probability of having to wait for a favorable time of the year, or favorable weather, in order to minimize the risk from other causes.

Third. In the case of vessels which, as already shown, would seldom be called upon for service far distant from their base, and particularly in the case of unusual vessels such as these, there is a distinct advantage in having them built in proximity to their base, on account of the facility with which repairs can be made or injured parts duplicated if necessary; and above all, on account of the familiarity with the work, the patterns, and the tools used in the original construction.

The loss of at least a month and possibly of two months, or even more, as frequently happens, to secure duplicate parts from the East, may be of the utmost importance, and is particularly liable to occur with such vessels, which, though themselves standardized, call for special methods of work, a special class of workmanship, and special fittings and materials.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I ask unanimous consent that I may have five minutes more.

Mr. OLCOTT. I would be glad if I could consent to the gentleman's request, but debate has been limited to thirty minutes, and a part of that has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I object.

Mr. OLCOTT. Mr. Chairman, in so far as it affects the amendment I offered is concerned, I should be glad to accept the amendment of the gentleman from Washington. I have not a particle of objection to having put in the bill the provision that some submarines should be built on the Pacific coast. I appreciate perfectly the force of the argument as to the difficulty and cost of taking them around, even when we have a canal built.

I want, however, to correct an impression that seems to have existed in the minds of some gentlemen who have spoken, that there is any disposition on the part of the Naval Committee to yield to anyone a feeling of entire confidence in the Secretary of the Navy. The gentleman from Alabama asked why it was that we were not willing to leave it to the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, and consequently strike out the clause that provided for the type of boat. I again call the attention of the gentlemen of the committee to the fact that the Secretary of the Navy particularly asked us to provide for "submarines of the same type heretofore determined to be superior as the result of the competitive tests." A great deal has been said in regard to the test of the two boats then in the market, the two available boats that could be made. There is not the slightest desire on the part of anyone to stop competition or prevent the Government from obtaining the best boat. We want eight submarines built of this particular type, in accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary of the Navy, because——

Mr. BONYNGE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OLCOTT. I will.

Mr. BONYNGE. Can you build the eight submarine boats for a million dollars?

Mr. OLCOTT. Certainly we can not. We can build the eight for three and a half million dollars, but we wish to contract immediately for the boats of the type now in the market. The keels of the eight boats can be laid for a million dollars, and we will be able to complete the eight a great deal more expeditiously in this way than we could in any other. The Lake boat people have a contract with the Secretary of the Navy upon which the Government agrees to pay $450,000 for a completed boat, giving them twenty-seven months to complete it, but some of that time has already expired. The only question in regard to the suggestion that comes from the gentleman from Colorado, as any one knows who has had anything to do with mechanical devices, is that it does not necessarily follow from the test of a model that the test of the completed full size of a mechanical device will act in the same way that the model does. Now, we want eight submarine boats, because this is the only company that can furnish them now, and we can get them quickly. We shall need a lot more, and if any other people have facilities and can make them, they will have their chance when their facilities for building suitable submarines are perfected. I now yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROBERTS].

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, in the time allotted to me——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. OLCOTT] can not allot time to the gentleman.

Mr. ROBERTS. He had five minutes under the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado is recognized. The Chair will recognize the gentleman later.

Mr. BONYNGE. Mr. Chairman, I asked the gentleman from New York [Mr. OLCOTT] a few moments ago whether or not the eight submarine boats could be built for $1,000,000. I understood his reply to be "yes" that they could be built for $1,000,000.

Mr. OLCOTT. I said the keels could be laid for a million dollars and that the work could be progressing upon the eight.

Mr. BONYNGE. Then I misunderstood the gentleman, but if the answer be that with a million dollars only a beginning can be made in the construction of the boats, then I desire to call the attention of the committee to what I said in opening, that you are then providing that you shall at this time tie up the Government to the purchase of eight of these submarines of this type, when not one of them will be completed within a year. If you will only get the eight keels started during the year——

Mr. OLCOTT. But I did not say only.

Mr. BONYNGE. You will have to come back to Congress next session and get an additional appropriation before you will have the boats completed. Would it not be better that if we are to build any submarines with this $1,000,000 we should simply contract for such submarines as can be completed with that $1,000,000, and get those submarines during this year? After that we should let the Secretary of the Navy under the authorization to contract for additional submarines take advantage of whatever development and progress there may be in the work of constructing submarines. But the committee contemplates that we shall now contract for the eight of this specific type, although we will not get the eight completed and perhaps not have any completed within a year. So that you will not only not increase the number of submarines, but by following the recommendation of the committee you will make it impossible for the Secretary of the Navy to take advantage of any progress that may occur in the meantime in the construction of submarines.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I would like to call the attention of the gentleman to the language in the bill, "unless on or before October 1, 1908." Is it possible to build a boat of this kind by that time?

Mr. BONYNGE. Of course everybody knows that is absolutely impossible to do, and that there is nobody who can come in under that competition. What I am asking for is simply what the Secretary of the Navy has recently asked for, and notwithstanding what has been said on the floor it is the authority he is now asking for. In the hearings before the select committee of the House he was interrogated in reference to having let a contract to the Lake Boat Company, and let me say parenthetically that I am not in any way interested in the Lake Boat Company and do not personally know anything about their boats. All I am asking for is that there be an opportunity for everybody who has a boat to enter into this competition. The Secretary was asked if whether what he did in letting a contract to the Lake Company, in his judgment, encouraged the best possible development, and this is what he said:

I do not know whether I can answer that question; it would simply be my opinion. After all, as a matter of fact, I think it would be better to leave this entire question to the judgment and discretion of the Department.

That was the entire question of the construction of submarines. He was then asked by Mr. OLMSTED:

Would it not be better to fix a date for competition each year, the winner to have the entire contract?

No; I do not think so.

Well, you said, Mr. Secretary, that in your judgment it would be better to leave the whole matter to the discretion of your Department.

Yes.

Would that same opinion stand as to all the various vessels used in the Navy?

We have that discretion, as I understand it, at the present time. There is no limitation upon any vessel built by the Navy outside of the submarines.

Now, I submit, Mr. Chairman——

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Read the balance of it.

Mr. BONYNGE. Oh, I have read all that I desire to read within the time I have—not that I desire to cut out any portion of it, but the gentleman will have an opportunity to read it himself—so that the Secretary says that he has this discretion as to all other vessels except submarines, and is asking for the same discretion as to them. I submit, gentlemen, that if there is any character of vessel in regard to which the Secretary of the Navy should have this discretion it is the submarine, for that is acknowledged to be still in an experimental stage.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, the practical effect of this proposition, as I read it, is to compel the Secretary of the Navy to buy only the Octopus type of boats, because the language in the bill says that he must buy those that have been approved by the Naval Board, and the Lake style of boat has already been condemned, leaving the Octopus style of boat the only uncondemned style of boat on the market. So you may just as well tell the Secretary of the Navy to go down and buy the Octopus style. I say, under the peculiar circumstances of this matter, is it not a business proposition, as well as justice to the Treasury and to the people, that you should open the doors to competition and let the propositions like that suggested by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BONYNGE], or the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], or someone from the Indian Territory, if you please, if they could bring in a boat that improves on the Octopus or the Lake style or any other style, and give the Secretary of the Navy the liberty and the right and the discretion to buy boats of any kind he in his wisdom finds hereafter to be the best?

As it is, gentlemen, in the most carefully drawn language you have tied the Secretary of the Navy to the Octopus type of boat. That is the "hog and hominy" of it——

Mr. ROBERTS. It is the Secretary's own language.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Well, it does not make any difference; we will teach the Secretary to use better language in the future——

Mr. ROBERTS. He says Congress does not know how to use language and——

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I esteem the Secretary very, very much, and I do not want to tie his hands to the Octopus type of boat; I do not want to tie him to the Lake type of boat; I do not want to tie him to the type of boat of my friend from Colorado; I do not want his hands tied at all in the matter of finding and buying the best boat. It is for the liberty of the Secretary of the Navy that I am fighting. It is a common business proposition, and I am for the rich fruits that come from competition, and hence I stand, Mr. Chairman, for the proposition of the gentleman from Alabama or the proposition of the gentleman from Colorado.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Chairman, the proposition of the gentleman from Colorado is exactly similar to a proposition made before the House a few years ago. It was discussed, perhaps, for an hour or two, and it was fully elucidated at that time as to whether the Government should buy paper plans or should buy models. It was then demonstrated to the House by the gentleman from New York [Mr. VREELAND] that it was not, in his opinion, the judgment of Congress that the Department should buy either plans or models, and his argument appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD under date of May 16, 1906, on page 7186, so it seems to me that the action of the House in the past, so far as this peculiar legislation is concerned, referring to plans or to models, expresses the opinion it should not be expended on these lines.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman from New Jersey allow me a question there? The last bill contained this language——

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I have only five minutes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Congress extended the time six months——

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I can not yield for a question, I regret to say; I have only five minutes. So far as the legislation proposed at this time is concerned, either as to the number of vessels that are to be constructed or as to the competition, in my judgment and as I understand it, it is entirely with the Navy Department and exactly as they desire. The testimony before the committee of investigation by Admiral Capps was that ten would not be too many. The testimony of the Secretary of the Navy as it is brought to Congress in his annual report recommends this particular type of boat, which, in the unanimous judgment as to competition, is the best boat, unless in the meantime a better boat is demonstrated, and it does not debar the Lake people from competing, for the facts are that on the 17th day of March, under instructions of the Navy Department and the Secretary of the Navy, they had a test, and the report says that they have improved on their boat, and the Secretary of the Navy in his hearing said that in his judgment it may be possible for them to further improve their boat and enter into the competition and carry off the prize. He says that the words in these acts of Congress limited it to October 1, 1908, and is a longer time than he proposed in his report to Congress.

In answer to the question of Mr. OLMSTED, he said unless that limitation had been had in that bill he would have contracted immediately the appropriation was available. This shows conclusively that the words in the act now before Congress are broader even than the Secretary of the Navy intended, giving him more scope, giving him more limit, giving the other people more time, and if, in sixteen months from the time, they are not able to correct the minor details, which the report says is the only reason they failed in the former test, they could not do it in sixteen years. In my judgment they will be able to correct them, and the Government will get the best boats possible for human ingenuity in this country and capital behind it to produce, and if my friend from Colorado, with his friends, can bring ingenuity and capital for a test in the future, they ought to have it if they can serve the country with the best boats. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired and all time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I call for a reading of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again read the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York and the amendment offered to the amendment by the gentleman from Alabama. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The amendments were again read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the parliamentary situation is this: The gentleman from New York offered an amendment to which an amendment is offered by the gentleman from Alabama. The gentleman from Colorado offered an amendment by way of a substitute to which an amendment was offered by the gentleman from Washington. The question will first be upon perfecting the original amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, and the question now recurs upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama to the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Upon a division (demanded by Mr. UNDERWOOD and Mr. BONYNGE) there were—ayes 94, noes 87.

Mr. ROBERTS. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

Tellers were ordered.

Mr. OLCOTT and Mr. UNDERWOOD were appointed as tellers.

The committee again divided, and there were—ayes 108, noes 104.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 77, add the following:
"At least one of these submarine boats shall be built and constructed under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy at some Government navy yard or yards."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order on that on the ground that it is new legislation.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this whole paragraph having been declared in order, this attempted limitation or direction of the Secretary is clearly in line with the rest of the paragraph that is germane. I ask for the ruling of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the amendment is legislation and is not germane even to that portion of the paragraph remaining. The proviso has all gone out by amendment. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert the following proviso:
"Provided, That only two boats shall be contracted for at any one time, and the Secretary shall at the time of making such contract contract for the best type of boat obtainable in his discretion."

Mr. ROBERTS. A point of order, Mr. Chairman. It is legislation. It is not germane.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment is in order. The section provides for the construction of eight boats. It is not determinable from the section whether these boats will be built under one contract for the whole eight or under several successive contracts. Since the section provides for the construction of eight boats, it seems to me proper that the same section ought to authorize and provide for the order of the construction—that is, how many at a time. The purpose of the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] was to prevent the strangulation of all competition, and this amendment enables the Secretary under the section to contract for two boats at one time, and when those boats have been constructed to contract for two more. It is simply providing the manner in which the appropriation shall be expended, and without the proviso which I have offered, or without it being understood that the Secretary would act upon the principle of that proviso, it seems to me we have done something the reverse of what we intended when we, by striking out the proviso in the original bill, authorized the Secretary to make one contract, and that at once, if he sees proper, for the construction of the whole eight submarine boats. In that case all competition is abolished, and the result is that the Secretary, under the law as it stands now, may contract with any boat company——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will remind the gentleman that he can only talk to the point of order. Debate has been closed on the paragraph.

Mr. HARDY. Then upon the point of order I take it that it is proper to ask how an expenditure shall be made.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. Paragraph 2 of Rule XXI provides:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriations for such public works and objects as are already in progress; nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order in any general appropriation bill or in any amendment thereto.

The exception to the general rule in reference to amendments on appropriation bills, which has been applied by the decisions of the Chair as to new vessels in the Navy, has been made upon the theory that they are for continuation of public works or objects already in progress. The rulings of the Chair have not gone to the extent that legislation is in order upon a naval appropriation bill, any more than it is in order upon any other bill, and the only amendment under this provision of the rules which is in order is an appropriation for a vessel on the theory that it is for a work or object in progress. The amendment which the gentleman offers contains this provision:

And the Secretary shall, at the time of making such contract, contract for the best type of boat obtainable in his discretion.

That is clearly a matter of legislation, which in nowise relates to the mere appropriation for a work or an object in progress.

Mr. HARDY. Will the Chair allow me just one question?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. HARDY. Is that any more a matter of legislation than the original provision, that the boats shall be of a certain type?

The CHAIRMAN. Well, the original provision that boats should be of a certain type was a mere description, as the Chair held in the ruling which the Chair made, a mere designation of the character of the boat which was appropriated for, merely descriptive, without giving any discretion or giving any control to the Secretary of the Navy. The Chair thinks that the point of order is well taken, and therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert the following proviso:
"Provided, That any number of such submarine torpedo boats may be built upon either coast as the Secretary of the Navy may direct."

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I offer that as an amendment——

Mr. TAWNEY. I reserve the point of order. I desire to ask the gentleman from Washington if it is not a fact that these boats can not be constructed by the Government of the United States anywhere? I ask him if it is not a fact that the equipment is largely patented, and that it is impossible for anyone to construct the boats except the owners of the patents?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washingon. It is true that if the Secretary of the Navy constructs them they can be constructed upon the Pacific coast precisely as the ships have been.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does the gentleman claim that the company that owns the patents have facilities for the construction of these boats on the Pacific coast? If the Secretary should exercise this discretion and require them to be constructed on the Pacific coast, it might be necessary for the company owning the patents to build a plant upon the Pacific coast for the purpose of constructing these boats, the cost of which plant would come out of the Government or be added to the cost of the boats. I do not think that the amendment is at all practical.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The gentleman is mistaken about that. There are shipbuilding plants already out there, and these parties will simply have to make arrangements with those plants for their construction.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I want to read what was said by Admiral Bowles.

The CHAIRMAN. The only question that can be discussed is the point of order. Debate upon the paragraph has been exhausted. Does the gentleman desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. TAWNEY. I think, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment is new legislation, in that it directs the Secretary of the Navy, who now has no discretion. Now, to authorize and direct the Secretary to have these vessels constructed at any particular place seems to me a legislative direction.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. My recollection of the reading of the amendment is it does not provide that they shall be made——

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. I do not see any reason why the Secretary can not do that. If he can not, I hope we will change the proposition so that he can. We did equivalent to this with reference to these battle ships.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will remind the gentleman that he must address his remarks to the point of order.

Mr. GAINES of Tennessee. My attention was diverted from that fact.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I simply wish to say this: That if under the present paragraph the Secretary of the Navy can build these boats wherever he pleases, then the amendment of the gentleman from Washington does not change existing law; and it seems to me that it is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. That construction would cause the Chair to rule exactly as to what the law is. The Chair could not know what all the law is. The Chair might not be able to determine whether the existing provision is existing law. The Chair thinks that a provision in form legislative, which purports to state existing law, unless it be the exact phraseology of the existing statute, is legislation, and is obnoxious to the rule. The Chair, therefore, sustains the point of order.

The question recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Colorado. Without objection, the Clerk will report the substitute and the amendment.

The substitute and the amendment were again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the substitute offered by the gentleman from Colorado.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Colorado for the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BONYNGE. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The Committee divided, and there were—ayes 59, noes 85.

Mr. BONYNGE. Tellers, Mr. Chairman.

The question was taken on ordering tellers.

The CHAIRMAN. Eighteen gentlemen have arisen—not a sufficient number; tellers are refused, and the substitute is rejected. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York as amended.

The question was taken, and the amendment as amended was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to contract for or purchase one destroyer or torpedo boat of the type known as "subsurface," "semisubmerged" (or the like), the essential feature of which is to have during its operation some portion of the hull or superstructure always on or above the surface, such vessel to cost not to exceed $400,000 and to have a speed not less than 22 knots; also two small vessels of like type having a speed of not less than 16 knots and to cost not to exceed $22,500 each: Provided, That before any vessel of the type provided for in this paragraph shall be purchased or contracted for a vessel of such type shall have been constructed complete and of full size for naval warfare and submitted to the Navy Department for such trial and tests as the Secretary of the Navy may, in his discretion, prescribe, and as the result of such tests be demonstrated to have fulfilled all the reasonable requirements of naval warfare for a vessel of its class, and for these vessels the sum of $445,000 is hereby appropriated, to be available until expended.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order to that paragraph on the ground that it is new legislation and in violation of the second paragraph of Rule XXI.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin makes the point of order against the paragraph. Does any gentleman care to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I am not familiar with the intricacies of certain parliamentary questions bearing on points of order, but if I understand the gentleman from Wisconsin, he thinks by his point of order that this is a new ship of a new type.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is new legislation in that there has never been any authorization for such a character of ship in any prior appropriation act, and accordingly it does not come under the rule which makes an exception of war vessels, where the rulings have been that they are works in progress. This is something entirely new, never having been heretofore authorized by a naval act.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, there has to be a time when every type of vessel is new. The Delaware is new in a larger sense than this so-called "subsurface destroyer." This is not an experiment. It is an adaptation. It has been, as I regard it, badly named.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Alabama answer a question from the Chair?

Mr. HOBSON. Certainly.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there now in the Navy any vessel of the type known as the "subsurface" or "semisubmerged" or the like?

Mr. HOBSON. There is the like; and I will explain that to the Chair. This vessel could be constructed out of almost any destroyer by slight modifications.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Alabama answer the Chair, then, whether there is now in the Navy any vessel of the type known as "subsurface" or "semisubmerged?"

Mr. TALBOTT. Authorized by law?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Is there an existing vessel of that type in the Navy?

Mr. HOBSON. There is of the type, Mr. Chairman, because it is of the type of a destroyer. If the Chair will permit me just two minutes, I will show him clearly how this is a destroyer. It belongs essentially to the type of destroyers.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is urging the gentleman for information.

Mr. HOBSON. It is of about the size of a destroyer. It is of practically the shape of a destroyer. It has a little less power than a destroyer. It has torpedoes that are intended to destroy the enemy, as the destroyer has. It carries those torpedoes below the water, instead of above. It has a protective deck which protects those torpedoes, which the destroyer has not. It has its engines below the protective deck and below the water. They can not be reached by the fire of the enemy. There is no essential difference except this—it has provided more protection for the vitals of the boat. The purpose of the boat, the size of the boat, the shape of the boat, the type of the boat are essentially the same, only the name is badly chosen. And, furthermore, it is a most valuable diversion of the destroyer, giving a long radius of action and putting the engines below the water, where you can use gasoline and gas engines, which can not be well used now, and opening up a great field for development. Furthermore, it is a simple, straight, clean proposition that they will make this destroyer good, not as an experiment, but as a destroyer, before they receive a dollar of money. It is of the type of destroyer, and it is of a most promising type of destroyer.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not wish to argue the merits of the proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Alabama yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not ask the gentleman to yield. I am raising the point of order that the gentleman is addressing himself to the merits, and not the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Alabama was endeavoring to inform the Chair as to the facts.

Mr. HOBSON. I simply am trying to impress upon the Chair the fact that, if gentlemen should look at the plans of such a boat alongside of the plans of a destroyer, there would be no question about both being of the same type. Its purpose is the same, its general construction is the same, every essential feature is the same, except that in certain features it is an improvement, and opens up a very promising field of improvement, and the question does not involve the expenditure of a dollar unless it is a success.

It is far more of a destroyer in the sense in which that word has been currently used than the Dreadnought was of a battle ship when the Dreadnought was designed. The Delaware was just as much and more of a new type from the then type of battle ship as the subsurface is a diversion from the type of destroyer, and this can be shown to any gentleman who cares to look at the plans. It is a destroyer, Mr. Chairman, and no sophistry can change that fact. They can change the name, but they can not change the type of the boat or the purpose for which it is intended.

The CHAIRMAN. The paragraph under consideration provides that—

The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized, in his discretion, to contract for or purchase one destroyer or torpedo boat of the type known as "subsurface," "semisubmerged," or the like, the essential feature of which—

And so forth, and makes the appropriation available until expended.

Nearly all the provisions in the paragraph are legislative provisions and not appropriation provisions. So that under the rule the paragraph is subject to a point of order as legislation. While the Chair is not called upon to decide as to whether an appropriation would be in order for a destroyer or torpedo boat known as "subsurface" or "semisubmerged" as a work already in progress, the Chair is inclined to think that the rulings in regard to holding appropriations for new vessels, in order on naval appropriation bills as a work in progress, have gone quite as far as it is possible to carry them, and that where a new type of boat is described it might be well held that the appropriation for it is subject to a point of order on an appropriation bill, the House at all times having the authority to determine such matters upon appropriate legislative bills. The Chair therefore sustains the point of order.

Mr. HOBSON. Will the Chair allow me a suggestion?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. HOBSON. In stating the type of boat this paragraph states it to be a "destroyer," and destroyers are in the line of progress in the Navy, and have been.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair read precisely what the bill stated. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Construction and machinery: On account of hulls and outfits of vessels and steam machinery of vessels heretofore authorized, $9,832,962.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk reads as follows:

On page 79, in line 3, strike out the word "nine" and insert the word "twelve;" and after line 4, add: "Provided, That $3,000,000 of this amount shall be available for hulls, outfit, and steam machinery of the two battle ships provided for in this bill."

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I recur reluctantly to the question of battle ships. I realize that that question was settled yesterday. I bow to the decision of the House. The purpose of my amendment is to carry into effect that decision.

Heretofore the average time of building an American battle ship has been more than sixty months. A part of this time has been due to the fact that the bill authorizing the battle ships did not carry the money with which even to begin the work. At this present juncture, in all the other navies of the world, in building a new type of battle ship such as this the practice is to have all the money needed available at once and begin the construction and push it to completion as fast as possible; but in this bill we do not find a dollar appropriated.

The result will be that unless America begins a new method of construction she will find herself behind when her ships are built. The Nebraska that has just gone into commission on the Pacific coast was authorized in 1899. It had become obsolete twice before it went into commission. This Congress, I am sure, not only wishes these two battle ships, but it wishes them to come on the stage in time to give full effect to their existence. Unless we begin now it probably will be five years before these two ships are available.

The chairman of the Naval Committee and the chairman of the Appropriation Committee have made their fight, and nobly, and have kept their appropriations down to a working minimum, and now we come to the question of getting the value and result and efficiency from what has been authorized.

The money will have to be spent. The plans are all ready, the armor-plate factories are ready, the gun foundries are ready, everything is ready, and we only need a little money to start with. Unless you make the appropriation we shall lose nine months, and really lose efficiency and effectiveness that will in the end far outweigh any question of temporary saving, and I trust that the two chairmen will support this reasonable proposition and make more effective and efficient what has been decided on by this Congress.

Mr. ELLIS of Missouri. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HOBSON. Certainly.

Mr. ELLIS of Missouri. I presume the gentleman from Alabama has kept track of these authorizations for vessels, steel, machinery, etc., and if so, I would like to have him state the aggregate of those authorizations, and for which it is sought now to make an appropriation and toward which it is sought by this amendment to increase that appropriation.

Mr. HOBSON. The aggregate for the two battle ships?

Mr. ELLIS of Missouri. It is more than that; it covers everything that has preceded this.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HOBSON. I would be glad to answer the gentleman's question if I had the time.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to state that the committee recommended no appropriation for these ships this year. They have followed the usual custom of authorizing the ships one year and making the appropriation the following year. That has been the custom which has obtained in building up the Navy. We have allowed the constructors to go ahead and prepare their plans and specifications for new ships.

Mr. HOBSON. Will the gentleman permit a short question?

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOSS. But I may say that the situation is somewhat different this year, inasmuch as it is proposed in the Navy Department to duplicate the plans of the Delaware and the North Dakota with regard to these two ships. But I think it is a very good thing to allow the Navy Department some little time to carefully go over their plans and revise them and see that they made no mistake in the construction of our ships.

Mr. HOBSON. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. FOSS. Now, in this bill we give authority to the President of the United States to make a contract for these ships, and he can go on and make a contract and arrange the payments upon that contract as he may see fit. Congress will be in session next December and then can look into the situation. This bill as it was reported to the House carried nearly $104,000,000. We have added to it by committee amendments $1,800,000, so that the bill at this moment practically stands $106,000,000, and when I take into consideration the fact that there will be increases undoubedly upon this bill—put upon it by the Senate—increases possibly in the pay of the officers and men of the Navy, increases perhaps in the matter of colliers, increases perhaps in the establishment of the Pearl Harbor station—when I take into consideration all these things which are likely to increase the bill until it reaches a total of $110,000,000, I can not ask the committee to make any appropriation for the construction of these ships at this time.

I now move, Mr. Chairman, to close debate upon this paragraph and all amendments thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to close debate on the pending paragraph and amendments thereto.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment now offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. HOBSON) there were—ayes 38, noes 110.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Armor and armament: Toward the armor and armament of domestic manufacture for vessels authorized, $7,000,000.

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska makes the point of order. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I make the point of order against the words "domestic manufacture," in line 6, that it is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman on the point of order.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, it has been the custom in a number of appropriation bills for the Navy to insert the words "domestic manufacture" as applied to armor plate, but I have been unable to find anywhere in existing law any provision to this effect. I care to make no further argument except to say that there is no existing law which can be pointed out except in these annual appropriation bills for the use of the term "domestic manufacture." The very fact that it is inserted here indicates that if it were not inserted competition would be open to the world, as there is no law to the contrary.

Mr. TALBOTT. Mr. Chairman, I will not be certain about it, but I think the first bill authorizing the beginning of the new Navy did carry the words "domestic manufacture."

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will remind the gentleman that the bill to which he refers, passed some twenty years ago, refers only to the particular vessels authorized in that bill.

Mr. TALBOTT. I am not sure that the phrase was used in that authorization, but I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that the bill authorizing the increase of the Navy, the original bill reported and passed in the Forty-seventh Congress, did employ the words "domestic manufacture."

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I have the act before me to which the gentleman from Maryland referred. The act is March 3, 1887.

Mr. TALBOTT. No; you are mistaken.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. This provides for the building of certain named described vessels and the last paragraph of that act provides, "that said armor and gun steel shall be of domestic manufacture." So did the act preceding that——

Mr. TALBOTT. The act of 1883 I referred to, I think.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I have all the acts here. I have the act of 1883 also.

Mr. TALBOTT. I think it is in the act of 1883 also.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. The act of 1883 is a mere appropriation bill. The act of 1883 is not a separate and independent statute, but is an act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1884.

In fact, I have in my hand, Mr. Chairman, a compilation of all these acts since 1883 down to 1907, and after investigation of it—I have also the act of 1887, under which the reorganization and rebuilding of the Navy was started, and in that act certain vessels and character of vessels are specifically provided for, and the armament.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman yield? Is the gentleman from Georgia able to inform the Chair, from his study of these acts, whether there is any provision in any of the acts providing for vessels now authorized which fixes the particular quantity and quality of armament to be used?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Not except in the current appropriation act which did not make it law except for that particular year, as I understand the ruling to be. Of course we have from year to year, as I understand it, provided in the appropriation act certain requirements, but my understanding of the rule is that that is not existing law except for the year. I will not state it does not exist, but from my examination of all these acts from 1883 to the present time I have not been able to find where there is any specific statute providing, as this does, that the "armor shall be of domestic manufacture."

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman able to inform the Chair whether there is any statute which provides the kind of armor or armament which shall be used on those vessels which have been authorized?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I am able to state I have not been able to find it, and I have looked for it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia yield the floor?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, in continuation of what I said in making my opening statement, I want to add that the very fact that this language is repeated from year to year in the appropriation bill is the very best evidence that no fixed law has been passed directing that armor of domestic manufacture shall be used.

And, furthermore, Mr. Chairman, the simple insertion of the language "hereafter" would have fixed the law, and in no appropriation bill, and I have looked over a number, has use been made of the word "hereafter." The language has been identical with the language in this bill, which evidently applies only to the appropriation provided for in the bill and is evidently new legislation.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. In the first place I find it, Mr. Chairman, in the act of 1887, which provides—I will read it:

Toward securing, testing, and delivering armor and gun steel for the vessels authorized by the act of August 3, 1886, and the unfurnished monitors mentioned in section 3 of the same act, and the vessels authorized by this act, $4,000,000: Provided, Said armor and gun steel shall be of domestic manufacture.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What year is that?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Eighteen hundred and eighty-seven. Now, in 1883 it was providing for the building of certain vessels, naming the character of them, and also providing for armor, and the act of March 3, 1883, does not provide that the armor shall be of domestic manufacture. I have not, Mr. Chairman, been able from—I would not say a careful study I have given to it, because I did not begin it until this morning—but I have not been able to find the law, except in an appropriation bill from year to year, where any such language is used.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to speak to the point of order. These words, "of domestic manufacture," have been carried in every naval appropriation bill for more than twenty years. In the act of August 3, 1886, under which vessels herein referred to were built, it says:

That the armor used in the construction of said armored vessels and for completing said monitors shall be of the best obtainable quality and of domestic manufacture.

That is the act, however, which is referred to on page 76 and which went out on a point of order in this bill. But that does not affect this. This paragraph reads:

Armor and armament: Toward the armor and armament of domestic manufacture for vessels authorized, $7,000,000.

This appropriation applies to the vessels heretofore authorized, and not the vessels authorized in this act. Under the act of last year authorizing the vessels of last year and the years before, to which this appropriation would apply, in making payments upon the armor contracts, is the authorization that the armor shall be of domestic manufacture. And, that being so, there is authority of law for making this appropriation, inasmuch as the act of last year and the act of the year before for which this appropriation for the vessels for whose armor this appropriation is made has already——

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Illinois inform the Chair whether contracts have been made?

Mr. FOSS. Contracts have been made.

The CHAIRMAN. For the armor for the vessels authorized?

Mr. FOSS. For all vessels that have been authorized.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I would like to call the Chair's attention to the fact that the acts of last year and the previous years to which the gentleman refers, contain the same provision that this year's act contains, and that each such provision only provided armor of domestic manufacture for the particular armor appropriated in each bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is perfectly aware of that.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] permit an inquiry?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska has not the floor. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] has the floor.

Mr. FOSS. Now, in the appropriation bill of last year we read:

Armor and armament: Toward the armament and armor of domestic manufacture for vessels authorized.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That provided for the armor and armament of vessels already begun. This provides for the armor and armament of other vessels. It provides other armor.

Mr. FOSS. That provides for the armor of vessels that were authorized, and this provides for the armor of vessels which are already authorized by previous acts—acts previous to this bill.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Does the gentleman claim that the Government is providing for the duplication of armor? This is certainly different armor.

Mr. FOSS. It is the same armor, only it is——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. You are going to put it on in two thicknesses?

Mr. FOSS. No.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is what you imply.

Mr. FOSS. This appropriation is to make payments on contracts already made, and the ships that were authorized last year and every year preceding were built and contracted for under the act which I have referred to, of August 3, 1886.

Mr. DALZELL. Let me ask the gentleman, Are not contracts already made?

Mr. FOSS. Yes. I have said the contracts were already made.

Mr. DALZELL. So you could not in this instance turn over the furnishing of the material and the furnishing of labor to a foreign foe if you wanted to?

Mr. FOSS. No.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the gentleman submit to a question? If the view he takes is correct, why do you provide here for domestic manufacture if it is provided for in existing law?

Mr. FOSS. It is simply descriptive. It is simply to make it plain to the gentleman from Nebraska.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. TAWNEY. If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss] will permit me, before he yields the floor, I would like to ask the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] as to what the particular cause of his enmity is toward domestic manufacture?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. In the opinion of the present occupant of the chair the fact that the item has been in for twenty years, more or less, in the annual appropriation bill providing for the purchase of armor and armament of domestic manufacture, does not affect the item in this bill. And the Chair has some doubt and is inclined to the opinion that the fact that there may be contracts outstanding providing for the purchase of domestic manufacture does not require Congress to make an appropriation for that purpose. But in the rulings, which have been uniform for years, items of appropriations for new vessels in the Navy have been sustained as works or objects in progress. It is within the discretion of Congress to provide, as a part of that work in progress, for the purchase of armament and armor. The present occupant of the Chair thinks it would be in order to say red armor or green armament, so long as it is purely descriptive of the article to be purchased and not a change of law, simply describing the article which is to be provided; and Congress having the power to provide for the purchase of armor can provide by describing the kind of armor which shall be purchased. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I then offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. TAWNEY] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be expended for armor when awarded by the Secretary of the Navy to the lowest responsible bidder having in view the best results and most expeditious delivery.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I am sure this amendment will not come within the objection made. On page 79, line 6, I desire to strike out the word "domestic" and insert the words "the best."

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 79, line 6, strike out the word "domestic" and insert the words "the best."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I offer that amendment for the purpose of again bringing before the House the matter which has often been presented—that in the construction of our new Navy and in the purchase of the armor for our battle ships this country is, practically speaking, in the hands of a trust, which in one session has been outlawed by legislation, and yet for which at all sessions great appropriations have been voted to further enrich it. [Applause.] The farce of competition in armor plate of domestic manufacture has gone on year after year. The country knows, and Members of this House must know, that there is no real competition.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes, sir; if it is briefly.

Mr. TAWNEY. Is the gentleman from Nebraska familiar with the result of the competition of two years ago for the contract for the manufacture of armor for vessels previously authorized, and that as a result of that competition, which was made possible under a provision similar to the one just adopted, the Government secured the armor for the vessels previously authorized at a cost of about $400,000 less than it otherwise would have been able to have obtained it? That was done as a result of competition, which the gentleman says does not exist.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I trust the gentleman will not consume my time. I know this: That the records of the Committee on Naval Affairs at their recent hearings disclose the fact that there has been a recent advance in the price of armor and that during the past year the United States has been compelled to pay for armor $420 a ton, whereas in 1906 it paid only $345 per ton. I am sure, Mr. Chairman, that if Congress makes no earnest effort to compel the reduction of the cost of armor plate, no reduction will be had.

The figures presented by an official Government report show that last year we paid to the Bethlehem Company $416.54 per ton; we paid to the Carnegie Company $418.36 per ton, and to the Midvale Steel Company $416.15 per ton; practically the same price to all these companies; these companies all having a community of interest and a community of ownership.

Now, Mr. Chairman, is this House, in entering upon a great career of naval construction, to make no effort to procure the cheapest armor? Is this House this year, while it outlaws trusts and combinations in restraint of trade, going to deal with this trust and pay it what it demands, and shall we permit it, as last year, to set its own price for armor? Shall this trust continue to hold the National Government up for armor plate, or shall Congress make some substantial effort to secure cheaper armor plate?

I had hoped that the Chair would rule otherwise on the point of order that I made against the words "domestic manufacture" in the bill. I believe the Chair made a mistake in overruling my objection, but if this amendment can be inserted and embodied the competition would be open to the world, and with another later in the paragraph, that the customs duties at the port of entry shall not be charged against any competing company abroad, we will have an opportunity to discover whether or not cheaper prices can be had for the armor plate for the use of the United States. Now, I may be mistaken in the belief that the price abroad is not as high as the price at home. If the price abroad is not cheaper, and if the trust price is reasonable, then no harm will be done in throwing this matter open to world-wide competition. [Loud applause on the Democratic side.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska.

The question was taken, and the Chairman announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided, and there were—ayes 71, noes 105.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I ask for tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed Mr. Foss and Mr. HITCHCOCK.

The committee again divided, and there were—ayes 87, noes 116.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That no part of this sum shall be expended for any armor or armament manufactured in any shop or shops, factory or factories, where children under 14 years of age are employed or permitted to work.

Mr. FOSS. I make the point of order against that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, before the Chair sustains the point of order, I should like to be heard upon it. Of course if the Chair has excluded the matter——

Mr. FOSS. Regular order, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Kentucky briefly, and the Chair knows that the gentleman from Kentucky will confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. SHERLEY. I will not waste the time of the committee. The Chair just held that this being a paragraph relating to the continuance of a work in progress, it would have been in order for the House to have provided that the armor should have been red or green, or any other sort of armor that it saw fit. Now, this simply provides, as a limitation upon the money appropriated, that it shall not be expended for armor manufactured by child labor. It is clearly a limitation. I am not speaking of the merit of it. That is a matter about which men may differ; but I do not believe the Chair ought to construe a provision that is clearly a limitation as out of order, and I wanted to make that statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. The Chair has ruled several times in the course of the consideration of this bill that a proposition in form a limitation but in substance a change of law was subject to the point of order. And while the Chair——

Mr. SHERLEY. Will the Chair permit a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will permit the Chair to make his statement. While the Chair might personally entertain the opinion that probably no armor is now purchased where children under 14 years of age work, yet the Chair does not know what the fact is, and it clearly would be a change of law as to the executive officers.

Mr. SHERLEY. The Chair, as I understood him, held that it would be in order to provide that armor should be red or green. Now, the Chair is not supposed to know that armor is red or green, and yet such an amendment would just as clearly come within the present ruling of the Chair as this proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the difference is just as wide as possible. One is a description of armor; the other is a limitation upon the discretion of the executive department. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 79, in line 6, strike out "one" and insert "ten," and after line 7 add: "Provided, That $3,000,000 of this amount shall be available for armor and armament of the two battle ships provided for in this bill."

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I call for a vote.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I submit that I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has been recognized.

Mr. HOBSON. The gentleman from Illinois referred to certain details that could well be revised in the time that would follow, if provision were not made in this bill for hulls, fittings, and machinery. But armor and armament are essential features. The type of the guns and the thickness of the armor are now settled. It will produce a delay because we have stricken out a provision for the hulls and machinery to be begun; but it will produce a greater delay if we now strike out the provision that will enable us to begin the guns and begin the armor.

It has been the history of American naval construction that the hull and fittings frequently have had to be delayed because the armor and the guns were not ready.

Mr. TAWNEY. Will the gentleman from Alabama permit a question?

Mr. HOBSON. Certainly.

Mr. TAWNEY. Does the gentleman think that the $3,000,000 by which it is proposed to increase this appropriation would be available for the purchase of armor for the new ships that are carried in this bill?

Mr. HOBSON. I know that it would be available to begin the construction of the guns and the manufacture of the armor.

Mr. TAWNEY. That paragraph relates only to the vessels heretofore authorized.

Mr. HOBSON. But this provision of my amendment makes it available for the vessels carried in this bill.

Mr. TAWNEY. I did not so understand the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. HOBSON. If the gentleman will examine the amendment, he will see that.

Now, Mr. Chairman, someone has said that the word "duty" is the greatest word in the language. I agree with that. It is my duty here to lay this case in its essential features, as I know it, before the Congress. I regret very much to see party lines drawn where the great question of national defense is concerned. The question of policy has been settled. Now it becomes a question of efficiency. I am here to tell you that if you strike out the provisions of these amendments you will not save one dollar, but will increase the time and reduce the efficiency and effectiveness of the provision for the battle ships.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Alabama.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. HOBSON) there were—ayes 75, noes 109.

So the amendment was lost.

While the committee was dividing, the following occurred:

Mr. GREGG. As I understand, this is for guns and armor?

Mr. HOBSON. It is for armor and armament, and will save time and add to the efficiency of——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama will suspend. The gentleman is out of order.

Mr. HOBSON. I was answering the question of the gentleman from Texas.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas had no right to ask a question.

Mr. GREGG. I had a perfect right to ask a question. I asked it of the gentleman privately.

The division of the committee was then completed.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, to go in on line 7, immediately after the word "dollars."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska offers his amendment, to go in at the end of the amendment already inserted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add after the amendment already adopted, line 7, page 79, the following:

"Provided, That no contract for armor plate provided for in this section shall be made at a price in excess of $375 per ton of 2,240 pounds."

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against that amendment.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Has the gentleman made the point of order?

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I understand this appropriation is intended to pay for the armor heretofore contracted for. Now, the gentleman's amendment can not change the terms and conditions of a contract already entered into by the Government for the purchase of armor at a different price from that stipulated in the contract.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. This only relates to contracts to be made, and not the contracts that have been made. If the contracts have already been made they are safe.

Mr. TAWNEY. The contracts are already made under this provision.

Mr. FOSS. The gentleman from Minnesota is correct. This appropriation is for ships already authorized and for which contracts have already been made.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, with reference to the point of order, I want to call the Chair's attention to the fact that in the Fifty-eighth Congress this same question was raised, and it was then urged that an amendment applied to existing contracts, and the occupant of the chair decided that Congress, having the right not to appropriate at all, had the right to surround that appropriation with any sort of limitation. Consequently the amendment is not subject to a point of order on that ground at least.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Nebraska desire to be heard?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do. Mr. Chairman, it has been ruled, and repeatedly ruled, and it was so ruled when I introduced the identical amendment four years ago, that it was in order.

It is stated, on page 355 of the Manual:

To a paragraph providing for armor and armament of naval vessels a proviso that the total cost of armor should not exceed a certain amount and that no contract should be made in excess of a certain price per ton was held to be a limitation merely.

There are other precedents of the same sort.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is not a limitation, and it does not purport to be. It provides that the price shall be limited, and it of course limits the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, which is not now limited by law. It is not in the form of a limitation. It does not provide that no part of the appropriation shall be expended unless for armor at a certain price. It is clearly a limitation on the power and discretion that the Secretary of the Navy already possesses under existing law. Therefore it is legislation.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, this question has been repeatedly passed upon by chairmen of committees in previous Congresses, and if precedents are worth anything at all, then this amendment is not subject to the point of order. The Chair has even gone so far in other cases as to hold that a provision that no greater price should be paid for armor plate than was paid in this country by other governments was in order. This particular amendment now offered has been held in order not once but three or four times.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman the amendment that was offered at that time?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I can read it. On page 3482 of the RECORD of the Fifty-fifth Congress, second session, this language was used:

And no contract for armor plate shall be made at an average rate to exceed $400 per ton of 2,240 pounds.

And this practice is not simply once, but it appears repeatedly in the proceedings of this House and in the rulings of the Chairman. The point of order was made in this case. Mr. Ball made the point of order in the following language:

Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that provision allowing $400 a ton for armor plate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is prepared to rule. The amendment offered by the gentleman from Nebraska is:

Provided, That no contracts for armor plate provided for in this section shall be made at a price in excess of $375 per ton of 2,240 pounds.

The Chair is not sure whether the gentleman means to have the amendment apply to the paragraph under consideration or the section. As the Chair is at present informed the bill is in one section only. The amendment does not purport to be a limitation upon the appropriation, does not purport to be a limitation upon the expenditure of money provided for in the bill. The Chair has examined with care the precedents to which the gentleman referred, having them in full upon the desk, and the Chair thinks that they are not identical, that they are not applicable in this case. The Chair feels constrained to sustain the point of order.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I move to close debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I trust the gentleman will permit me to submit this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is not endeavoring to cut off the gentleman's amendment. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois to close debate upon the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto.

The question was taken, and on a division (demanded by Mr. HITCHCOCK) there were—ayes 105, noes 75.

So the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert the following:

"Provided, That no part of this money shall be paid to any company or corporation, its agent or representative, where competent proof shall have been presented to the Secretary of the Navy that said company or corporation is a trust or an integral part of a trust operating in violation of existing law."

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that that it is new legislation, a limitation involving new legislation, and that it is a change of existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and, on a division (demanded by Mr. HITCHCOCK) there were—ayes 88, noes 108.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Increase of the Navy, equipment: Toward the completion of the equipment outfit of the new vessels authorized, $400,000.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I move to close debate on the paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion is not in order until debate has begun. The gentleman from New Jersey offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That none of said sum be, and none is, appropriated on account of any of the hulls, outfit, or machinery heretofore authorized for use, payment, or application under any contract for any vessel in which said contract the contractor shall not covenant with the United States as follows:

"That no laborer or mechanic doing any part of the work contemplated by the contract, in the employ of the contractor or any subcontractor contracting for any part of said work contemplated, shall be required or permitted to work more than eight hours in any one calendar day upon such work except upon permission granted by the Secretary of the Navy during time of war, or a time where war is imminent, or where any great national emergency exists; and that the contractor contracting with the United States shall, in the event of violation of said covenant as to hours of labor, forfeit to the United States the sum of $5 for each laborer or mechanic for every calendar day for which he shall have been required or permitted to labor more than eight hours upon the work under such contract: Provided, That this limitation shall not apply to existing contracts."

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that that is new legislation.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. On the point of order, Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already decided that. The Chair does not care to hear from the gentleman from New Jersey except very briefly.

Mr. HUGHES of New Jersey. I simply say that this is the exact language at the exact relative place in the bill which was held by a former occupant of the chair in the Fifty-eighth Congress to be in order, and my object is to have the Chair either permit the amendment to be in order or flatly reverse the ruling of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Another chairman has already reversed that ruling, and the present occupant of the chair thinks that the chairman who reversed the ruling had the best of the reasoning by long odds. It seems to the present occupant of the chair that everyone who reads the rules and the precedents will see that this amendment is obnoxious to the rule, is legislation upon an appropriation bill, and hence is subject to the point of order, and the Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Total increase of the Navy, $18,677,962.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to call attention to the large increase in our Navy. Mr. Chairman, this addition of eighteen million six hundred and seventy-odd thousand dollars carried in this bill for the increase of the Navy, when added to the nearly $24,000,000 which was carried in the naval appropriation act of 1907, makes between $40,000,000 and $45,000,000 and by that immense sum we have increased the Navy in the past two years; which increase ought to answer the demands of all, even those who are "Navy mad." Certainly, Mr. Chairman, it is sufficient for all the present needs and legitimate purposes of our Government. In the message of President Roosevelt sent to us day before yesterday, urging four huge battle ships, he quoted from the farewell message of President Washington, recommending that the people of this country prepare for war in time of peace. I thought then, and still do, that the moment and the time at which this last message of the President was sent was not proper or in keeping with the high and exalted station of the President, when he sought to influence our action by the message sent at the very time we were considering the question of battle ships. From the same message from which the President quoted he might have gathered wholesome instruction and advice which, had he followed, no such message would have found its way to this House.

The first President of our country, the Father of our Country, in that farewell address so often quoted and a recurrence to which now would be refreshing said:

It is important, likewise, that the habits of thinking in a free country should inspire caution in those intrusted with its administration to confine themselves within their respective constitutional spheres, avoiding in the exercise of the powers of one department to encroach upon another. The spirit of encroachment tends to consolidate the powers of all the departments in one and thus to create, whatever the form of government, a real despotism. * * *

If in the opinion of the people of the distribution or modification of the constitutional powers be in any particular wrong, let it be corrected by an amendment in a way which the Constitution designates. But let there be no change by usurpation.

Not only that, Mr. Chairman, but in this same farewell message Washington advises us what to do in relation to foreign powers. He advises us not to make ourselves a great world power and not to mingle in the political affairs of Europe and the Old World, but on the contrary the Father of our Country said:

The great rule of conduct for us in regard to foreign nations is, in extending our commercial relations, to have with them as little political connection as possible. So far as we have already formed engagements, let them be fulfilled with perfect good faith. Here let us stop. Europe has a set of primary interests which to us have none or a very remote relation. Hence she must be engaged in frequent controversies, the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns. Hence, therefore, it must be unwise in us to implicate ourselves by artificial ties in the ordinary vicissitudes of her politics or the ordinary combinations and collisions of her friendships or enmities. Our detached and distant situation invites and enables us to pursue a different course. If we remain one people, under an efficient government, the period is not far off when we may defy material injury from external annoyance; when we may take such an attitude as will cause the neutrality we may at any time resolve upon to be scrupulously respected; when belligerent nations, under the impossibility of making acquisitions upon us, will not lightly hazard the giving us provocation; when we may choose peace or war, as our interest, guided by justice, shall counsel. Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation? Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalship, interest, humor, or caprice?

If we follow this advice, we need no huge navy, either for defense or to keep the peace. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I have not voted for four battle ships. I was opposed to them. I did not vote for two; I voted for one, and think that sufficient. I was ready yesterday, and am to-day, to proclaim to the world that we still adhere to the advice of Washington not to intermingle with the affairs of foreign nations, that we have no desire to be a great world power except to advance in peace, in education, in prosperity, and religion, and to keep open our doors of trade and commerce and protect our own people, and establish here forever liberty, prosperity, religion, and peace. [Applause.] In a day or two, Mr. Chairman, the great Christian peoples of the world will meet in their churches and places of worship to celebrate Easter Sunday, the day of the risen Christ, the founder of our religion and our church. Shall not the United States, the foremost Christian people of the world, proclaim now and in Congress that we are not for armaments or for war, but that we are for the peace of the world? [Applause.] May we not, Mr. Chairman, proclaim to the world by this refusal to follow the demand and the dictates of the President for four huge engines of war that we seek not the destruction of our fellow-man by war, but we will take the lead in that path that will conduct us and the other nations of the earth to final and permanent disarmament and to peace? Instead of aspiring, Mr. Chairman, to be feared and dreaded as a great world power, preparing for war and destruction of our fellow-man, I would rather send this message to the world:

Blow, bugles of battle, the marches of peace,
East, West, South, and North bid all strife to cease,
Sing the songs of great joy that the angels began,
Sing of glory to God! and on earth peace, good will to man.

[Loud applause.]

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the paragraph and pending amendments thereto be closed.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

That no part of the sum appropriated by this act shall be used for any expense of the Navy Department at Washington unless specific authority be given for such expenditure.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do this for the purpose of calling attention to certain statements made by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. LILLEY] on Saturday of last week concerning the Mare Island Navy-Yard. Some of these statements are so palpably erroneous and misleading——

Mr. LILLEY. Will the gentleman from California yield for a question? These statements were furnished me by the Navy Department, through the Secretary of the Navy. If they are false, you are calling statements made by the Secretary of the Navy false—— .

Mr. KNOWLAND. I will show to the contrary later; but, to continue, I repeat that some of these statements were so palpably erroneous and misleading that I feel it incumbent upon me at this time to call the attention of this House to the errors made by the gentleman from Connecticut. At the outset let me say, I entertain only feelings of friendship toward the gentleman.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I would like to ask the gentleman just one question. Is the part of the speech of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. LILLEY] from which you are reading the part which he delivered upon the floor or the part which he inserted in the RECORD?

Mr. KNOWLAND. The part he delivered on the floor.

Mr. WILLIAMS. You are not reading that part he inserted in the RECORD, and which I think he inserted in the RECORD without leave to print?

Mr. LILLEY. The gentleman is mistaken. I asked for leave to print.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. Chairman, as I started to say, I entertain only feeling of the greatest friendship for the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. LILLEY], and I have no fault to find with his laudable ambition to protect the people of the United States against the onslaughts upon the public Treasury by his colleagues in both branches of Congress who seek appropriations legitimately for the districts they have the honor to represent. I believe, however, that the gentleman should be entirely fair, and I am loath to believe that he willfully intended to do an injustice to the Mare Island Navy-Yard. I wish, however, to call attention to some of his statements, one of which was:

They have a magnificent stone dry dock at Mare Island, costing $1,175,000, and I have at hand a letter from the Secretary of the Navy in which he states that the present stone dock will not permit the docking of a battle ship.

The unfairness of this statement is apparent when I state that the magnificent stone dock to which the gentleman alludes is building, and will not be completed for some months. The present small dock, to which the Secretary no doubt refers, was built many years ago, and is not large enough——

Mr. LILLEY. Will the gentleman yield to a question?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I refuse to yield at this time, as I only have five minutes. I will say it is not large enough for large, modern ships, but the new dock will be ample for the largest vessel of the Navy.

Another statement which the gentleman made was that $728,886.12 has been expended for dredging, while the official figures from the Navy Department, over the signature of the Secretary, gives the amount as $500,699.96, which is $228,186.16 less than stated by the gentleman.

Here we have still another attempt to grossly misrepresent. The gentleman states:

That during the year ending 1907 the expenditures for labor were $1,629,678.97, while the total amount of work done was $928,582.97. In other words, the workmen alone were paid in one year $692,095 more than the value of their product.

This statement was either due to ignorance or was a deliberate attempt to deceive.

Mr. LILLEY. That is the statement that came from the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Wait until I get through. The gentleman took his statement of "work done" from the report of the Secretary of the Navy, page 41, which clearly states what is included under this head, namely:

Work done at station in construction and repair of vessels and in the manufacture of equipage and supplies for ships and other manufactured products.

But, as the gentleman should well know, this does not include amounts paid for improvements and additions to plant, dry dock, and so forth, items which in the aggregate are large.

Mr. LILLEY. And especially provided for in another appropriation.

Mr. KNOWLAND. It also includes work done for other Departments of the Government for which the Navy Department is reimbursed, together with the pay of employees for holidays and leaves of absence. All of these items, however, have been included in the sum total for labor which the gentleman quoted, and I have a letter from the Department showing these facts.

In this connection, and quoting from the same report made use of by the gentleman from Connecticut, I find a naval station located in the district of the gentleman where the cost of maintenance for the past year is given as $17,504.39, and the amount of work done was $310. To quote the language of the gentleman, "How striking and significant are these figures to any business man."

For the past ten years in New London, in the district of the gentleman, the grand sum total of $529,740.68 was spent for improvements and cost of maintenance, while the amount of work done, according to official figures, was only $2,588.13.

Mr. LILLEY. Now will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I will not be interrupted. Again quoting from the gentleman from Connecticut:

I ask you to oppose this waste of the people's money, because it is our sworn constitutional duty.

Reform, like charity, should begin at home. The gentleman did not include New London in his resolution to do away with certain naval stations.

Twenty-seven and one-half feet at high tide is the least depth at the shallowest point in the channel at Mare Island. The gentleman endeavored to convey the impression that there was only 20 feet of water, although that is at low tide. It is true, and I will not attempt to deceive the Members of this House or the country, that we have had difficulty in maintaining a sufficient depth at certain points in the channel, owing to silting, but the dikes under construction and which are about completed are proving satisfactory in maintaining depths. To determine whether the present plan is the best, the President has recently appointed a commission of experts, who are making a thorough investigation of conditions, and this commission will shortly report a plan which will permanently insure a sufficient depth of the channel and set all agitation at rest.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I ask for one minute.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hea none.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I want to say in conclusion that during the past year there were forty-two vessels undergoing repair at the Mare Island Navy-Yard. It is the second best equipped yard in the United States, both for repairs and shipbuilding. The naval bill is about to pass, and I want to say that I am gratified that the Members of this House have not seen fit to follow the lead of the gentleman from Connecticut in striking the Mare Island items from the bill. His efforts to right all the alleged wrongs in the world have been about as successful as those of Don Quixote. [Aplause.]

Mr. LILLEY. Mr. Chairman, can I have five minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized.

Mr. LILLEY. I want to say, in the first instance, that none of the figures that I have presented for the consideration of Members of this House were mine. They were all taken from the official figures of the Navy Department and from the Secretary himself. The depth of water at Mare Island is the Secretary's own statement. As I understand, he lives very near there and ought to be informed. So far as New London is concerned, there is a coaling station there, and if it has passed its days of usefulness, I am just as much in favor of abandoning it as I am any other. If a commission is appointed, such as I suggested the other day, I hope that they will not only take into consideration the yards that I talked of, but other yards and stations. I am not here for the purpose of seeing how much money I can get from the people of this country to spend in my district. I believe that whatever is proper for the entire country must be good for Connecticut.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to employ and pay out of the lump appropriations of the several bureaus of the Navy Department such classified civil-service employees as may be necessary to properly perform the clerical, drafting, inspection, messenger, and other classified work at the several navy-yards and stations: Provided, That the Secretary of the Navy shall make to Congress each year in the annual estimates a statement of the persons so employed, their duties, and the compensation paid to each.

Mr. TAWNEY. I reserve the point of order to this paragraph for the purpose of asking the chairman of the committee in regard to the necessity of this provision in view of the provision carried in the last general deficiency appropriation bill, and which the Department and the Auditor have held to be permanent law.

Mr. FOSS. Well, the committee did not regard it as permanent law.

Mr. TAWNEY. It takes the place of that provision for the next fiscal year?

Mr. FOSS. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. It is not intended to be permanent. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the point of order, and doing so, wish to ask——

Mr. STAFFORD. As the point of order is withdrawn, I will renew or reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. STAFFORD. I make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. CALDER. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert the following paragraph:

"The pay of all classified civil-service employees in the United States Navy Department, including civil establishment, shall be in accordance with the recommendations of the committee on grades and salaries, appointed by Executive order of June 11, 1907, as transmitted to Congress by special message of the President dated February 11, 1908, and contained in H. R. Document No. 648."

Mr. FOSS. I make the point of order against that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. PADGETT. I ask that the committee now return to the consideration——

Mr. HOBSON. I offer an amendment, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee proposes to offer an amendment, and the gentleman from Tennessee is recognized.

Mr. PADGETT. I ask to return to page 53, to the paragraph passed the other day, and offer the following amendment.

Mr. HOBSON. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HOBSON. It is whether a recurrence at this point to a previous paragraph will foreclose the offering of an amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Well, the Chair will reach that question when it rises.

Mr. HOBSON. If so, I merely ask to delay the recurrence.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it would make no difference as a matter of fact. The gentleman from Tennessee offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 53, after line 21, insert: "And the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized, from the foregoing appropriation, to make expenditures for repairs and changes on the vessels herein named in an amount not to exceed the sum specified for each vessel, respectively, as follows: The Brooklyn, $453,500; the San Francisco, $600,250; the Baltimore, $683,300; the Alabama, $667,500; the Illinois, $667,500; the Iowa,

$557,500; the Kearsarge, $673,500; the Kentucky, $673,500; the Adder, $46,500; the Bennington, $195,750; the Grampus, $57,500; the Moccasin, $46,500; the Pike, $57,500; the Paul Jones, $77,000; the Nicholson, $25,000; the O'Brien, $25,000; the Narkeeta, $24,000; the Holland, $32,000.88; in all, $5,563,300.88, as per the report of the Secretary of the Navy, House Document No. 656, Sixtieth Congress."

Mr. TAWNEY. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman from Tennessee some questions in regard to this proposed amendment. This amendment is offered in consequence of the paragraph carried in the bill originally going out on a point of order, which gave the Secretary of the Navy general authority to make all these repairs out of the $8,000,000 appropriation for general repairs?

Mr. PADGETT. That is correct.

Mr. TAWNEY. Eight million dollars for general repairs?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes.

Mr. TAWNEY. Now, I want to know from the gentleman from Tennessee how much consideration the committee has given to the necessity of making these repairs, which amount in the aggregate to more than five and a half million dollars, and whether or not the committee has taken into consideration the condition of our public revenue at this time, and whether or not, in the judgment of the committee, these repairs are necessary on these vessels, and whether the expenditure will be made during the next fiscal year?

Mr. PADGETT. I will state to the gentleman from Minnesota that he will find in the statement of Admiral Capps, in the printed hearings, a statement of the matter. Admiral Capps submits as an appendix to these hearings his report in detail. The Secretary of the Navy, in compliance with existing law, submitted a detailed estimate, which I hold here in my hand, giving a statement of the amount required in each of four distinct bureaus, upon each named ship, and describing the nature and character of the work. When Admiral Capps was before the committee, we questioned him about it and he stated that it was needed.

Mr. TAWNEY. On what page of your hearings do you find any testimony taken on these repairs?

Mr. PADGETT. He states on pages 371, 372, and 373, and I have it here if the gentleman desires.

Now, I will state further that these reports were made to the Secretary of the Navy in detail, and he transmitted them to the Speaker of the House, and the Speaker referred them to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and the Admiral went before the committee and stated that these repairs were necessary, that it was important that they be made, and that he had cut out a number of ships on which he declined to make recommendations. He submits a statement showing the ships as to which he had declined to make such recommendations, and states the character of the recommendations which he had refused, and that he had limited his recommendations to things which were absolutely necessary to the fighting efficiency of the ships.

Mr. TAWNEY. I have asked these questions for the purpose of bringing to the attention of the House the fact that we have now entered upon the policy of reconstructing our Navy as well as providing for new construction. The Secretary of the Navy has authority to-day to make the ordinary repairs on any vessel in the service, provided the cost of that repair does not exceed 20 per cent of the cost of the vessel.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Is there a provision by which he can do that without any specific appropriation?

Mr. TAWNEY. Out of the appropriation for general repairs he is authorized to make that expenditure. The repairs authorized by this amendment are extraordinary repairs. In fact, Mr. Chairman, they are not repairs at all, but they are for the reconstruction of the vessel. Otherwise the enormous amount estimated for would not be approved by the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. If a battle ship met with an accident that would require $500,000 or $600,000 to repair, is there an appropriation by which the Secretary could do the work?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of having a full explanation, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

There was no objection.

Mr. PADGETT. I now yield again to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. What I wanted to get from the gentleman from Minnesota is this: Here is an appropriation for repairs, limiting the amount, to each vessel so much. If that is exhausted, if an accident happens to another vessel, or it must be repaired in order to preserve it, out of what fund could that be paid for?

Mr. TAWNEY. I am unable to say, if the appropriation for general repairs is exhausted.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. These are general repairs, are they not?

Mr. TAWNEY. No; these are not general repairs at all.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. What are they, then?

Mr. TAWNEY. These are extraordinary repairs, which, under the provision carried in the last naval appropriation bill, require the Department to come to Congress with specific estimates. They are, in fact, reconstruction, and not repairs at all. I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that the committee came here with a report in favor of five and a half million dollars for repairs on the estimates, and tell us that they have simply accepted the estimate of the Department both as to the necessity of the repairs and as to the amount estimated for as being necessary to make those repairs.

Now, inasmuch as this involves a reconstruction of the Navy, I submit to the House that there ought to be a more careful consideration of these estimates for these extraordinary repairs, for, without a careful investigation, without a careful scrutiny of these estimates, the same abuse may exist hereafter that has existed for a long time, namely, the Secretary of the Navy determining when repairs shall be made and making those repairs irrespective of their cost, provided they can be made within the amount of the appropriation; and even the amount of the appropriation has not heretofore limited these expenditures, for only two years ago the Navy Department came to Congress with a deficiency item of $2,000,000 on account of extraordinary repairs made out of an appropriation for general repairs of vessels in the Navy.

The matter is of such importance that I submit to this House that the estimates for extraordinary repairs or for the reconstruction of the Navy should be given the same careful consideration and scrutiny in this case that are given any other estimate submitted by the Department to Congress for an appropriation.

Now, Mr. Chairman, one word more, which has no relation to this particular amendment. The other day we were discussing the matter of an appropriation for buildings at Olongapo, Subic Bay, and the report of the General Board was referred to, in which report it is stated that a new plan has been agreed upon by the Army and Navy which will result in the abandonment of Subic Bay as a permanent naval base. I have been requested by the Secretary of the Navy to state to the House before the conclusion of the consideration of this bill that that report, as submitted here by the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs and as considered and discussed by the House, has been approved by the two Secretaries and by the President of the United States. It therefore stands as the settled policy of both the War and Navy Departments in respect to the establishment or nonestablishment of a permanent naval base at Olongapo, in Subic Bay.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, the effect of this amendment is to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to make the necessary repairs upon eighteen ships, in order, if necessary, that they can go to Subic Bay.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. PADGETT. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Suppose some ship outside of the eighteen becomes disabled and it is necessary to make repairs upon it?

Mr. PADGETT. There is $2,500,000 for that purpose.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Outside of the five and a half millions?

Mr. PADGETT. Yes; the bill carries $8,000,000 already passed upon by the committee, and this is simply to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to use $5,500,000 of it for these improvements, according to the law passed two years ago.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. If the gentleman's statement is correct, that we have passed under another appropriation $8,000,000, this is $5,500,000 additional, is it not?

Mr. PADGETT. No, it is not; it is in this very section, and of that $8,000,000 this $5,500,000 can be used for this purpose. In this section there is the appropriation of $8,000,000 for general repairs, and this proposed amendment allows $5,500,000 out of it to be used for making the repairs to these particular vessels.

Mr. SABATH. But if the damage exceeds 20 per cent of the estimated cost, there is no authorization for the Secretary to make the repairs?

Mr. PADGETT. None whatever except to these named ships, unless under the provision of the law passed two years ago the vessel is disabled in foreign waters, and then they can expend sufficient upon her to bring her home.

Mr. TAWNEY. If I understand the gentleman, this is an amendment to a paragraph which appropriates $8,000,000 for general repairs?

I would like to have the paragraph read, Mr. Chairman, as it will read if the amendment is adopted and see if, in adopting this amendment, under the language which it contains, it will not add five million and a half dollars to the eight million carried for general repairs.

Mr. PADGETT. Not at all. It is for construction and repairs of vessels, and it proceeds to make appropriation for that purpose and then contains this authorization for the repair of these specific ships. The necessity for that is by reason of the law passed two years ago. Now, Mr. Chairman, I call for a vote.

Mr. TAWNEY. I would like to have the paragraph read as it will read when amended.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the amendment.

Mr. TAWNEY. I want the paragraph read with the amendment.

Mr. PADGETT. Mr. Chairman, this is simply making specific what is general in the proviso that went out.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the paragraph "Construction and repair of vessels," together with the amendment as proposed.

There was no objection, and the Clerk reported the paragraph with the amendment.

Mr. HULL of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman should amend that, unless he wants to appropriate this entire amount in addition to his $8,000,000, because it does not provide that this sum shall come out of the $8,000,000.

Mr. PADGETT. In order to make it absolutely plain, I will ask to add to the first part of the amendment "and out of the aforesaid $8,000,000 the Secretary of the Navy," and so forth.

Mr. TAWNEY. After the word "authorized" to add "from the foregoing appropriation."

Mr. PADGETT. That is all right. Put it in that way.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, after the word "authorized," in the first line of the amendment, the words "from the foregoing appropriation," so as to read "and the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized from the foregoing appropriation to make expenditures for repairs, etc."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendmen was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs upon the amendment as amended.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read:

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 79, after line 26, add:
"The Secretary of the Navy is hereby further authorized to pay out of the appropriation for coal and transportation the sum of $2,500, under such rules and regulations as he may establish, for prizes to be awarded vessels for economy in the expenditure of coal."

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HOBSON. I request the gentleman to reserve his point of order.

Mr. FOSS. I would say that it is so late, that I do not think——

Mr. HOBSON. I wish the gentleman especially to reserve it. There are reasons why it ought to be reserved. I am a member of the committee, and as such I request the chairman of the committee——

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I call for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is asked for. The Chair has sustained the point of order.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I will reserve it for three minutes, inasmuch as the gentleman is a member of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not reserve it for three minutes. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. HOBSON. Mr. Chairman, since this bill has been completed report has come from the commander in chief of our fleet that prizes, which he has endeavored to establish for the engineer's force, have resulted in the saving of about ten tons per day on every great ship of his squadron, which makes a saving of about $2,500 in three days.

The cost of these prizes pay for themselves in three days, and then they will save to the Government about $250,000 in the next year, with the fleet moving around the world. Furthermore, this gives zest to and quickens interest of the men down in the bunkers and the boiler rooms, who bear the brunt of the toil in these long voyages. We have just provided $130,000 for targets and target practice, for prizes and rewards for the men behind the guns. Can we not do something for the men in front of the machinery, when at the same time we save the Government nearly $300,000 in doing it and add to the general efficiency of the service? [Applause.]

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I insist upon the point of order.

Mr. HOBSON. I ask the gentleman to withdraw the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill with the amendments thereto with a favorable recommendation.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MANN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 20471, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules, concur in the amendments, and pass the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois moves to suspend the rules, concur in the amendments, and pass the bill. Is a second demanded?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi demands a second.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that a second may be considered as ordered.

Mr. WILLIAMS. With sincere regret, I can not grant that consent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOSS] will take their places as tellers.

The question was taken and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 140, noes 56.

So a second was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules, concurring in the amendments, and passing the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, under the rules the gentleman from Illinois has twenty minutes and I have twenty minutes.

The SPEAKER. Well, neither gentleman addressed the Chair, and the Chair proceeded to put the question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The gentleman from Mississippi was addressing the Chair with all possible haste, while the Chair, possibly with greater haste, was trying to put the question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi is recognized——

Mr. WILLIAMS. For twenty minutes?

The SPEAKER. The rule, the Chair regrets to say, gives the gentleman twenty minutes. [Great laughter and applause.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I have always honored the Speaker for his frankness, and I never more than a moment ago when he said he "regretted to say that the rule did give the gentleman from Mississippi twenty minutes." I know that the Speaker meant it. I know that he meant it with all his heart, and I appreciate the frankness and sincerity with which he spoke. It is needless for me to say, Mr. Speaker, I did not have any desire or idea of addressing the House just at this moment, but I never find it out of place to read lessons upon civic righteousness to the Republican party [applause on the Democratic side], especially in this House. Mr. Speaker, I shall read as a part of my remarks certain letters which I hold in my hand concerning the great question of putting wood pulp and print paper upon the free list. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not speaking upon the question before the House.

The SPEAKER. The question before the House is on agreeing to the recommendation of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want to be heard upon the point of order.

The SPEAKER (continuing). And concurring in the amendments and passing the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And the gentleman from New York makes the point of order that wood pulp and free print paper are not germane to that question. Now, I wish to establish beyond all peradventure of a doubt that they are. I shall now argue the point of order. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Now, Mr. Speaker, of the very highest necessity to the maintenance of a navy is the spread of intelligence among the people—now hampered by a tariff tax on wood pulp and print paper—so that they may know [applause on the Democratic side] how much of a navy is necessary for national defense——

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I renew the point of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS (continuing). So all legislation that contributes to the cheapness of the dissemination of information by repealing the tax contributes to the efficiency of the Navy.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi will please suspend. The gentleman from New York renews his point of order. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Chair holds, then, that that is not germane to the question?

The SPEAKER. The Chair holds that the remarks of the gentleman from Mississippi are not germane to the question before the House.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I must address myself to the passage of the naval appropriation bill entirely.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi will proceed in order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand the ruling of the Chair to be that it is in order to talk about navies and the Navy. Very well, then, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not answer questions as to what might be. The Chair can only rule on questions as they arise.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I find, as a sailor man, from a careful study of the history of the world that the construction of ships and their navigation and fighting on them and with them go back to a very remote period. I find that in the beginning of historical time men fought and gloriously slaughtered one another in canoes, and later on in skiffs, and still later on in galleys propelled by oars.

I find that still later on they invented sails, and, catching each cupful of wind as it might come, directed their course as best they could, crossing the waterways and attacking the fleet of an enemy or fleeing tactically and with discretion, "the better part of valor," from him; and from that day to this the genius of mankind in warfare, in the management of ships, has been directed to getting away from one another when they were fleeing or of catching one another when they were desirous of fighting. [Laughter.] Therefore, Mr. Speaker, in the consideration of this bill it is of the very utmost importance to consider whether or not an American Navy in the present day can get away from an enemy as rapidly as one could in those distant days to which I have been referring, or whether the American Navy to-day could get at an enemy as effectively as in those remote periods of time, for all of which scientific matters of nautical inquiry I see by the expression of the countenance of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], the active leader of an inactive majority, he has the utmost contempt. [Laughter.]

Still later, Mr. Speaker, when human science and progress had advanced the civilization of the world and had degraded it also by teaching men more effective ways of murdering one another, they put cannon loaded with vile saltpetre, "but for which I myself had been a soldier," or sailor, and with bullets upon the decks of ships, and fired them broadcast at one another, regardless of women to be made widows and children to be made orphans, while "man, dressed in a little brief authority, most ignorant of what he was most proud," was "seeking the bauble reputation in the cannon's mouth."

Then, Mr. Speaker, I find a little later on they began to build ships, not out of wood alone, but out of iron.

Mr. HOBSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I can not yield just now. I find that railroad iron cased the first protected ships, and the naval construction of those days was, for those days, remarkably new, and it would have been very foolish to have built too much of a navy plated with railroad iron, for fear an improvement soon might make them obsolete. So our wise ancestors only built a few of them, about two battle ships at a time, so that they could keep up with new types, and new types arose.

I now yield for a question to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON], an expert upon this question.

Mr. HOBSON. I simply rise to ask the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] whether in full consideration of all the history of naval architecture he finally finds himself on the side of the Merrimac or the Monitor?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I was just about to say that at the time the genius of the South had clothed an old ship hull with railroad iron some genius from north of the line invented the Monitor, lying low in the water, a little bit of "a cheese box upon a raft," and these two ships had a great battle down at Hampton Roads. Once more the lesson was taught of not making appropriation for too many battle ships at the same time. [Great laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, I ask order. I am solemly "declaring upon my" legislative "responsibility" my idea of what is good for the American people and best for the American Navy. I ask that the gentlemen shall listen to me with attention and not with laughter. Now, I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBSON] again.

Mr. HOBSON. In view of the wonderful condition that existed between the Merrimac and the Monitor, that the United States had both kinds of armored ships, that at that time a foreign nation was contemplating whether it would recognize the Southern Confederacy or not, I would like to ask if the fact that America had the greatest navy in the world and the two armor clads in the world, whether that fact had anything to do with the nation deciding not to acknowledge the independence of the Confederacy?

Mr. WILLIAMS. This is a serious occasion, and the gentleman must not take up too much of my time. [Laughter.] Mr. Speaker, I ask for protection, because I wish to express my ideas.

Mr. Speaker, once more I paraphrase Shakespeare when it was said, "Still harping on my daughter." I go back now to my original proposition. After the Monitor was invented, somebody invented a still superior ship to the Monitor, not only capable of resisting shot and shell, but capable also of navigating the deep ocean amid bad winds and bad weather.

Again, it was proven that it would not have been wise to have constructed too many Monitors, not over about two at a time. Then, a few years ago, we undertook to build some ships of 7,000, 8,000, and 10,000 tons. Then we were informed that naval architecture had advanced and that we ought not to build ships of less tonnage than 10,000 or 12,000. Then we had one more reason why we were not justified in constructing more than two of the old sort at one time. [Laughter.] And now I think we will be justified in not favoring over two at a time of these, because if Kaiser Wilhelm, "our great opposite" war lord, hears we have constructed some of these 10,000-ton ships he is going to construct some of 15,000 instead of 10,000; and then we would have to have this committee say we will construct two of 15,000 tons. The war lords must keep on grounds of equality with one another. It is the policy of human nature. If we construct more than two of these, we will have constructed too many inferior types of vessels, leaving to future ingenuity of men to construct all sorts of superior vessels outrunning or outshooting ours, and thus rendering our "love's labor lost." [Laughter.]

I hope now I have answered to the full bent every word of argument made by the gentleman from Illinois in his proposition to pass this bill under a two-thirds rule on this long-drawn-out nine-day-long suspension day.

Without fearing that I have not, I want to say a few words more. Not only do ships sail the seas to fight one another now, but we are informed by a good many hopeful gentlemen who are expert on matters of this aerial sort that it will not be long before ships are sailing through the air; and when they do begin to sail through the air, we all know human nature—its barbarity, cruelty, and violence—well enough to know that it will not be long before we are equipping, perhaps armoring, ironcladding, and officering, and manning dirigible balloons for the purpose of destroying—no, not for the purpose of destroying anything, not for the purpose of making war at all, but for the purpose of preparing for peace [great laughter], for the purpose of filling the minds of the world with the idea that it is the ardent desire of the American people to go armed in order that it may have no occasion or opportunity to attack anybody. [Great laughter.]

Mr. HOBSON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; but I desire to say that I have answered the argument of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. Foss], who has so forcibly controlled the time in favor of the motion. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOBSON. I regret very much to take any time from the gentleman. I trust that the gentleman will have unanimous consent that this interruption be not taken out of his time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. HOBSON. It is simply to ask the gentleman if he were going to be in a fleet of balloon ships, and were going to meet another fleet of balloon ships, whether, being in the American fleet of balloon ships, and the enemy being in another class of balloon ships [laughter], he being desirous of keeping his own lofty altitude, and not wishing his tire to be punctured at 10,000 feet in the air, whether he would not prefer to have balloon ships of a little different and better type and a few more of them than the other fellow? [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HOBSON. And further, if you could judge by the oratorical powers displayed whether, with a puncture, there would not be, perhaps, danger of more hot air escaping than there is to-day. [Great laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. More than there is to-day, but not more than there was yesterday and the day before. [Great and continued laughter.] Mr. Speaker, I do not want you to understand—for I have the highest regard for your good opinion—I do not want you to understand that I am uselessly consuming the time of this House, and I would not have you or this House to understand, as probably you might from the nature of the question propounded by my young kinsman, the gentleman from Alabama, that I was up in the air in this argument. I am not. I have been merely referring him to the proposition that if fellows are ever to fight battles in the air, with air guns or other aerial weapons, that the eloquence and the oratory of my friend from Alabama will keep pace with the altitude of the other fellow. [Laughter.] And yet there never will be a time when his eloquence could exercise the influence upon him that it did upon me the other day.

I tell you, Mr. Speaker, when he described to me and you how the Japs are yearning for my blood and the blood and property of my children, and in blood-curdling vein how the great yellow race is prepared to inevitably conduct a war upon the great white race, and how we must prepare to take care of ourselves, after we got through with that argument I feared very much for all mankind and for myself and had to retire to the cloakroom for five or ten minutes to smoke, in order that my affrighted imagination could settle down and my reason once more take cool possession of me. [Great laughter and applause.]

Mr. HOBSON. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, certainly.

Mr. HOBSON. I simply rose to ask the gentleman whether, when he retired——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, by the way, one thing before the gentleman goes on. I forgot to say in answer to the gentleman's last question that on the first balloon battle-ship appropriation I shall stand for appropriating for two balloons, plus their armor and air guns, at a time, and no more. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOBSON. Will the gentleman say whether, when discussing the naval appropriation bill, he has nightmares over the Japs and retires to the deep recesses of the cloakroom to receive inspiration therefrom, and then ventures forth upon the floor of this House and on a battle-ship appropriation—a question that is not partisan—tells his followers that it is a party question?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, this question of suspending the rules is partisan. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOBSON. And when he makes a speech on the floor of the House, coming from that inspiration, and tells so poor a yarn as he did yesterday——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, now, Mr. Speaker, I decline to be interrupted any further. When a man criticises my reasoning powers, I do not mind it. When a man criticises my sanity, I do not mind it. When a man criticises my personal pulchritude, I can reconcile myself to that. Even when he questions my statesmanship, as profoundly as I reverence it, I can preserve my equanimity; but when a man tells me that I have told a poor joke, it makes me hot under the collar. [Laughter.] "Is thy servant to be made to quit joking and versing both?" Why, Mr. Speaker, if I have two specialties in the world, they are jokes and poetry—principally other people's. And now, Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is to criticise the one to death after the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. DALZELL] has murdered all appetite for the other. [Laughter.] Mr. Speaker, you know it has been my inoffensive habit now and then to draw upon this Republican House a beautiful little poem and, in punishment of "its manifold sins," to read it—verse, at any rate, if not poetry—but the other day, after the gentleman from Pennsylvania got through with his poetry, which halted upon only one foot, with the other one, if any, upon a crutch, and which sometimes saved and sometimes missed the rhyme, I thought of those words of Macbeth, "Sleep no more! Macbeth hath murdered sleep."

And so I announce now to the American Congress, and notwithstanding the objections of my friend from New York [Mr. PAYNE], I announce to the country that I shall henceforth, to avoid his muse, "verse no more, for DALZELL hath murdered verse." [Prolonged laughter and applause.]

Mr. HOBSON. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed one minute more——

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to suspend the rules, agree to the amendments, and pass the bill. All those in favor will say "aye"——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided, and there were—ayes 175, noes 83.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, owing to the evident hasty dilatoriness and absent-mindedness of the Speaker in making the count, I call for tellers. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that that motion is dilatory.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Why, Mr. Speaker, it could not possibly consume the time that the Chair saved in counting. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order. In the opinion of the Chair, two-thirds having——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on suspending the rules, agreeing to the amendments, and passing the bill. All those in favor will say "aye," those opposed will say "no," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken, and there were—yeas, 265, nays 11, answered "present" 9, not voting 102, as follows:

So a majority having voted in favor thereof, the rules were suspended and the bill, with amendments, was passed.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to know if I am recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WATSON). The gentleman is not recorded.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I was present when the roll was called.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Was the gentleman present and listening when his name was called and failed to hear it?

Mr. SAUNDERS. I was not listening just at that moment. I intended to vote, but my attention was diverted for a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The rule forbids the Speaker to entertain the request unless the gentleman was in his seat listening when his name should have been called and failed to hear it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I rise to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting a sentence which I will read to the House: Sink or swim, survive or perish, live or die.

Mr. PAYNE. Regular order, Mr. Speaker, and I hope that the Speaker will see that the remark of the gentleman does not go into the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is demanded, which is the announcement of the vote.

The result of the vote was then announced, as above recorded.

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BARTLETT of Georgia. I rise for the purpose of preferring a request, which I think is privileged. I ask that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LOUDENSLAGER] and myself may by unanimous consent extend our remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LOUDENSLAGER] and himself may be permitted to extend remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I am in a position where I must, if the two requests are coupled, object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Mississippi objects.

SENATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills and resolutions of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. COUSINS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 20345, the diplomatic and consular appropriation bill, and pending that I move that general debate be limited to five hours.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, pending that motion, I move——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. COUSINS] can not close general debate without going into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. PAYNE. Oh, the gentleman is not familiar with some of our new rules. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of order if the gentleman from Mississippi is going to make a speech.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from New York.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now take a recess until 11.30 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 52 minutes p. m.) the House recessed until 11.30 o'clock a. m. to-morrow.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, April 17, 1908.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. EDWARD E. HALE.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Wednesday last, when, on request of Mr. MCCREARY, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispended with.

FINDINGS OF THE COURT OF CLAIMS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a certified copy of the findings of fact filed by the court in the cause of O. M. Davis, jr., administrator of C. L. Davis, deceased, v. United States, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 20471) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had appointed Mr. TAWNEY a conferee on the part of the House upon the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill in the place of Mr. Brick, deceased.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill H. R. 17305, an act to regulate the establishment and maintenance of private hospitals and asylums in the District of Columbia, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice-President.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT presented memorials of sundry organizations of Nebraska, Texas, Michigan, Pennsylvania, Missouri, Minnesota, California, New York, Ohio, District of Columbia, Iowa, Kentucky, Colorado, Massachusetts, New Jersey and Illinois, remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to prohibit the interstate transportation of intoxicating liquors, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. GALLINGER. I present sundry letters from citizens of various States, protesting against Sunday legislation as proposed in a bill now before the Committee on the District of Columbia.

I also present 608 telegrams on the same subject, having presented several hundred telegrams previously. I move that they all be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SCOTT. On the same subject as that on which the Senator from New Hampshire has just offered petitions, I present a few telegrams. I will state that I think I have received several hundred, if not a thousand, letters protesting against the passage of the Sunday bill. I move that the telegrams be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GALLINGER presented a petition of the East Washington Citizens' Association of the District of Columbia, praying for the enactment of legislation providing for the elimination of grade crossings in the city of Washington, D. C., which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a petition of the Central Labor Union of Wichita, Kans., praying for the enactment of legislation granting relief to those who are injured in mining disasters, which was referred to the Committee on Mines and Mining.

Mr. MONEY presented a joint resolution of the legislature of Mississippi, which was referred to the Committee on Pensions and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A joint resolution memorializing Members of Congress to pass a law appropriating cotton-tax fund now in the United States Treasury to pension ex-Confederate soldiers and their widows and orphans.

Whereas there has remained in the United States Treasury for a number of years a sum approximating $60,000,000 illegally collected as a tax on cotton produced and marketed in Southern States during the years 1865, 1866, 1867, and 1868; and

Whereas, after the passage of so many years, it becomes impossible to secure the return of this tax in an equalized manner to the greater number of those who paid this illegal tax; and

Whereas recognizing it is the wish and desire of the people of the Southern cotton-growing States who paid this tax and their descendants that this fund, now held by the United States Treasury, be paid out for the pensioning of old ex-Confederate soldiers, their widows and orphans, understandingly by this method would in a practicable way reach the class of people who bore this injustice: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate (the house of representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States is hereby respectfully memorialized and urged to pass a law authorizing and instructing the Treasurer of the United States to pay over this cotton-tax fund to the treasurers of the different Southern cotton-growing States in the proportion as each State contributed and paid this tax that constitutes this fund, for the purpose of distributing the same as pensions to the old Confederate soldiers as the legislatures of the different States may deem proper: Be it further

Resolved, That the Members of Congress from Mississippi are earnestly requested to take such steps as will aid in accomplishing this end.

Mr. HOPKINS presented a petition of the Columbia Damen Club, of Chicago, Ill., praying for the enactment of legislation to regulate the employment of child labor, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of Federal Labor Union, No. 1241, American Federation of Labor, of Carpentersville, Ill., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia, which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also presented a memorial of the Robert Emmet Memorial Association, of Buffalo, N. Y., remonstrating against the ratification of the treaty of arbitration between the United States and Great Britain, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a memorial of the Lake Seamen's Union, of Chicago, Ill., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to amend section 4463 of the Revised Statutes relating to the complement of crews of vessels, which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented petitions of Local Union No. 1, Commercial Telegraphers' Union of America, of Chicago; of Local Union No. 125, Amalgamated Association of Street Railway Employees of America, of East St. Louis, and of Local Union No. 750, United Mine Workers of America, of Dewey Station, all in the State of Illinois, praying for the adoption of certain amendments to the so-called "Sherman antitrust law," relating to labor organizations, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I notice in the RECORD that the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], on Wednesday last, said to the Senate that the District of Columbia appropriation bill would be reported to the Senate this morning.

I had hoped that the committee would be able to complete that bill, so as to report it this morning, but it has been found an impossible task. I wish now to say that on to-morrow the bill will be reported for the purpose of having it printed and considered as soon as possible thereafter.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WETMORE, from the Committee on the Library, to whom was referred the bill (S. 643) for the erection of a monument to the memory of Gen. Patrick Edward Connor, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 523) thereon.

Mr. du PONT, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3919) granting an honorable discharge to Philip McCormick, submitted an adverse report (No. 524) thereon, which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. CARTER, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (S. 6484) to establish postal savings banks for depositing savings at interest with the security of the Government for repayment thereof, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 525) thereon.

Mr. McCUMBER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally with amendments and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 1062) granting an increase of pension to Charles C. Weaver (Report No. 526); and

A bill (H. R. 1991) granting an increase of pension to Jerry Murphy (Report No. 527).

Mr. SUTHERLAND, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5520) to authorize the allotment to J. Morris Cook of his proportionate share in any of the land of the Grande Ronde Reservation, formerly belonging to the Umpqua tribe of Indians, and for other purposes, submitted an adverse report (No. 528) thereon, which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. BEVERIDGE, from the Committee on Territories, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5820) ratifying an act of the legislative assembly of the Territory of Arizona providing for the erection of a court-house and jail at Yuma, in Yuma County, Territory of Arizona, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 529) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5816) ratifying chapters 57 and 61 of the session laws of the twenty-third Arizona legislative assembly providing for the issuance of bonds by Mohave County to erect court-house and jail in said county, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 530) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5818) ratifying an act of the Arizona legislature providing for the erection of a court-house at St. Johns, in Apache County, Ariz., reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 531) thereon.

FORT DOUGLAS MILITARY RESERVATION EASEMENT.

Mr. WARNER. I report back from the Committee on Military Affairs, without amendment, the bill (S. 6200) granting a perpetual easement and right of way to Salt Lake City, Utah, for the construction, operation, maintenance, repair, and renewal of a conduit and pipe line and valve houses upon and across the Fort Douglas Military Reservation, and I submit a report (No. 522) thereon. I call the attention of the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] to the bill.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The bill just reported is one of only local concern and it has the approval of the War Department. I ask for its immediate consideration.

Mr. SCOTT. I ask the Senator to state the object of the bill more fully, so that the Senate may understand what is contemplated by it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The bill simply grants a right of way across the Fort Douglas Military Reservation for the construction, operation, and maintenance of a pipe line and necessary valve houses in connection with it. The bill sufficiently guards, I think, the rights of the Government, and, as I have already stated, it has the approval of the War Department. I see no reason why it should not be passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill for the information of the Senate.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. CULBERSON. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill a question. It seems to grant a perpetual easement to the municipality of Salt Lake City. Is there any reservation in the bill of a right to modify or amend the act?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The bill gives the War Department entire control over the matter. If the Secretary will again read the latter part of the bill, the Senator from Texas will see how it is guarded.

Mr. CULBERSON. May I ask that the latter part of the bill be read?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested by the Senator from Texas.

The Secretary read as follows:

Provided, That the said conduit and pipe line must be at all times maintained entirely below the surface of the ground; that the ground must be at all times kept in such condition as will enable troops to pass over the same without hindrance; that no fences shall be constructed to prevent the passage of troops and that all work done upon the reservation in pursuance of this grant shall be to the satisfaction of the post commander and under such regulations as he may prescribe in the interest of good order and discipline, and that in case of the removal of the conduit or pipe line or any of the valve houses the ground shall be restored by the grantee to its original condition.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LANDS IN WISCONSIN.

Mr. CLAPP. For the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] I report favorably from the Committee on Indian Affairs the bill (S. 4723) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to issue patents in fee to the Protestant Episcopal Church for certain lands in Wisconsin set apart for the use of the said church for missionary purposes among the Oneida Indians. I report the bill without amendment and submit a report (No. 521) thereon. It being a local measure, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 20471. An act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1909, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

REGULATION OF INJUNCTIONS.

Mr. OVERMAN. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 3732) regulating injunctions and the practice of the district and circuit courts of the United States.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read for the information of the Senate.

The SECRETARY. The Committee on the Judiciary proposes to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That no temporary or interlocutory injunction, or temporary restraining order, or decree suspending or restraining the enforcement, operation, or execution of any statute of any State by restraining the action of any officer of such State in the enforcement or execution of such statute shall be issued or granted by any circuit or district court of the United States or by any judge or justice thereof upon the ground of unconstitutionality of the statute, unless the application for the same shall be presented to a circuit judge and shall be heard and determined, upon issue made and proof taken by affidavit or otherwise, by three judges, of whom two shall be circuit judges, and the third may be either a circuit or a district judge, and unless a majority of said three judges shall concur in granting such application. Whenever such application, as aforesaid, is presented to a circuit judge he shall immediately call to his assistance, to hear and determine the application, one circuit judge and one district judge or another circuit judge. Said application shall not be heard and determined until five days' notice of the hearing has been given to the governor and attorney-general of the State and such other persons as may be defendants in the suit: Provided, That if a majority of said judges are of the opinion, at the time notice of said hearing is given as aforesaid, that irreparable loss and damage would result to the applicant unless a temporary restraining order, pending the period of the required notice, is granted, a majority of said judges may grant such order, but the same shall only remain in force until the hearing and determination of the application, upon due notice, as aforesaid, has taken place. That an appeal may be taken directly to the Supreme Court of the United States from any order or decree granting or denying, after notice and hearing, a temporary or interlocutory injunction or restraining order in such case; and the hearing of such appeal shall take precedence over all other cases except those of a similar character and criminal cases.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on the Judiciary.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HEYBURN. I would be pleased to hear from the Senator having the bill in charge the purpose of this proposed legislation, which is of quite wide significance.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, in certain States in the United States, to wit, in Alabama, North Carolina, Minnesota, and other States of the Union, a Federal judge enjoined in certain cases the officers of those States from enforcing the State statutes.

I myself, Mr. President, in the last Congress and also in this Congress, asserted that the right of injunction should be taken away from the district and circuit judges, where the State was a party, and in the rate cases especially, wherever the petition was to enjoin a State officer from enforcing the State statutes, I contended that Congress has a right to take away from Federal judges the power to issue temporary injunctions. We discussed the question for more than three months here. It was seriously doubted whether Congress had that power or not, and the Senate so decided that Congress did not have that power when it defeated the Bailey amendment.

Since the decision in the Minnesota case and in the North Carolina case many bills have been introduced in the Senate to correct the evil. Early in the session I myself introduced a bill which was more drastic than this, which provided that no injunction should be issued by any Federal judge to suspend any State statute or restrain any State officer from enforcing a State statute.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. OVERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. GALLINGER. I simply wish to inquire of the Senator from North Carolina if this is a unanimous report from the Committee on the Judiciary?

Mr. OVERMAN. It is. I want to say that this substitute for Senate bill 3732 is a unanimous report from the committee. I wish to say that there were some bills more drastic than this, and of the bills one was introduced by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] and another by the late Senator from Florida, Mr. Bryan, and two by myself, and was referred to a subcommittee. The distinguished Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON], who I think has no superior on this floor as a lawyer or as a statesman, prepared the substitute which was reported back to the full committee and unanimously agreed to.

This measure proposes that whenever a petition is presented the circuit judge before whom it is presented shall, before granting the injunction, call in one circuit judge and one district judge or another circuit court judge, making three judges who shall pass upon the question of the injunction.

We think, sir, that if this could be done it would allay much intense feeling in the States. As was said by Mr. Justice Harlan, in his dissenting opinion in the Minnesota case, we have come to a sad day when one subordinate Federal judge can enjoin the officer of a sovereign State from proceeding to enforce the laws of the State passed by the legislature of his own State, and thereby suspending for a time the laws of the State. In other words, in effect we thought under the eleventh amendment a State could not be sued, but the Supreme Court, in the Minnesota case, says a suit against the attorney-general of a State is not a suit against the State. That being so, there being great feeling among the people of the States by reason of the fact that one Federal judge has tied the hands of a sovereign State and enjoined in this manner the great officer who is charged with the enforcement of the laws of the State, causing almost a revolution, as it did in my State, and in order to allay this feeling, if this substitute is adopted and three judges have to pass upon the question of the constitutionality of a State statute and three great judges say that the statute is unconstitutional, the officers of the State will be less inclined to resist the orders and decrees of our Federal courts. The people and the courts of the State are more inclined to abide by the decision of three judges than they would of one subordinate inferior Federal judge who simply upon petition or upon a hearing should tie the hands of a State officer from proceeding with the enforcement of the laws of his sovereign State. This is a substitute for my bill, and while it does not go as far as I would like I hope the substitute will be adopted. Therefore we have submitted this substitute, believing that it will remedy this great evil to some extent.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment as a substitute for the substitute reported by the committee.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

That section 720 of the Revised Statutes of the United States be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 720. That the writ of injunction shall not be granted by any court of the United States to stay proceedings in any court of a State except in cases where such injunction may be authorized by any law relating to proceedings in bankruptcy. Nor shall a writ of injunction or a restraining order be granted by any court of the United States against officers of any State in executing State laws until upon the final hearing and determination of the cause by the court where such action was instituted."

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, that amendment ought not to be adopted, because one part of it would absolutely prohibit the courts in any case from issuing any other than a final injunction. I can briefly explain it, if it needs any explanation. I do not think it does.

The object of the proposed legislation is simply to provide that when an application is made for the purpose of obtaining an interlocutory or temporary injunction or a temporary restraining order to restrain the officer of a State, like the governor or the attorney-general, from executing the laws of the State, such applications shall be heard and considered before three Federal judges, two of whom shall be circuit judges, and the third one may be either a district or circuit judge; and it requires two of the judges, or a majority of them, to concur in granting the injunction.

It further provides that, except in cases of irreparable damages or injury, there shall be five days' notice of hearing given. Then the bill further provides that an appeal shall lie directly to the Supreme Court from any order granting or denying such application.

The real material difference is that in cases of this kind so important as to restrain the execution of a State law by State officials applications for injunction ought to be considered and passed upon by three Federal judges. The same principle, I may say, was brought into our jurisprudence by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] when he was Attorney-General of the United States. Under the law commonly called the "expediting law" the noted Northern Securities case was tried. It was tried before three Federal judges, and an appeal was taken directly to the Supreme Court. In the amendatory interstate-commerce act that we passed in the last Congress we adopted the same principle in reference to judicial proceedings under that act. It is exactly the same principle that was inaugurated by the Senator from Pennsylvania in reference to the Northern Securities case that is applied in reference to what it is proposed to do in this case. I can see no objection to it. I think the Judiciary Committee were all agreed, practically, on the matter.

Mr. BURKETT. Mr. President, I want to say in reply to the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. NELSON] that I have not been entirely oblivious or uncertain as to the objections that would be raised to the substitute which I offer. It is in exact form of a bill which I introduced on this subject some time ago after a good deal of consideration and I will say after a good deal of conference and consultation with some very eminent lawyers of the country.

In my opinion it will reach in a constitutional and proper way a need, and do it in a better way than the measure which the committee has reported. If the Senators will make a comparison of the two bills, they will find that the bill the committee has reported in no wise changes the right of the court to issue injunctions, temporary or otherwise, or "hair-trigger" injunctions, as they have at times been denominated—that is, injunctions apparently without consideration. It only involves the machinery by which those temporary injunctions can be issued and, in my opinion, makes it so cumbersome that it will not be practical nor in the end very satisfactory.

Suppose, perchance, there were a certain judge who wanted to issue an injunction of that sort improperly, and I am not even insinuating that there would be; but if there were a judge who might be inclined to issue an injunction improperly or without sufficient reason, it would be possible for him to call to himself perhaps at least one judge, and together they would make two, or a majority, who could issue an injunction just as improperly as it is possible for a single judge to do. The judge before whom the matter is brought has the selecting of the other two judges to act with him under the provisions of the committee bill.

The amendment which I have offered in the way of a substitute does not prohibit courts from issuing an injunction after the merits of the case have been heard. It simply prohibits them from issuing temporary injunctions, or injunctions before a hearing of the case. Those of us who have had occasion in the past to look up the history of the cases that have reached the Supreme Court and those that are reported in the Federal Reporter as coming from the circuit court of appeals will find that in a great many of those cases the lower courts themselves, after the hearing of the merits of the case, have set aside the temporary injunction that they originally issued before they had given the case a hearing on its merits. Notwithstanding that fact, by reason of an appeal to the Supreme Court, that temporary injunction has followed the case clear through, and the matter has been tied up by reason of a wrong injunction, as determined and adjudged by the circuit court itself afterwards, after a hearing. There was a wrong judgment in a matter of temporary injunction issued before hearing, and to the great damage and detriment of the State, and, I presume, possibly to the chagrin of the court that first made the order.

The amendment which I have introduced simply provides that a court can not issue an injunction until after it has heard the case—that is, after a final hearing of the case in the court where it originated.

Now, to be sure, someone may say that that may result in a great injury being done. That question, I think, was discussed somewhat in the recent Minnesota case, where it was suggested that, if the courts did not have the right to issue preliminary injunctions, great injury would have been done. But, on the other hand, we must remember that in the cases where this preliminary injunction has been issued wrongfully great injury has been done to the other side of the case. The States and the people have suffered injustice and hardship.

I take this position in reference to this sort of legislation: I will say this is an important matter, and, in my opinion, Congress, sooner or later, must take hold of it and determine by legislation, if it can—and, in my opinion, it can—as to where the line of demarcation is between State and Federal authorities in this class of cases.

I remember the excitement which was precipitated a year ago by the decision in the North Carolina cases, and we all will recall that at that time there was a very strained condition between Federal and State authority. It apparently would have taken only a match thrown into the box of tinder to have exploded the whole thing. But, as I now recall, it was the good sense and good judgment of the railroad people themselves, in finally determining to conform to the law until the matter could be heard, that perhaps quieted things in that State and prevented any possibility of an outburst of something that might have been very detrimental, or at least very embarrassing, both to the Federal and State authorities.

In my opinion we have had illustrations enough of this thing in the past to show that there will come a time when Congress must, if it can, define the line of demarcation between Federal authority and State authority in this particular line of cases. I have never been one of those who have had any great fear of the conflict of Federal authority and State authority. In my opinion there is no conflict and what seems a conflict is only the inability to see just where the one ends and the other begins. I believe there is a strong line of demarcation. It does not make so much difference, in my opinion, to the State or to the Federal authority where that line of demarcation is, but it is very important and very essential, in my mind, that we should know where that line of demarcation is. State and Federal laws will easily and readily conform to it if it is definitely known. I find that it varies somewhat from the view point of the observer. When you look at it from one side it spells one thing; and when you look at it from another side it spells another thing. In my opinion we ought to say by legislation just where that line of demarcation is.

The eleventh amendment, that is in controversy, in all these cases was itself adopted because of a lawsuit. That lawsuit was where a man of one State sued another State in the Federal court. The jurisdiction of the Federal court was disputed and it took a constitutional amendment to make it certain.

The people who were most instrumental in passing the Constitution believed, as we will find if we read the Federalist and the debates upon the Constitution at that time, that no citizen of one State had the right to sue another State; yet it came up in a lawsuit, and the Supreme Court decided that such a citizen did have a right to sue another State.

The unanimity with which Congress and the people adopted the eleventh amendment must persuade us that the people construed the Constitution in its adoption to mean differently than what the court said it meant. But the lawsuit decided otherwise, and the eleventh amendment was adopted.

I will say also that right at that time, when the eleventh amendment was adopted, the first portion of this proposed substitute was enacted into law. And I do not want the Senate to think that all of this which has been read is my amendment. This portion of the substitute which I have offered is the present law.

SEC. 720. That the writ of injunction shall not be granted by any court of the United States to stay proceedings in any court of a State, except in cases where such injunction may be authorized by any law relating to proceedings in bankruptcy.

As I have stated, that is the present law. During the time that that constitutional amendment was pending for adoption by the States, the first part of that was passed in 1793. The latter part, with reference to bankruptcy, was passed in 1873. The portion which I propose to add is this:

Nor shall a writ of injunction or a restraining order be granted by any court of the United States against officers of any State in executing State laws until upon the final hearing and determination of the cause by the court where such action was instituted.

Now, as I was saying, from the time the eleventh amendment was adopted on down to the present, the courts have been determining in perhaps forty-odd cases where that line of demarcation is and what the eleventh amendment means. In two-thirds of those cases perhaps, for one reason or another, the courts have held that it did not prevent suing of State officers; and in a third, or a little more, of those cases the court has held that it meant that you could not sue State officers. In this one-third, or a little more, it has been held that you could not sue State officers because it was a suit against the State and prohibited by the eleventh amendment. But all the way along in all those cases there have been dissenting opinions. While the court may have decided, by a majority opinion, that suits against State officers were not in violation of the eleventh amendment, there has been a minority in almost every instance of the court, or at least in many instances, that has held that it was in violation of the eleventh amendment. And I may say that in many of those cases where they have held the reverse there has also been a dissenting opinion. I will say, though I have not taken pains to examine all of the cases, in most of them there has been a dissenting opinion holding the other way. So that we see that in each particular case there has been some question and a divided court. And I undertake to say that to-day, after a century of construction, that no dozen lawyers could be found that would agree just when a case comes within the prohibition of the eleventh amendment. To one who has read those opinions it must appear that the questions of the case involved have controlled more than any well-defined philosophy of opinion.

In the first case, perhaps, that came up after it was adopted, it was held that if the State was named as a party the action could not be maintained, because you were suing a State; and in the very next case that came up the court held that you could not look beyond the record to see who the parties were. Then, in the next case that came along, it was held that you must look beyond the record to see who the real party at interest was so as to decide whether the State was a party or not.

The first cases that were determined were determined upon whether the official was doing what he was doing by his discretion or by his duty. A little further along we find the pecuniary interest of the State in the particular case becoming the criterion. In some of the cases absolutely parallel they have been held one way and in other instances in another way, showing that there has been an uncertainty all the way down as to just where this line of demarcation is and just when and just how you could sue State officers. The personnel of the court changes, and the opinions of the same persons have undergone modification, perhaps, in some instances.

Now, let me suggest another thing in passing: In every single one of these cases, so far as I can now recall—and I have gone through, I think, pretty much all of them in times past, although I have not done it very recently—in every single one of those cases which has gone to the Supreme Court every right could have been secured; every right that has been sought to be maintained in the Federal court by this particular process of suing State officers in a Federal court could have been maintained, and the rights of those individuals could have been maintained by other methods than by going into this court. In the recent case from Minnesota that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] has referred to there was not any apparent contention anywhere but what the railroads could have maintained their rights in the State courts there equally as well as in the Federal courts, and the result would have been reached and every constitutional question determined as well in the State courts as in the Federal courts, and if either party had been dissatisfied they could have still carried it to the Supreme Court of the United States. So I say that, in my opinion, Congress must, and will at some time, undertake to determine just where the line of demarcation is.

I am not going to take any more time this morning. I have said more than I really intended to say, for I think I have sufficiently measured the feeling of the Senate, in talking with its members individually, to appreciate the fact that the work of the committee, perhaps, is going to be indorsed and that my amendment will not prevail.

I was sorry that the committee, in its wisdom, did not bring out a bill along these lines. However, I will say to the Senator from North Carolina that, in my opinion, his bill is a very great improvement on what we now have, and I would rather see that sort of legislation go through than none at all.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. BURKETT. I will in just a moment. It occurs to me, however, that we had better say now that the court shall not issue injunctions against State officers until after they have had a hearing on the merits of the case.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to say to the Senator from Nebraska that on February 3 I introduced a bill, which is very similar to the proposition of the Senator from Nebraska. My bill provided that section 720 of the Revised Statutes should be amended so as to read as follows:

SEC. 720. The writ of injunction shall not be granted by any court of the United States to stay proceedings in any court of a State, except in cases where such injunction may be authorized by any law relating to proceedings in bankruptcy. And no district or circuit court shall have jurisdiction to enjoin or restrain any State officer from the execution of the law of a State.

If it had gone a step further, it would have been exactly like the Senator's bill. I would be in favor personally of his bill, but it would be impossible to get such legislation as that at this time. Therefore the Senator from Minnesota has drawn a substitute which as I think, will correct the evils sought to be corrected.

Mr. BURKETT. I will say to the Senator that it seems to me, as I read the legislation of our country and the decisions of our courts, that we have been perhaps more careful about protecting property rights in this country than we have been about protecting the rights of individuals and the liberty of the person. The Federal courts, for example, have practically shut off the writ of habeas corpus to the individual, and yet, so far as I can find, they have never denied in the case of a property right, whether of a corporation or otherwise, the writ of injunction. I will say also that the Congress has taken away from the individual, in the case of a writ of habeas corpus, the right to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. I am not going to take the time to discuss that further, but if we can afford, and it is proper legislation, to deny the writ of habeas corpus to individuals in the Federal courts, we can afford to withhold some of the rights of injunction when property is concerned in those courts.

I recall one case now where the defendant was seeking a writ of habeas corpus, and he set forth that he had even been denied a jury trial, and yet he was denied a review of his case on habeas corpus and denied the right of habeas corpus in the court at that time. The court held in that case that if he claimed that some right under the Constitution had been denied, his remedy was by writ of error. I do not know any civil cases that have gone quite that far, and I do not know of any legislation that has gone as far as the act of 1868 in denying the right of appeal in habeas corpus cases to the Supreme Court.

So, I say I am not going to discuss this amendment further. I am simply going to ask for a vote on it, and if the amendment is lost, I hope the bill the Senator from North Carolina has introduced as amended will prevail.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. President, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] unintentionally did an injustice to one of the Federal judges in my State in the northern district. He said that this legislation was intended to correct certain conduct of certain judges, naming one in Alabama and in Georgia, in granting injunctions to set aside State statutes in those States. I wish to say to the Senator, I know he did it unintentionally.

Mr. OVERMAN. I did not mention any name. I understood the same trouble had occurred in Georgia that had occurred in Alabama.

Mr. CLAY. No; the same trouble did not occur in Georgia. A bill was filed in the Federal court in my State to enjoin the enforcement of certain statutes. The bill was presented to one of the Federal judges, Judge W. T. Newman, one of the ablest and purest men I have ever known. He granted a writ nisi, calling upon the defendant, the State, to show cause why the injunction should not be granted. When the case came on to be heard a demurrer was filed, on the ground that the Federal court had no jurisdiction to enjoin the State. After a hearing lasting a week, in which the ablest counsel in this country were engaged, Judge Newman sustained the demurrer, ruling that the State could not be made a party in such a case. The case is now pending in his court, and there has never been any appeal from his decision. I simply state this in justice to Judge W. T. Newman.

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, it seems to me without precedent that we should take up for determination a question of this importance under the five-minute rule at this period of the session. It is safe to say that no more important question, or no question involving more important legal propositions, will be presented to the Senate at this or any other session.

In the first place, in my judgment, this proposed legislation, whether as written in the bill itself or in the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BURKETT], is in violation of the Constitution of the United States in its direct terms. I can not understand how the bill could have been reported in view of the application of section 1 of Article III of the Constitution to its present phraseology. That section provides that in all controversies in which a State shall be a party the Supreme Court of the United States shall have original jurisdiction; and this bill undertakes to deprive that court of jurisdiction, or to ignore its jurisdiction, and to place the jurisdiction elsewhere. They have even proposed that the district courts of the United States, which are merely the creatures of Congress, shall have a jurisdiction that by the Constitution is vested by express terms in the Supreme Court of the United States.

The question as to whether or not the statute of a State is in violation of the Constitution of the United States is always determined—well, I may say "always"—through the process of injunction. That is the method and the manner by which such questions are determined. It is not the kind of an infraction of the law that can be brought into court on the ordinary pleadings and presented as an issue between individuals. But the question of whether the legislature of a State has exceeded its powers has been determined, I may almost say always, by the court through the exercise of its power to enjoin the execution of the law of the State and it is a very proper method, and a convenient one.

If a State, in the name of its officers—because, as a rule, that is the way a State proceeds—is interested in maintaining the action of one of the coordinate branches of the State government, to wit, the legislature, then the State is in fact a party to the controversy and is within the rule of the provision of the Constitution to which I have just referred.

This bill undertakes to take away from the Supreme Court of the United States all participation in the determination of such questions, except as it is provided in the final paragraph, that appeals may be taken. Then this bill undertakes to give the parties a right to appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States on interlocutory motions. It departs from the ordinary rule that the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States attaches only to proceedings that are final in their character, and undertakes to give the right of appeal to the Supreme Court on motions and temporary restraining orders. It is such a radical change, such a radical invasion upon the existing rule of practice and procedure in the United States courts, that it should not be taken up for consideration in any hasty manner or under any limited rule for its discussion.

I was at first prompted to object to the consideration of the bill, but it is a question which has been discussed extensively and agitated in the public mind to such an extent that I thought perhaps we might as well take it up at least for preliminary consideration at this time.

Let me call attention to some of the provisions of the bill that I think must have escaped the attention of the committee reporting it. It provides:

That no temporary or interlocutory injunction, or temporary restraining order, or decree suspending or restraining the enforcement, operation, or execution of any statute of any State by restraining the action of any officer of such State in the enforcement or execution of such statute shall be issued or granted by any circuit or district court of the United States or by any judge or justice thereof upon the ground of unconstitutionality of the statute.

That is the only place where the Supreme Court of the United States is recognized—in the mention of the word "justice," because that designation applies to no other judge except a member of the Supreme Court of the United States. That provision undertakes to give coordinate jurisdiction to enforce the orders and decrees of the Supreme Court of the United States, it may be, to a district judge or a circuit judge. Now, let us see for what purposes. To determine, according to the language of the bill, the constitutionality of a statute of a State; in other words, the integrity of a law of a State. That is an action to which the State is a party, although it may be conducted in the name of an officer of the State merely as a matter of form and usage. It is not necessary that the action should be denominated "So-and-so, plaintiff, against The State of Pennsylvania," for instance. If it is an action for the purpose of determining the validity of the law of a State, it is an action to which the State is a party, because it is a law of the State and the State is the one that is interested in maintaining the integrity of the legislation enacted by one of the coordinate branches of the State government.

Are you going to cut out the Supreme Court of the United States entirely from consideration of the question as to whether or not the State has departed from its sovereign power and gone beyond it in enacting a law and enforcing it? Suppose it is a law for the collection of the revenues of the State; suppose it is a law which goes to the very integrity of the State and the State's existence. Are you going to say that that is not an action within the provision of the Constitution of the United States which designates actions to which a State is a party in interest, and say that the Supreme Court of the United States is not to have the jurisdiction that is given it by the Constitution? I do not believe you can do it.

I know, perhaps, what the answer will be—that this is not such an action as is contemplated by this provision in the Constitution, but I think, upon a mature consideration of the nature of the actions that are really under consideration in this proposed legislation, Senators will find that they are just such actions as are contemplated by this provision of the Constitution.

Let us pursue the language of this bill a little further; let us see what we are authorizing the courts to do, and what courts we are authorizing to perform these acts. I have read the bill down to the statement as to the determination of the constitutionality of a statute. Now, it says that this shall not be done—

Unless the application for the same shall be presented to a circuit judge—

Under the Constitution a circuit judge is no part of the machinery of the Supreme Court of the United States. A circuit court is a statutory court. The Supreme Court is not; it is a constitutional court. We create circuit courts and district courts by acts of Congress; and it is now proposed to change the status of those courts and even abandon the name of "circuit court."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Do I understand the Senator from Idaho to contend that because an action brought against an officer of a State involves the constitutionality of a law of the State that is an action against the State?

Mr. HEYBURN. Mr. President, I undertook to distinguish between the line of thought suggested by the question of the Senator from Utah and the line of thought suggested by the language of this bill. It depends upon the nature of the action. Some actions would be and some would not be. If the action were one affecting an individual interest, it would not be; if the action were one affecting the validity of a statute upon which the State bases its right of action as a State, it would be.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Suppose it were an action brought by a citizen against an officer of a State who is seeking to enforce a State law. The citizen or the individual brings an action against the officer, claiming that the law which the officer is seeking to enforce is an unconstitutional law. Does the Senator in that case say that it is in effect an action against the State?

Mr. HEYBURN. No; I have endeavored to say, and I say again, if it were an action that affected only an individual interest, then it would not be an action against the State. If it were an action that affected the right of the State to maintain a law enacted as a part of the government of the State on behalf of the State, then it would be.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Well, the action to which I referred would be——

Mr. HEYBURN. It is not necessary to consider that. If this bill is broad enough to include another class of legislation that would bring it within the prohibition of the Constitution, why should we pause to consider possible actions in which the question would not be involved? This proposed legislation is written in language broad enough to cover both classes. I repeat, in order that there may be no misunderstanding as to what I say, that where an action is one affecting individual rights it is not within the constitutional prohibition; but where it is an action undertaking to establish the policy of the law of a State, it is within it, because the whole State is a party, and the only party interested.

You must keep that distinction squarely in mind. If the bill is drawn in such broad terms as that it would be applicable to either; we may dismiss from our minds the one consideration and direct our minds to the one that is sufficient.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, as I understand this provision, it is:

That no temporary or interlocutory injunction, or temporary restraining order, or decree suspending or restraining the enforcement, operation, or execution of any statute of any State by restraining the action of any officer of such State in the enforcement or execution of such statute shall be issued.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes. Now, Mr. President, the process is the same. If it were a statute authorizing the levy of a tax to maintain the State government, the method of attacking it would be to restrain the assessing officer from performing the function that was vested in him by the act. I am speaking only of those cases in which the State's existence or integrity as a government is involved, and I say that the language of the bill is so broad that it will include or attempt to include that class of cases. It is a waste of my time to undertake to discuss questions as to controversies involving individual rights. I am not discussing it at all from that standpoint, but where the State enacts a law for the collection of taxes for the maintenance of the State government, it is something that no particular individual is more interested in than another. It affects a right that is common to all the individuals of the State. I might name a number of other instances of the same character. They affect the governmental policy, the governmental existence of the State. It is because this bill is so broadly drawn as to include those that I have felt impelled to make the remarks that I am making, and I am not to be diverted from that position by the fact that there are innumerable conditions and cases and circumstances to which the objection I make would not apply.

Mr. President, this bill undertakes to limit the right, under any circumstances, in the class of actions enumerated in the proposed statute, to apply for relief to anyone except certain designated officers under certain enumerated conditions. The United States Supreme Court, by virtue of the power that created it, has the right to make any order, temporary or otherwise, necessary to protect its jurisdiction or to make it effective, and Congress can not take that power from the Supreme Court of the United States. That is inherent, and if the Supreme Court of the United States, acting under its rules, which it makes pursuant to the authority vested in it, says that a justice of that court may grant an injunction without notice where the rights of the State are affected within the provisions of the Constitution that I have already read, Congress can not take the power from it, because it is the exercise of a power necessary to preserve the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States, which it takes, not from Congress, but from the Constitution.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I call the attention of the Senator from Idaho to the fact that the proposed act is in negative terms. It provides that no temporary injunction, and so on, shall be issued unless certain requisites be provided. What language does the Senator find in the bill which enlarges in any way the power of the courts as they exist to-day? In other words, it does not attempt to enlarge the jurisdiction. It simply provides that before certain things are done certain prerequisites shall have been observed.

Mr. HEYBURN. I am not objecting to the bill so much on the ground that it enlarges the jurisdiction as on the ground that it undertakes to take away from the Supreme Court and the members of that court a jurisdiction which it now has by virtue of the constitutional grant and not by virtue of anything that Congress has authorized it to do.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. KNOX. I call the attention of the Senator from Idaho to the fact that there is no limitation on the Supreme Court of the United States. The limitation is on the judges of the circuit or district courts of the United States. Of course when a justice of the Supreme Court of the United States sits in a circuit court of the United States he does not sit as a justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, exercising its original powers, but he sits as a circuit judge, and this limitation is only upon the circuit court, and by no process of construction that I can grasp would it apply to the Supreme Court.

Mr. HEYBURN. I have no contention at all with the suggestions of the Senator from Pennsylvania. I certainly did not intend to be understood as suggesting that the Supreme Court justice retained that character when sitting on the circuit. He sits there as a member of the circuit court by designation, and not as a member of the Supreme Court.

By this bill it is undertaken to create a new jurisdiction over something of which an established court now has jurisdiction and to change the nature of the jurisdiction of that established court, which is the Supreme Court of the United States. Of course the district court and the circuit court are the intermediaries between a party aggrieved or deeming himself aggrieved and the court of last resort. They are a part of the machinery that lead up to the Supreme Court, but they are not any part of the Supreme Court of the United States. What I object to is undertaking in this bill to say that these officers enumerated in the bill shall have these powers, because they already belong to another court.

Another thing I object to—and my first and original notes were to that effect—is that the bill undertakes to confer the right of appeal to the Supreme Court "from any order or decree granting or denying, after notice and hearing, a temporary or interlocutory injunction or restraining order in such case."

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HEYBURN. I do.

Mr. KNOX. I wish to say to the Senator from Idaho that I really believe he is wrong in his construction of this bill. I think the bill does not in the slightest degree confer any power where it does not now exist. The purpose of the bill is to put a limitation upon the exercise of an existing power, not to create any new power in the court. The bill does not pretend to say that any State officer or in any form of proceeding to which a State may be a party or in which it may be interested it can be enjoined under the circumstances prescribed in this bill where it could not now be enjoined by a single judge.

I did not have the honor of being present in committee on Monday when the bill was finally ordered to be reported, but there had been some preliminary discussion about the bill in the committee, and its whole scope and purpose, as I understand, and I think the wording of the bill bears it out, is to say to the judges of the United States court that hereafter no individual judge sitting in one of the lower Federal courts, district or circuit, shall lay his hand, where he now has the jurisdiction to lay it single-handed and alone, upon an officer of a State to restrain the operation of a law of the State, unless his judgment is corroborated by two of a court composed of three, in the manner prescribed by the bill. I think that was the purpose of the original bill and is the purpose of the substitute which the Senator from Minnesota has reported.

Mr. HEYBURN. If that is the purpose—and I have no doubt it is correctly stated by the Senator from Pennsylvania—there was no necessity of saying anything more in this bill than what he has said at his desk. The difficulty with this bill is in the elaboration——

Mr. KNOX. I think it says that.

Mr. HEYBURN. It says that, but in its elaboration it creates an uncertainty and an attempt to enlarge a jurisdiction in one way and to restrict it in another, which makes the bill, in my judgment, need some consideration at this time, if it is only the consideration of discussion. It is not well to pass a bill like this without having some explanation of it and some discussion.

It provides as follows:

> Whenever such application as aforesaid is presented to a circuit judge he shall immediately call to his assistance, to hear and determine the application, one circuit judge and one district judge or another circuit judge.

There is no circuit judge in the States of Montana, Idaho, Utah, Colorado, and Nevada. There is one in Oregon. There are two in California; none in North Dakota. That is a question of convenience, and it must be considered also in legislating upon a question of this kind, whether the law is of convenient, practical application or not. Now, our legislatures in those several States that constitute that circuit meet at the same time, and they are enacting laws, and many of them become operative immediately upon the signature of the governor, and the question of determining their application is sometimes one of quick necessity. It is sometimes one that requires an immediate application to a court to prevent the enforcement of a statute that may work great injury and where the aggrieved party may be practically without a remedy in the way of compensation.

This bill was evidently drawn by those who are accustomed to live in States where things are close together; where you can telephone a few blocks and get a circuit or district judge. In our State the district judge lives at the extreme end and corner of the State. It is 513 miles from the city in which I live to where the district judge lives. It is more than a thousand miles to where the circuit judge lives. It would not be possible, much less convenient, to get such a hearing as is provided for by this bill. I believe questions involving the constitutionality of the enactments of a State legislature should not be dealt with "off the bat," if I may use the term. They should be dealt with after due deliberation, and I believe more than one judge should pass upon them; but I believe that for the purpose of that quick and prompt action necessary to preserve rights which may be jeopardized by delay there should be some other provision than that contained in this bill.

I presume in North Carolina, probably overnight, you could bring together three judges of the class named in the bill. You could not do it in our part of the United States in so many days very often for even the preliminary steps; and this proposed law being of general application, it is proper that those of us who are surrounded by exceptional conditions should take notice of these things. It is at least wise that the attention of Congress be called to these objections in passing upon the measure.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. How many Federal judicial districts are there in Idaho?

Mr. HEYBURN. One. That is called Idaho. There are one in Montana, one in Utah, one in Nevada——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Where does the circuit judge live?

Mr. HEYBURN. The nearest circuit judge lives in Portland, Oreg.

Mr. McCUMBER. There is one in St. Paul.

Mr. HEYBURN. And the next one in St. Paul, and the next one in California. You must not lose sight of those conditions in enacting a law of general application; at least, we must not lose sight of them.

The provision at the top of page 3——

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. KNOX. I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the length of time that would be necessary to assemble the court would be running while the five days' notice was running. Such a case, under the provisions of this bill, could not be heard and determined until five days' notice of the hearing had been given to the governor and attorney-general of the State. As soon as the proceedings had been begun and notice had been served upon the circuit judge he would have to assemble his court, and he would have at least the full statutory period provided there, before which it would not be possible to hear or determine the case.

Another thing I wish to call attention to is that this does not necessarily limit the court that is to sit and hear it to the judges of the particular circuit in which the suit is begun. He can draw from the whole country to get a judge to sit with him.

Mr. HEYBURN. The whole country is farther from us than our neighbors.

Mr. KNOX. But sometimes a neighboring judge may be employed in such a way that he could not come. Then the next most convenient one could come.

Mr. HEYBURN. A little information may be useful here. I have known this condition of affairs to exist: The only United States judge in Montana was sitting in California on the circuit court of appeals. Our judge in Idaho was sitting in California to relieve Judge Morrow, sitting in the circuit court. Judge Hanford, of the State of Washington, was also sitting in California, and the circuit judge who lives in Oregon was sitting in the circuit court of appeals in California. That all happened at one time, and I had personal occasion to know it, because I was there transacting business with those courts. Then there was no judge within a thousand miles. The nearest United States judge to Spokane was in Dakota, to the east; Salt Lake the nearest to the south; or Nevada. It happened at that time that the judge of Nevada was sitting also in court in San Francisco. I have taken one time as an illustration. There was no judge in the State of Washington, the State of Idaho, the State of Montana, or the State of Oregon.

There was the condition. These other judges were engaged in hearing causes in California, and they could not have responded. An application might have been made to them, because they were in the circuit, by going to California. The papers could have been prepared and submitted to them in California, and they could have issued an order, but they were engaged in the performance of their judicial duties, holding court, some of them in the middle of long trials. While nominally they were available, as a practical effect they were not available at all.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Under the proviso, before a restraining order can be issued to arrest irreparable injury or damage to property, at least two judges must join in making the order. If at the time the notice is given it seems that irreparable injury will be suffered if the order is not granted, a temporary restraining order may be issued, but it requires a majority of three judges to do it.

Mr. HEYBURN. In the first place, you must get to the judge, and if this condition of affairs arises in our country—and such conditions arise pretty sharply sometimes in those mining camps—they arise overnight; we have had to have the Army of the United States in there twice——

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President——

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. HEYBURN. Certainly.

Mr. KNOX. May I interrupt the Senator for a moment? I fully sympathize with the precaution displayed by the Senator from Idaho in trying to throw all possible protection around the proper exercise of Federal jurisdiction, but I think he misses sight of the essential and only point here. This is not intended to provide a new method of procedure or any method of procedure in connection with any condition that may arise in the mines of Idaho, arising out of disturbance or disorder. The sole and simple purpose of this bill is to prevent a single inferior Federal judge from pronouncing a law of a State unconstitutional. It is not to be presumed that any State of this Union is going to pass any law so preposterous in its terms or so damaging in its effect that the short period of time that is prescribed here to assemble the court to hear and determine the constitutionality of the law can not pass without any serious injury to the public. In my experience I know of no case where a greater period of time has not expired under existing conditions before a single Federal judge has enjoined the operation of State law than would possibly elapse under the terms and provisions of this bill.

I hope the Senator from Idaho will speak to this bill with that notion in his mind—that that is the sole and only purpose of the measure.

Mr. HEYBURN. I realize the force of the suggestion and argument of the Senator from Pennsylvania. I am speaking from an entirely different standpoint from any to which he is accustomed. I have known a legislature that I have in my mind to pass an act that undertook to say who should be hired and who should not be hired under certain conditions; and I remember when it was necessary to take very quick action in regard to it. I do not care to embarrass this question by going into details about it, but I think other Senators have known like conditions to exist. I do not want this legislation to add to the inconvenience that exists under present law. The Federal judges in our country have always stood by the law and for the law, and they have saved us many times from the rule and reign of lawlessness. Our Federal judges have stood between us and riots and the destruction of property. They could not entirely prevent it, but they stayed the hand at the earliest possible moment; and I recall an instance where, by an order from a Federal judge, a mob of rioters numbering thousands was stayed in an hour or two, just as quick as the marshal could get there. I have no doubt that condition has existed in the Senator's State and in other States.

Mr. KNOX. The Senator from Idaho does not wish us to understand that Federal judges have stayed the destruction of property which was impending under the authority of any State statute, I hope; and if that is not the case, then the criticism does not apply.

Mr. HEYBURN. These people had secured control of the legislature for one term, and they had enacted some laws that gave them all of the privileges they had been crying for, and they claimed the right to exercise those privileges, and I think a little investigation of the statutes and the conditions will make very plain what I refer to.

I do not want to bring into this discussion any element of partisanship or of that sharp controversy which exists in this country between labor and capital, as it is called, because I did not rise for that purpose and I do not intend to discuss it. I only want the convenience of our courts to be maintained. I want to be able to go to a United States judge and get a restraining order to restrain those who may undertake to defy the law. I do not want to have to get three judges together where one can accomplish the purpose, simply because it is easy enough to get three judges together in the city of Philadelphia or the city of Washington, or any of these large centers. It is not possible very often to get three judges together in the more thinly settled parts of this country in which we live. But we can always find some one judge.

I remember once having to go clear to San Francisco to find a Federal judge who had jurisdiction to issue certain writs of injunction, and he was the only judge, when I got there, who was in the city who could do it. We are sometimes at a great disadvantage in our country. I have often thought how pleasant it would be to practice law in a city where you get on a street car and go to any court of the State. Instead of that we sometimes have to travel 500 or 1,000 miles.

I want to have this matter thoroughly aired and considered here, so that when we enact this statute we will come as near the right line as it can be drawn.

In respect to what I have said in regard to the attempt that the bill contains, not to confer a jurisdiction, but to limit a jurisdiction that now exists, I think my point is well taken from the standpoint from which I state it, not from the standpoint suggested by the Senator from Utah, not from the standpoint suggested by the Senator from Pennsylvania, but from the standpoint which is peculiar and yet which is applicable to the conditions I have represented.

Mr. President, I think when the question of the validity of a statute affecting the right of a State to collect revenue, to perform those acts which are functions of a State as a State is to be tested, the place to test it and the only place is in the Supreme Court of the United States, which has original jurisdiction for that purpose conferred upon it in express language by the Constitution, and if it has original jurisdiction that is the place to exercise it.

Now, then, to say that the steps that are necessary to be taken to maintain the integrity of that jurisdiction shall be conferred upon three judges only, after notice and hearing, of course, while it is not suggested that that would be conclusive of the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of the United States, yet nevertheless it has that appearance on its face, and it looks to me as though the fact is lost sight of that the Supreme Court has jurisdiction.

Mr. President, it was not my intention to do anything more than to call attention to these facts. I do not think the bill ought to be considered under Rule VIII, and I have transgressed the five-minute rule of the Senate many times in discussing this question. My purpose was to ask that the bill go over under Rule IX.

Mr. BACON. I understand the bill is not up under Rule VIII.

Mr. HEYBURN. Yes; it is up under Rule VIII.

Mr. BACON. I understand it was taken up by unanimous consent.

Mr. HEYBURN. Under Rule VIII.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Georgia is correct. It was taken up by unanimous consent.

Mr. BACON. It was taken up by unanimous consent.

Mr. President, I am very anxious for the passage of this bill, and I am not going to occupy the time of the Senate more than for a very few minutes, because at 2 o'clock, as I understand, it will be displaced. Consequently I shall be very brief.

Mr. President, I very greatly favor this legislation, which will as far as possible protect the States against the irresponsible granting of injunctions by Federal judges restraining the operation of State statutes. I desire to state that I introduced a bill on this subject upon which this substitute of the committee has been modeled. In fact, it is practically the same bill, contains the same provisions, and in a large part the same words. The only addition to the bill, as introduced by me, is that with reference to the contingency of irremediable loss in case speedier action was not had than that under the five-day provision of the bill. The unnecessary change in phraseology does not in any degree change the identity of the bill. The importance of securing the desired legislation is too great to haggle over matters of detail. Nevertheless, Senate bill 5109, which was introduced by me, and upon which the substitute was modeled, is superior in form to the one that is before the Senate. It is a simpler bill and it avoids some of the things which the Senator from Idaho [Mr. HEYBURN] has been discussing.

The ordinary course, the one usually pursued, naturally would have been for the committee simply to have put on the amendment with reference to the irreparable-injury contingency, if such amendment was deemed proper, and to have passed the bill in its original shape. It is not customary to present a substitute for a bill simply to incorporate thereon one short amendment. But I am so anxious that we should have legislation on this line that I will not make any issue on the subject, but let it go with this statement. I simply ask that, without reading, the bill as originally framed and introduced by me may be put in the RECORD, although, if any Senator desires, it can be read. It is short.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the original bill will be inserted in the RECORD.

The bill introduced by Mr. BACON February 6, 1908, is as follows:

A bill (S. 5109) relating to the issuance or granting of injunctions, interlocutory orders, or decrees by circuit and district courts of the United States or by any circuit or district judge thereof, suspending or restraining the enforcement, operation, or execution of any statute of any State or the action of any officer of such State in the enforcement or execution of such statute in certain cases.

Be it enacted, etc., That no injunction, interlocutory order, or decree suspending or restraining the enforcement, operation, or execution of any statute of any State or the action of any officer of such State in the enforcement or execution of such statute shall be issued or granted by any circuit or district court of the United States or by any judge or justice thereof upon the ground of unconstitutionality or upon any ground whatsoever unless the application for the same shall be actually heard, and upon issue made and preliminary proof taken, by affidavit or otherwise, the judgment thereon rendered by at least three judges; and each of at least two of said three judges shall be either a judge of the circuit court of the United States or a circuit justice of the Supreme Court of the United States.

No such injunction, interlocutory order, or decree shall be issued or granted except on hearing after not less than five days' notice to the governor of such State and to such other officer or officers as shall be proper parties to said application. An appeal may be taken from any such injunction, interlocutory order, or decree issued or granted upon such application, which appeal shall lie directly to the Supreme Court of the United States, and shall take precedence in the appellate court over all other causes, except causes of like character and criminal causes.

Mr. BACON. The purpose of the bill is to throw additional safeguards around the exercise of the enormous powers claimed for the subordinate Federal courts. If these courts are to exercise the power of stopping the operation of the laws of a State and of punishing the officers of a State, then at least let it be done on notice and not hastily, and let there be the judgment of three judges to decide such questions, and not permit such dangerous power to one man.

The necessity for this legislation is a very grave one. It is a most serious trouble which now exists—that by the action of one judge the machinery of State laws can be arrested. My individual opinion is that that is an unlawful proceeding. I believe that a proceeding against the officers of a State to arrest the operation of the statute of a State is in violation of the eleventh article of the Constitution.

I will not stop to discuss that, Mr. President, for the reason stated—time does not permit. It has recently been before the Supreme Court of the United States in what is known as the "Minnesota case." I most deeply regret the decision of the court in that case. I can do no more now than cite the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Harlan in that case. I would not suggest the language myself in this place, but I may say without impropriety that Mr. Justice Harlan has said in that dissenting opinion that the decision trampled upon the rights of the State of Minnesota, and I may add that if it trampled upon the rights of the State of Minnesota, it necessarily trampled upon the rights of every other State.

I am going to ask that there may be inserted in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Harlan in that case. I regard it as a most important matter, and one that the solution of this particular piece of legislation only begins to touch. The time is ahead of us, and not far ahead of us, when we have got to deal with the question whether or not, as stated by Mr. Justice Harlan, under such a rule as that laid down in this case, the subordinate Federal courts are to supervise and control the official action of the States as if they were dependencies or provinces. If these subordinate courts can exercise such power, then, indeed, the States are but provinces and dependencies. We have got to deal with that question in the near future, and it is one of the most important which can possibly be submitted to us for solution. But, as I said, time does not permit me now to discuss it. I want to say, however, that this legislation is not without precedent.

There was an act approved February 11, 1903, in which, where very much less important interests were involved, Congress provided that certain cases should only be heard when three circuit judges presided. I will give the title of that act, because I do not wish to consume the time in reading the entire act, although it is short. It is "An act to expedite the hearing and determination of suits in equity pending or hereafter brought under the act of July 2, 1890, entitled 'An act to protect trade and commerce against unlawful restraints and monopolies,' 'An act to regulate commerce,' approved February 4, 1887, or any other acts having a like purpose that may be hereafter enacted." After going on and speaking of a certain situation, it says:

Thereupon such case shall be given precedence over others and in every way expedited, and be assigned for hearing at the earliest practicable day, before not less than three of the circuit judges of said circuit, if there be three or more; and if there be not more than two circuit judges, then before them and such district judge as they may select.

So this has a precedent. That act was passed while the present junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] was the Attorney-General, and I have been informed that it was drawn by him. Following that precedent, I framed and offered an amendment to the rate bill in the Fifty-ninth Congress requiring two judges to preside and concur in the judgment before any order of the Interstate Commerce Commission in regard to railroad rates should be enjoined or restrained.

I want to say, Mr. President, that this question of the powers of the Federal courts in their relation to the State and to control of legislation is one which has existed from the foundation of the Government. I saw the other day in Watson's Jeffersonian Magazine, which is published in Georgia, a reference to a debate in the Senate in 1802, which I have since had occasion to examine, a most extended and elaborate debate, in which even in that early day the fathers were engaged and greatly concerned upon the question as to the power of the Federal courts in arresting the proceedings under legislation, Federal and State. If time permitted, I would like to read from that historic debate.

Mr. President, it is a great question; and while it has lasted so long, it is one which is now pressing for solution with very much more acuteness and gravity than it ever has done in the past.

I hope this bill will pass. It comes with the unanimous report of the Judiciary Committee. I will vote for the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska because I believe, as I have said, that they have no power to issue the injunctions at all restraining a State officer from executing a State law, that it is a violation of the eleventh amendment to the Constitution, which prohibits a suit against a State. As is most clearly shown by Mr. Justice Harlan in his dissenting opinion in the Minnesota case, it is a play with words to talk about enjoining the officer of a State in the execution of the laws of a State and say that that is not a suit against a State.

Can it be contended that the eleventh amendment simply has reference to the protection of a State so that it may not be sued for money, but that it may be sued to arrest it in the exercise of the powers which were reserved to it when they made the General Government? It is utterly inconceivable that it was contemplated in the formation of the Federal Government that a Federal judge could under the Constitution which was being formed, arrest the laws of a State, and put the officer of the State engaged in the enforcement of the laws of the State in the custody of the marshal of the court and fine and imprison him for not obeying its sovereign order! How many States would have ratified the Constitution with such a provision plainly written in it? It is safe to say not one.

There is an orderly way by which the constitutionality of a State statute can be tested, and that is as provided in the Federal statute, by taking the case to the highest court of a State and thence, if necessary, to the Supreme Court of the United States. That is the road all litigants should be required to travel.

Mr. President, I should like to say more, but I desire that we may have a vote on this measure before the time expires.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Without objection, the request of the Senator from Georgia to have the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Harlan in the Minnesota case inserted in the RECORD in connection with his remarks without reading is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Supreme Court of the United States. No. 10, original.—October term, 1907. Ex parte: In the matter of Edward T. Young, petitioner. Petitions for writs of habeas corpus and certiorari and motion for leave to file same. [March 23, 1908.]

Mr. Justice Harlan, dissenting.
